1° 7' 30" to 1° 55' 40" west longitude. It is bounded on the north-east by Leicestershire, on the east by Northamptonshire, on the south-east by Oxfordshire, on the south-west by Gloucestershire, on the west by Worcestershire, and on the north-west by Staffordshire. A small insulated portion of it lies in the county of Worcester, another in that of Gloucester, and it includes within its limits a portion of the county of Worcester, a few miles south from Stratford-on-Avon. At the period of the Roman invasion the northern part of this county was in the territory of Cornavil, and the southern in that of Wigantes or Wiccil, though Grose describes it as belonging to the principality of the Catcuchani; others assign the northern portion to the Casil, and the southern to the Doburnl: it was taken possession of about the year 50 by Ostorius Scapula the second Roman governor of Britain, who established a line of military stations along the banks of the Avon. It was subsequently included in the province of Flavia Caesariensis, which extended from the Thames to the Humber. On the establishment of the Saxon ocrarchy this county was included in the kingdom of Mercia, or of the middle Angles. In 757 a sanguinary conflict took place near Leckington, near the northern extremity of the county, between the people of Mercia under Ethelwald, and the west Saxons under Cuthred. The former monarch was slain in the conflict by one of his treacherous commanders. During the incursions of the Danes the county suffered severely. In 1147, a conflict took place between the earl of Chester and Stephen; the latter having seized the castle of the former at Coventry. In 1263, the castle of Warwick was seized and dismantled by the revolted barons, who took possession of and fortified the castle of Kenilworth, but were dislodged in 1266 by the king at the head of a powerful body of men. In the civil wars in the reign of Charles I., the inhabitants of this county almost unanimously sided with the parliament, and in 1642 the militia were arrayed by Lord Brooke, appointed by the parliament to be general and commander-in-chief of the associated counties of Warwick and Stafford. Throughout the whole war the castle of Warwick was defended against many attempts to take it by the royalists. On the 28th of August, 1642, Princes Rupert and Maurice made an unsuccessful attempt to take Caldecote-hall, and on the 23d of October the battle of Edgehill was fought at Kington, when the men of Warwickshire formed the right wing of the army of the parliament. In 1643, Prince Rupert took the town of Birmingham, and inflicted a heavy fine upon the inhabitants. In the same year the town of Stratford-on-Avon was alternately in the hands of the parliamentary and royalist parties. The city of Coventry having been distinguished for its opposition to the king, its walls were demolished in 1662 by order of Charles II.

Ecclesiastical Divisions.—This county includes the deaneries of Arden, Coventry, Marton, and Stonely, in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, and the deaneries of Kingston and Warwick, in the archd. and dio. of Worcester. All of these are within the province of Canterbury. It is divided into 201 parishes, of which 71 are rectories, 90 vicarages, and the remainder perpetual curacies. It is within the midland circuit. The assizes and quarter sessions for the county are held at Warwick; those for the city in the county of the city of Coventry; and there are 61 acting magistrates. By the reform act, four members are returned to parliament for this county, two for the northern and two for the southern division. Those for the northern division are polled for at Coleshill, Nuneaton, Birmingham, Coventry, and Dunchurch; those for the southern at Warwick, Kineton, Henley, Stratford, and Southam.

Civil Divisions.—For purposes of civil government the county is divided into four hundreds, namely, Barlichway, Hemlingford, Kington, and Knightlow. The hundred of Barlichway contains the divisions of Alcester, Henley, Snitterfield, and Stratford; that of Hemlingford those of Atherstone, Birmingham, Solihull and Tamworth; that of Kington, those of Brails, Burton-Dasset, Kington, and Warwick; and that of Knightlow those of Kenilworth, Kirby, Rugby, and Southam. It contains likewise the county of the city of Coventry, which is divided into nine parishes, and comprises an extent of 18,161 acres. Warwickshire contains the city of Coventry, the boroughs and market towns of Warwick and Birmingham, and the market-towns of Alcester, Atherstone, Coleshill, Henley-in-Arden, Kington, Kenilworth, Leamington, Nuneaton, Rugby, Solihull, Southam, Stratford-on-Avon, and Sutton-Coldfield. In 1815, the sum raised for the maintenance of the poor was £209,169. In the year ending March 25th, 1827, it had fallen £169,537 4s., of which £144,561 12s. was expended in the relief of the poor. The amount of the assessed property was £1,236,726, and the average scale of mortality appears to have been annually as 1 to 52 of the population. The pop. in 1801, was 208,190; in 1811, 228,735, an increase of 10 per cent.; in 1821, 274,392, an increase of 20 per cent.; in 1831, 337,600, an increase of 23 per cent.; of the last number, 165,761 were males, and 171,227 females. In 1821, there were 55,082 houses, and 39,189 families were employed in trade and manufactures, and 16,779 in agriculture.

Physical Features.—The outline of the county is of an irregular oval form, lying north and south, and terminating at each extremity in a point; the boundary line is in general arbitrary; on the north it is partly formed by the Watling-street, and for a short distance on the south by the Avon and its tributary streams. A hilly ridge extends along the boundary line between this county and that of Oxford, from Shottswell to Barton-on-the-Heath, running in a direction from north-east to south-east. The boundaries of the hundreds are extremely irregular, but their general situations may be described thus:—The northern part of the ford, the eastern by Knightlow, the southern by Kington, and the western by Barlichway; the county of the city of Coventry lies a little to the north-east of the centre of the county, and is almost surrounded by the hundred of Knightlow. The surface of the county is generally uneven, the highest points being the hills of Corley and the woods near Packington, in the hundred of Hemlingford. The most picturesque portion of the county is in the vicinity of Warwick, on the banks of the Avon, but rich and extensive prospects are commanded by the limestone hills at Walton and Long-Compton, which form part of the ridge already described as running between this county and that of Oxford. The climate of Warwickshire is generally mild and salubrious. Rain is most frequent when the wind blows from the south-west. In the early part of the spring easterly winds prevail.

Rivers.—The principal rivers are the Avon and the Tame. The Avon rises on the confines of Leicestershire and Northamptonshire, and enters this county at a short distance from Clifton-upon-Dunsmore; from this point it runs with a tortuous course towards the west, passing near Rugby, Newbold-on-Avon, Wolston, and Ryton-on-Dunsmore, where it turns to the south-west, and passes the towns of Warwick and Stratford-on-Avon; a few miles from which it reaches the boundary of this county and that of Gloucester at Weston-on-Avon, from which it runs along the boundary line for nearly eight miles, and finally passes into Worcestershire, a short distance below Salford. The current of the river Avon is very gentle, and vessels of 40 tons burden can sail up to Stratford,—the river having been deepened, so as to permit of this, in 1637. Its tributary streams are the river Dove, which rises in Leicestershire, and falls into the Avon near Newbold-on-Avon. The Sow, which rises in the northern part of the county near Bedworth, and after receiving several small tributary streams, runs in a southern direction to join this river at Stoneleigh. The Leam, which rises at Wolfhamcote, on the borders of Northamptonshire, and runs in a direction nearly due west, passing Leamington-Hastings, Hunningham, and Leamington-Priors, and falls into the Avon near Warwick. Tributary to this stream is the small river Watergall, which rises near Fenny-Compton, and runs nearly due north, joining the Leam near Marton. The Stour, which rises in the hills to the eastward of Long-Compton, and runs in a north-westerly direction, receiving many small tributary streams, and passing Shipston-upon-Stour, Halford, and Atherstone-upon-Stour, and joins the Avon a few miles below Stratford-upon-Avon. The Aine, which rises near Baddeley-Clinton, and runs in a direction nearly south, and joins the Avon near the south-western angle of the county; into this last falls the small river Arrow a little above Alcester. The Tame rises in Staffordshire, and enters the county a few miles to the north of Birmingham, from which it runs nearly due east to Lea-Marston, passing Castle-

Bromwich and Water-Orton, after which, it runs nearly due north, and leaves the county at Tamworth; near this point it receives the small river Anker, which rises in the western border of the county at Wolvey, passes Nuneaton, Caldecote, and Atherstone, running nearly parallel to the Coventry canal. The river Blythe likewise falls into the Tame; it rises near Packwood, and runs with a devious course towards the north, receiving the waters of the river Cole, and joining the Tame near Lea-Marston.

Soil, &c.—The soil of the county is generally fertile and very various, comprising almost every description. A strong clay loam resting on limestone prevails in the south-eastern portion of the county, which may be separated by an imaginary line drawn from Willoughby to Atherstone-upon-Stour. A similar soil prevails in the north-eastern part of the county, more especially near the course of the river Anker. A strong clay loam, resting upon marl and limestone, prevails in the neighbourhood of Salford, Henley-in-Arden, and Alcester, and in an extensive district reaching from near Warwick to the vicinity of Tamworth. A tract of strong clay, resting upon limestone, extends from Warwick to the south-western confines of the county. A considerable district around Solihull, and the various parishes to the north and east of that town, consist of a strong marly clay, with a substratum of wet clay. A good red clayey loam is found extending from the south side of the river Avon, near Castle-Bromwich, extending to Coleshill on the east, and Birmingham on the west, and a light, dry, red, sandy soil, prevails in the vicinity of Aston and Hackley-Brook near Birmingham. Around Coventry the soil consists chiefly of a deep, rich, sandy loam, resting on marl and freestone, which also occurs in detached portions of considerable extent in various parts of the county. The tract lying between the town of Rugby and the village of Grandborough, extending eastward towards the boundary of the county, and westward to the road from Southam to Coventry, consists of a light sandy soil, occasionally mingled with sharp gravel, and well adapted for the culture of turnips. A poorer sort of the same description occupies the valleys of the Blythe and Tame, extending from the vicinity of the village of Meriden, northward to the confines of the county. A considerable tract of strong clay extends between Warwick and Alcester. The crops most commonly cultivated are wheat, barley, oats, pease, beans, turnips, potatoes, and vetches; rye is occasionally sown on the poor sandy soils, and turnips are extensively cultivated in all the lighter and drier soils, both of these are chiefly used as food for sheep. Flax is cultivated in some places, but to a small extent. Wheat is sown once in four or six years in the rich loams, and much of the barley is made into malt, which is chiefly consumed within the county. Winter and spring tares are extensively grown for the feeding of sheep and horses. In the vicinity of the larger towns potatoes are extensively planted by the farmer, and there are extensive kitchen-gardens for the cultivation of vegetables. The principal manures are lime and marl, which are found within the county, though much of the former is imported from Staffordshire and Leicestershire. The meadow and pasture lands are computed at 235,000 acres, and 60,000 acres are covered with artificial grass, chiefly red and white clover, and rye-grass. About 205,000 acres are used for the pasturage of sheep and cattle; and it is supposed that from 80,000 to 85,000 are mown every year for hay. A large portion of the artificial grass is cut green, and given to horses and other cattle. The tracts of permanent pasture abound chiefly on the borders of Leicestershire. There is much fine meadow land and old pastures on the banks of the rivers, especially on the Avon, the produce of hay varying from 1 to 2½ tons per acre. In the county of the city of Coventry are 3,000 acres of grass land, on which the freemen of the city have a common right of pasturage from the 13th of August to the 13th of February. About 5,000 acres are devoted to horticulture, for which the soil is generally well adapted. The extent of the unenclosed land is very inconsiderable; the only extensive commons are those of Sutton-Coldfield and Sutton-park, besides which, there are numerous small commons belonging to different parishes. Timber abounds chiefly in the middle, northern, and western parts of the county, which were formerly occupied by the extensive forest of Arden, in which there are remarkably fine oak trees. There are many extensive coppices consisting of oak, ash, hazel, alder, birch, and beech; and many fine timber trees exist in the hedge-rows of the old enclosures. Many thriving plantations of forest-trees are scattered over the county. The orchards are few and of inconsiderable extent. This is a noted grazing county. The Scotch and Herefordshire oxen, and the long-horned breeds, are chiefly preferred for grazing; for the dairy, the Yorkshire long-horned and Durham breeds are most esteemed; for breeding, the long-horned Lancashire are preferred. The breeds of sheep are chiefly the old Warwickshire and new Leicester, which, of late, have been much intermingled; the former are a large polled kind, which, when fat, frequently weigh from 40 to 48 lbs. per quarter; the average weight of the wool is about 9 lbs. The new Leicester sheep are preferred by the graziers. A few Wiltshire, Southdown, small Welsh and Merino sheep, are also kept. A mixed sort of inferior quality is bred upon the commons.

Minerals.—The mineral productions of Warwick are chiefly coal, limestone, freestone, and a kind of blue flagstone. The best coal is found at Bedworth, and extending between Coventry and Nuneaton; the seam varying in thickness from 3 to 4 feet. Much coal of inferior quality is raised at Griff-Hollow, Chilvers-Coton, Nuneaton-Common, Huntshall, and Oldbury; the worst quality is that raised at Oldbury. Lime is quarried to a great extent in various places, more especially at Bearley, Grafton-Court, Harbury, Bidford, Newbold-on-Avon, Princethorpe, Stratton, and Wilnecote. Freestone exists chiefly in the western vicinity of Warwick, Leamington, Coventry, and Kenilworth; and extensive quarries of blue flagstone are wrought near Bidford and Wilnecote. Marl abounds chiefly in the western part of the county, and ironstone was formerly raised at Oldbury.

Manufactures, &c.—The principal manufactures of the county are those of hardware, &c. in Birmingham and the vicinity. The city of Coventry is celebrated for the manufacture of watches, silks, and ribands. There are considerable flax-mills at Berkeswell, Balsall, and Tamworth. Fish-hooks and needles are extensively manufactured at Alcester, and horn combs at Kenilworth. The chief exports are the produce of the manufactures, corn, cattle, and sheep; great numbers of the latter being annually driven to London. The chief roads of the county are the following:—one which enters at the southern angle near Long Compton, and passing Shipston-on-Stour, divides into two great branches, one of which passes Warwick, Kenilworth, Coventry, and Nuneaton, and leaves the county near Hinckley; the other passes Stratford-on-Avon, Henley-in-Arden, and Birmingham, and enters Staffordshire a few miles beyond the last. From Kenilworth, the first-mentioned road gives off a branch, which runs nearly due north to Tamworth. The county is likewise crossed by two great lines of road, which, beginning at Daventry in Northamptonshire, diverge towards Warwick and Coventry, and unite again at Birmingham.

Canals.—Within this county is an extensive artificial navigation. The Birmingham and Fazeley canal, constructed in 1790, extends from Birmingham in a north-easterly direction towards Tamworth, within a few miles of which it joins the Coventry canal at Whittington-Brook; in this course it crosses the river Tame a little below Aston; at Birmingham it joins the Worcester and Birmingham canal near Farmer's-bridge. It is $16\frac{1}{2}$ miles in length, 30 feet in breadth, and $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet deep, admitting boats of 22 tons burden. The total ascent and descent along the canal is 248 feet, averaging 15 per mile, effected by means of 44 locks.—The Coventry canal, constructed by a joint stock company in 1790, and which forms an important line in the communication between London, Manchester, Birmingham, and Liverpool, commences at Coventry, and runs in a northerly direction towards Nuneaton, from whence it runs parallel to the course of the river Anker, and leaves the county near Tamworth, not far from its junction with the Birmingham and Fazeley canal; close to the borders of the county it crosses the river Tame. It is 27 miles in length, the average ascent and descent by means of locks being 3.6 feet per mile, or 96 feet in all. The price of shares was £680 in 1833. This canal gives off a branch to the Giff collieries, and another having several minor branches to those near Bedworth, Leas-Wood, and Pool.—The Ashby-de-la-Zouch canal arises from the Coventry canal at Marston-bridge, near Nuneaton, and enters Leicestershire near Hinckley. Its whole length is $40\frac{1}{2}$ miles, the part within Warwickshire being only about 7, and without locks. It was constructed in 1805 by a joint stock company, the number of shares being 1482, and the original cost per share, £113, which had fallen in 1833 to £74.—The Oxford canal, forming part of the chain from London to the western counties, commences in the Coventry canal at Longford, about 4 miles from Coventry, and runs with an extremely tortuous course to Harborough-Magna, near the borders of Leicestershire, from whence it winds in a southerly direction, occasionally passing into Northamptonshire, and finally entering Oxfordshire a little to the southward of Wormleighton. The total length is $90\frac{1}{2}$ miles, breadth 30 feet, and depth 5 feet. It has three aqueducts of considerable magnitude, a tunnel at Newbold, 125 yards long and $12\frac{1}{2}$ feet wide, and one at Fenny-Compton, 1188 yards long and $9\frac{1}{2}$ feet wide. The ascent, by means of 12 locks, from the level of the Coventry canal, in $45\frac{1}{2}$ miles, to the summit at Marston-Tolls, is 74 feet, and it afterwards descends to the level of the Isis, 195 feet. There are 188 stone and brick bridges throughout the length. It was constructed in 1790 by a joint stock company, and cost £308,648, of which sum £178,548 was raised by means of 1786 shares of £100 each, and the remainder £130,000 by a loan, above one half of which has been since paid off. The prices of the shares had risen in 1833 to £560.—The Warwick and Birmingham canal commences at Birmingham, where it communicates with the Warwick and Fazeley canal, and runs in a south-easterly direction to Warwick, from whence it continues under the name of the Warwick and Napton canal, and finally joins the Oxford canal near Napton-on-the-Hill. Both these canals were constructed in 1799, and the former is 25 m. in length, with 32 locks, and a tunnel 300 yards in length; the latter is 15 m. in length, and has 980 shares, the original cost per share being £100, which had risen in 1833 to £216.—A branch from the Worcestershire and Staffordshire canal, near Wolverhampton, enters the county a little to the west of Birmingham, and joins the Birmingham and Fazeley canal.—The Birmingham and Worcestershire canal, the course of which lies chiefly in the county of Worcester, crosses that detached portion of the county of Warwick which lies about 10 m. to the west of Henley-in-Arden, and again entering the county near Edgbaston, proceeds to join the Birmingham and Fazeley canal at Farmer's-bridge.—The Stratford-upon-Avon canal commences at King's-Norton in Worcestershire, near which it enters the county of Warwick and runs in a south-easterly direction towards Lapworth, after which it turns to the southward, and joins the river Avon at Stratford-upon-Avon. At the point where it turns to the southward, it gives off a small branch communicating with the Warwick and Birmingham canal; it also communicates by a short branch with the village of Tamworth, and by a longer one with the Grafton lime-works.

Antiquities.—The following account of the antiquities of this county is given by Grose in his antiquities of England and Wales:—"The Roman, Saxon, Danish, or British encampments in this county, are at Oldbury, near Atherstone; at Alcester, Brinckley, and Monk's Kirby, near Warrington; near Castle-Bromwich; at Tardley, near Birmingham; at Tamworth, near Solihull; near Beaudesert; at Carley, near Coventry; Nadbury, near King-ton; at Chesterton, near Warwick; and at Spennall, near Alcester. Two of the Roman military ways lead through this county,—one the Watling-street, the other the Fosse-way. From Warwick there are many branches, and so many radii to different stations in the county. There are five stations in this county, viz. Ratae, now Brinklow; Benones, now Warwick; Mandussedum, now Alcester; Pennocrucium, now Oldbury; and Tripenitum, now Edgehill. The Fosse-way passes near Monk's Kirby to Brinklow, thence by Chesterton to Compton-Murdock, and between Kineton and Stratford-upon-Avon to Gloucestershire. Throughout this course the road runs nearly in a direct line, in a direction S.S.W. from Copston-Magna to Stretton-on-the-Fosse. The Watling-street runs along the boundary line of the county, from the point of junction of the counties of Warwick, Northampton, and Leicester, in a direction N.N.W. as far as Atherstone, from whence it strikes across the county in the direction of Tamworth. A road went from Alcester towards Edgehill, which is generally called Akeman-street, which probably signified no more than via lapidea, or the Roman agger. Here is a large Roman fortress at the end of the hill. The antiquities in this county worthy of notice are—Alcecot priory, near Tamworth; Coventry churches and town-house, &c.; Comb-abbey; Castle-yard, near Colshill; Castle-hill, near Coventry; Kenilworth castle and priory; Maxtoke priory and castle; Nuneaton nunnery; Tamworth castle; Stratford-upon-Avon church; Warwick castle, priory, church, &c.; Guy's cliff; Sutton-Colfield manor-house; Red-horse hill; Ashton-hall and church, near Birmingham; Brown-over castle, near Rugby; Merevale abbey, near Atherston; Oldbury castle; Penley abbey, near Henley; Studley castle, near Henley; Priore-Allen, near Monk's Kirby; Priory castle, near Henley; Priory-Alleyn, near Coventry; Ravenshaw abbey, near Solihull. The number of religious houses, including colleges and hospitals, was about 57; of these there are still some remains in the abbey of Merevale, the priories of Coventry, Kenilworth, and Maxtoke, and the nunneries of Nuneaton, Pindley, and Polesworth." Of modern seats the following are the most elegant:—Warwick castle; Ragley-hall, near Alcester, the residence of the marquess of Hertford; Comb abbey, that of the earl of Craven; Packington-hall, that of the earl of Aylesford; and Stone-Leigh abbey, that of J. Chandos Leigh, Esq. There are various chalybeate springs and other mineral waters within the county. The most celebrated are those of Leamington-Priors, Birmingham, Ilmington, and Newnham-Regis. Of these Leamington is most resorted to, having within these few years become a very fashionable resort.

WARWICK-BRIDGE, a township in the parish of Wetheral, Eskdale ward, co. of Cumberland. Pop., in 1801, 217; in 1831, 1285. This great increase in the population is owing to the establishment of bleaching and cotton works, by Messrs Dixon and Sons, at which about 500 persons are employed. Here is a Sunday school supported by the proprietors of the mills, and also a Roman Catholic chapel. It is situated on the river Eden, which is here crossed by a stone-bridge of four arches, leading to the village of Warwick. A detachment of the royalist party were here routed in 1648 by General Lambert, in making an attempt to secure possession of the bridge. Distance from Carlisle, 6 m. E.

WASDALE, WASTDALE, or WASTEDALE, a manor in the parish of Shap, co. of Westmoreland. Distance from Orton, 4 m. N.W. Pop. returned with the parish. It includes Wasdale Head and Wasdale Foot.

WASDALE, or NETHER-WASTEDALE, a township and joint chapelry with Eskdale, in the parish of St Bees, Allerdale ward above Darwent, co. of Cumberland. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, rated at £5, returned at £38 19s., and in patronage of the inhabitants. Here is held on the first Monday in September, a fair for sheep. Within the parish is the celebrated lake called Wast-water, which is three miles in length, half a mile in breadth, and about 45 fathoms deep; lying in fact about 15 fathoms below the level of the sea. It is said that this lake has never frozen, which is partly accounted for by its extraordinary depth. Distance from Ravenglass, 7 m. N.N.E. The returns of population and assessed property are made with Eskdale.

WASDALE-HEAD, or UPPER WASTEDALE, a township and chapelry in the parish of St Bees, Allerdale ward above Darwent, co. of Cumberland. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, rated at £5, and in patronage of the perpetual curate of the parish. The accommodation in the chapel is deficient, and the inhabitants are obliged, through want of a burial-ground, to have recourse to Nether-Wasdale. It is delightfully situated at the head of the small, although beautiful lake, Wast-water, and is almost entirely surrounded with hills. Distance from Keswick, 11 m. S.W. by S. The pop. and assessed property are returned with the parish of St Bees.

WASHAWAY, a hamlet in the parish of Egloskille, hundred of Trigg, co. of Cornwall. Here are held on the last Monday in every month, the petty-sessions for the hundred. Distance from Bodmin, 3 m. N.W. The pop. and other returns are made along with the parish.

WASHBOURNE (GREAT), a parish in the upper division of the hundred of Tewkesbury, co. of Gloucester. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £3 15s., returned at £45, and, in 1829, in patronage of Henry Fowke, Esq. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Winchcombe, $\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 89; in 1831, 87. A. P., £1,215.

WASHBOURNE (LITTLE), a township and chapelry in the parish of Overbury, middle division of the hundred of Oswaldslow, co. of Worcester. Living, a curacy subordinate to the vicarage of Overbury, in the archd. and dio. of Worcester, not in charge, and patronage with Overbury vicarage. Distance from Tewkesbury, $\frac{1}{2}$ m. E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 59; in 1831, 51. A. P., £910.

WASHBROOK, or GREAT BELSTEAD, a parish in the hundred of Sampford, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged vicarage with the rectory of Copdock, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £8 6s. 8d., and patronage with Copdock rectory. The church is ded. to St Mary, and contains several handsome stalls, which have recently undergone repair. A window of stained glass has been presented to the church by Lord Walsingham, and is placed over the communion table. Distance from Ipswich, 4 m. W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 278; in 1831, 418. A. P., £2,309.

WASHFIELD, a parish in the jurisdiction and included in the hundred of West Budleigh, although locally within that of Tiverton, co. of Devon. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter, rated at £19 17s. 6d., and, in 1829, in patronage of J. Worth, Esq. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Tiverton, $\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 422; in 1831, 453. A. P., £3,331.

WASHFORD, a hamlet in the parish of Old Cleeve, co. of Somerset. Distance from Dunster, 4 m. S.S.E.

WASHFORD-PYNE, a parish in the hundred of Witheridge, co. of Devon. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter, rated at £6 0s. 2½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of William Comyns, Esq. The church is ded. to St Peter, and there formerly existed a chapel at Whenham, which has now, however, fallen into decay. Distance from Crediton, $\frac{3}{4}$ m. N. by W. Pop., in 1801, 109; in 1831, 174. A. P., £736.

WASHINGBOROUGH, a parish in the wapentake of Langhoe, parts of Kesteven, co. of Lincoln. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £26 13s. 4d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Sir W. A. Ingilby, Bart. The church is a handsome building, with a tower, and is ded. to St John the Evangelist. Here is a free grammar school, endowed with annual rents to the amount of £140, founded in 1619 by Thomas Garrett, who was a great benefactor to several charities near this. Also a school for young children, endowed in 1728 with £28, by Timothy Pike and several others. Sir Thomas Clack, in 1701, bequeathed property which now produces an annual sum of about £70, which is appropriated to the apprenticing of poor children. The parish is most advantageously placed on the southern bank of the river Witham, which is here navigable. Distance from Lincoln, $\frac{3}{4}$ m. E.S.E. Pop., with the township of Heighington, in 1801, 645; in 1831, 1124. A. P., £4,431. Without the township, in 1801, 324; in 1831, 572. A. P., £2,164.

WASHINGLEY, a parish in the hundred of Norman-Cross, co. of Huntingdon. Living, a rectory with that of Sutton, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, not in charge, and patronage with that of Sutton. There is no church. The small hamlet of Ogerston is within the parish, which contains about 1400 acres of inclosed land. Distance from Stilton, $\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 95; in 1831, 81. A. P., £1,409.

WASHINGTON, a parish in the eastern division of Chester ward, co.-palatine of Durham, comprising the townships of Barmston, Great and Little Usworth, and Washington. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Durham, rated at £18, and in patronage of the bishop of Durham. The church is a handsome old building, consisting of a nave and two aisles, the former being separated from the latter by six columns. One hundred additional sittings were recently added to the church, £40 of the expense being defrayed by the society for enlarging and building churches. Here are two charity schools, one founded in 1814 by Mrs Peareth, and the other by the Rev. J. Davison, late rector. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in raising coal, large quantities of which exist here, which circumstance has greatly contributed to the prosperity of the place; some of them are also employed in rope-works and iron-founderies. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Gateshead, 5 m. S.E. by S. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 1190; in 1831, 1123. A. P., £8,634. Pop. of the whole parish, in 1801, 2475; in 1831, 2673. A. P., £14,983.

WASHINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Steyning, rape of Bramber, co. of Sussex. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester, rated at £9 10s., returned at £150, and in patronage of the president and fellows of Magdalene college, Oxford. The church is an ancient building, in the early style of English architecture. Distance from Steyning, 4 m. W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 512; in 1831, 793. A. P., £1,847.

WASS, a township in the parish of Kilburn, N. R. of the co. of York. Distance from Helmesley, 6½ m. S.W.

WASSALL, a hamlet in the parish of Kidderminster, co. of Worcester. Distance from Bewdley, 1½ m. N.

WASSAND, a hamlet in the parish of Sigglesham, E. R. of the co. of York. Distance from Beverley, 11½ m. N.E. by E.

WASSEL, a hamlet in the parish of Hayley, co. of Worcester.

WASTLANDS, an extra-parochial liberty, situated locally in the parish of Swineshead, wapentake of Kirton, parts of Holland, co. of Lincoln. Distance from Boston, 6½ m. W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 11; in 1821, 43.

WASTON, a village, ancient, but now entirely depopulated, in the parish of Combe-St-Nicholas, co. of Somerset. Distance from Chard, 2½ m. N.N.W.

WATCHET, a market-town and sea-port in the parish of St Decuman, hundred of Williton and Fremanora, and co. of Somerset. In the time of the Anglo-Saxons this place was known by the name of Weced-Poort, and suffered severely from the ravages of the Danes, who, in 866, not only destroyed the houses, but massacred the inhabitants. It is situated in a delightful valley, on the shores of a creek off the Bristol channel, and contains 4 streets, with about 140 houses. The streets are for the most part paved. It formerly possessed a pretty considerable trade, there being a herring-fishery here; it has, however, rather retrograded in this particular, and now possesses few vessels, which are principally employed in the coast for transport of coal, limestone, gypsum, and kelp. Here is a pier now kept in repair by a small tonnage due, and which was built by the family of Wyndham. Between this place and Bristol are two regular packets every fortnight. Woollen cloth and paper are manufactured here to a small extent. Limestone and alabaster are found in the vicinity. Saturday is market-day, and a fair is held on the 17th of November. The lord of the manor holds an annual court. The Wesleyan Methodists and Baptists have places of worship here. Distance from London, 156 m. W. by S.; from Dunster, 5 m. E. The pop. and other returns are made with the parish.

WATCHFIELD, a chapelry and township in the parish and hundred of Shrivenham, co. of Berks. Living, a curacy under the vicarage of Shrivenham, in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, not in charge, and patronage with the vicarage. The chapel was dismantled about 1770. It was anciently called Wachenesfield. Distance from Great Faringdon, 4½ m. S.W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 305; in 1831, 341. A. P., £2,012.

WATCHFIELD, or WATCHWELL, a hamlet in the hundred of Bempstone, co. of Somerset. Distance from Axbridge, 6½ m. S.W.

WATCHINGWELL, a hamlet partly in the parish of Calbourne, and partly in that of Shaftesbury, in the co. of Southampton, in the isle of Wight.

WATERBEACH, a parish in the hundred of North Stow, co. of Cambridge. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Ely, rated at £5 15s. 7½d., and in patronage of the bishop of Ely. Church ded. to St John. Here are almshouses for six poor widows, founded and endowed by Mr John Taxley, alderman of Cambridge, with £12 annual income, and, in 1705, endowed by Mrs Brigham with £15 of rent charge. Here is a charity school founded and endowed by Dorothy Staines and Grace Clarke in 1687: 18 scholars are educated at it, and the master receives a salary of £40 per annum, with a house and garden. Here was formerly a cell to the monastery of Ely, on a small island within the parish called Elmeney, which was, about the year 1160, removed to Denney. This cell came afterwards into the possession of the knights templars. "The Lady Dyonia de Monte Canisio, or Mount Chensy, A. D. 1293, built here to the honour of the piety of the blessed Virgin Mary and St Clare, an abbey for nuns Minorites, who were by Mary, countess of Pembroke, about A. D. 1348, removed to a religious house of the same order, then lately founded by her at Denney."—Tanner's Not. Mon. At the great dissolution of religious houses in the reign of Henry VIII., the revenues of this abbey amounted to about £172, there being 25 nuns. The buildings belonging to the abbey are now occupied as a farm-house by the person who farms the demesnes, the refectory having been converted into a barn. Pop., in 1801, 553; in 1831, 1146. A. P., £5,623. Distance from Cambridge, 5 m. N. N.E.

WATERCOMBE, a hamlet in the hundred of Winprith, Blandford division of the co. of Dorset. "Watercombe, a farm 1 m. S. of Warmwell, claims to be extra-parochial. Part of it formerly paid tithes to the rector of East Stoke."—Hutchins' Dorset.

WATERDEN, a hamlet in the parish of Seale, co. of Kent. Distance from Seven-Oaks, 2½ m. E.N.E.

WATERDEN, a parish in the hundred of Brothercross, co. of Norfolk. WATER-END, a hamlet in the parish of Basing, co. of Southampton. Distance from Basingstoke, 4 m. E. by N.

WATERFALL, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of Totmonslow, co. of Stafford. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Stafford, and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £7, returned at £63, and, in 1829, in patronage of Mr and Mrs Wilmoth. Church ded. to St James. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Here is a school endowed with 4½ acres of land, yielding £6 10s. per annum, for which eight poor children receive instruction. At the hamlet of Winkshill are a flax-mill, an iron forge and foundry, and two paper-mills. Limestone is extensively wrought here, and lead-ore and grit-stone are also found in the vicinity. The parish is almost surrounded by the river Hamps, which here runs for about 3 miles under ground, entering at the Waterhouses, and emerging at Ham, near which it joins the river Manifold. Distance from Leek, 7 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 467; in 1831, 531. A. P., £2,547.

WATERFORD, a hamlet in the parish of Stapleford, hundred and co. of Hertford.

WATERGALL, an extra-parochial liberty in the hundred of Knightlow, co. of Warwick. Distance from Southam, 4 m. S. Pop., in 1831, 13. A. P., £1,011.

WATERGORE, a hamlet in the parish and hundred of South Fetherton, co. of Somerset.

WATERHEAD, a township in the parish of Lanercost-Abbey, ward of Eskdale, co. of Cumberland. Pop., in 1801, 234 with Banks; in 1831, 177. A. P., 1,557.

WATERINGBURY, a parish, formerly a market-town, in the hundred of Twysford, lathe of Aylesford, co. of Kent. It contains the hamlets of Lilly and Pissain-well. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Rochester, rated at £5, and in patronage of the dean and chapter of Rochester. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. The windows formerly contained much stained glass, with portraits of Edward III. and his queen Philippa. In the vicinity of the village are several gentlemen's seats. The market has long ago fallen into disuse. Distance from Maidstone, 5 m. W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 817; in 1831, 1109. A. P., £3,554.

WATER-MILLOCK, a chapelry in the parish of Greystock, ward of Lenth, co. of Cumberland. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle, certified at £7 1s. 10d., returned at £45, and subordinate to the rectory of Greystock. The chapel was erected in 1558 on a site more convenient than that occupied by the former one, and the place is hence sometimes called Newchurch. Here is a school endowed with £25 per annum, arising from £500 in the funds. The chapelry lies on the north side of the lake of All-water, in a remarkably picturesque and beautiful district. Here are several handsome private residences, with tastefully arranged pleasure grounds. In Gow-Barrow park is a deep glen through which runs a rapid stream, forming the beautiful cataract called Airy-Force. The water is here dashed from one rock to another, producing a beautiful effect. Pop., in 1801, 338; in 1831, 429. A. P., £2,825.

WATER-OAKLEY, a division of the parish of Bray, co. of Berks.

WATER-OVERTON, a chapelry in the parish of Aston, Birmingham division of the hundred of Hemlingford, co. of Warwick. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Coventry, and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, not in charge, returned at £75, subordinate to the vicarage of Aston, and, in 1829, in patronage of Earl Digby. The church is ded. to St Peter and St Paul, and has lately received an addition of 320 free sittings, towards defraying the expense of which £380 were granted by the incorporated society for the enlargement of churches and chapels. The river Medway, which is here navigable, runs along the southern border of the parish, and is crossed by a bridge. Distance from Colehill, 2½ m. N.W. The returns of population and assessed property are included in those of the parish.

WATERSIDE, a hamlet in the parish of Cheesham, hundred of Burnham, co. of Buckingham.

WATERSTOCK, a parish in the hundred of Tame, co. of Oxford. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, rated at £10 16s. 0d., returned at £70, and, in 1829, in patronage of W. H. Ashurst, Esq. Church ded. to St Leonard. Distance from Tame, 5½ m. W. Pop., in 1801, 114; in 1831, 142. A. P., £1,444.

WATERPERRY, a parish in the hundred of Bullington, co. of Oxford. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, rated at £8 1s. 5d., returned at £38, and, in 1829, in patronage of Joseph Henley, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 195; in 1831, 243. A. P., £5,034.

WATFORD, a market-town and parish in the hundred of Cashio, or liberty of St Albans, co. of Hertford. It includes the hamlets of Cashio, Levesden, and Oxhey. The name is derived from its situation on the Watling-street, close to a ford on the river Colne. It consists of a well-built and paved street nearly a mile in length, and contains several malt-kilns, two extensive breweries, and manufactories of straw-plait, and three silk throwing mills, which give employment to many of the inhabitants. Tuesday is market-day, and fairs are held on the Tuesday after Whit-Tuesday, August 29th and 30th, and September 9th. The market-house is an indifferent building, supported on wooden pillars, and containing granaries above. The Grand junction canal passes within a mile to the westward of the town, and opens a communication with the metropolis and the northern parts of the kingdom. The magistrates of the county hold petty sessions here every Tuesday, and a court of requests, for the recovery of debts under 40s., is held here every week, having jurisdiction over the liberty of St Alban's. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of St Alban's and dio. of London, rated at £21 12s. 1d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Essex. The church is ded. to St Mary, and is a spacious structure, consisting of a nave, aisles, and chancel, with two chapels annexed, and a massive embattled tower about 80 feet high at the west end. The Baptists, Huntingdonians, and Wesleyan Methodists, have places of worship here. Here is a free school, with a residence for the master and mistress, in which about 60 boys and 30 girls receive education. It was founded in 1704 by Elizabeth Fuller, and endowed with a rent charge of £52, which has since been augmented by various benefactions, amounting to £3,000. Here is also a parochial free school for twelve boys, founded and endowed in 1641 by Francis Coombes. The Sunday schools have a small endowment. Here is a national school, chiefly supported by the contributions of the earl of Essex. Here are almshouses for four poor widows, founded by Sir Christopher Morrison and Sir B. Hicks; and others for 8 poor widows, founded and endowed, in 1580, by the earl of Bedford. Dame Morrison bequeathed £50 per annum, and Sarah Eure gave the sum of £200 for apprenticing poor children. Distance from London, 15 m. N. W., and from Hertford, 20 m. W. S. W. Pop., in 1801, 3550; in 1831, 5293. A. P., £18,732.

WATFORD, a parish in the hundred of Guisborough, co. of Northampton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £11 7s. 8½d., returned at £120, and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Peter and St Paul. Here are some strong chalybeate springs. Thirty children receive education on an endowment of £42 per annum, arising from £400 given in 1702 by Sarah Clarke. The parish is bounded on the west by the ancient Watling-street, and crossed by the Union canal. Distance from Daventry, 5 m. N. N. E. Pop., in 1801, 356; in 1831, 353. A. P., £5,984.

WATH, a parish containing the chapelry of Norton-Conyers, wapentake of Allertonshire, and the chapelries of Melmerby and Middleton-Quernhow, with the township of Wath, in the wapentake of Hallikeld, N. R. of the co. of York. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, rated at £17 17s. 1d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the marquess of Aylesbury. Church ded. to St Mary. Here is a school founded in 1690 by Peter Lamwasse, who endowed it with lands at Bellerby, value £70 per annum: £5 per annum are also paid to the master by Trinity college, Cambridge, out of an estate at Middleton-Quernhow: this college also pays a donation of £10 per annum. Here is also an almshouse built in 1698, and endowed by the above Peter Lamwasse, containing rooms for two poor persons who receive £2 14s. per annum, the interest of £60. The hall of Norton-Conyers is the seat of Sir Bellingham Reginald Graham, Bart. This place had been the property of the venerable Richard Norton, who, with three sons, engaged, in 1569, in the religious rebellion of the earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland, against Queen Elizabeth. This was soon suppressed. Mr Norton and his sons were executed among multitudes of others, and his estate granted to a Musgrave, who disposed of it to an ancestor of the present owner. Distance from Ripon, 4 m. N. Pop. of the parish, in 1831, 730; of the township of Wath in 1801, 168; in 1831, 196. A. P., £1,016.

WATH, a township in the parish of Hovingham, wapentake of Ryedale, N. R. of the co. of York. Pop., in 1801, 19; in 1831, 21. A. P., £261.

WATH-UPON-DEARNE, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, W. R. of the co. of York. It comprises the chapelries of Nether-Hayland, Swinton, and Wentworth, and the townships of Brompton, Burlow, and Wath-upon-Dearne. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York, rated at £18 10s. 2½d., and in patronage of the dean and canons of Christ church, Oxford. The church, ded. to All Saints, is a neat structure, consisting of a nave, chancel, and aisles, with a tower at the west end. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Here is a national school, founded in 1819 by the trustees of Mr Ellis' charity. Here is a school with an endowment of £4 13s. 4d. per annum, for which seven children receive education. Here are extensive potteries, furnaces, and collieries. The chapel of Swinton is celebrated among antiquaries and architects, as possessing one of those fine circular doors, which are almost peculiar to this county. The south entrance is of early Norman architecture, intermixed with Saxon. The arch of entrance is bounded by several toruses springing from an impost. The angles of the jambs are worked into slender columns. The head of the arch is divided from the rest of the opening by a transom stone, and probably was ornamented with sculpture. Above the first arch is a second moulding enriched with masks of animals, paterae, &c., which springs from an impost resting on a Norman column; another arch of chevron work, also sustained on columns, bounds the whole front-piece. Two farms lying in this township, which belong to Earl Fitzwilliam, every year change their parish, for one year from Easter day at 12 noon, till next Easter day at the same hour; they lie in the parish of Mexborough; and then till Easter day following at the same hour, they are in the parish of Wath-upon-Dearne, and so on alternately. Distance from Rotherham, 6 m. N. Pop. of the parish in 1831, 6927; of the township in 1801, 662; in 1831, 1149. A. P., £8,736.

WATLINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Clackclose, co. of Norfolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £14 16s. 8d., and, in 1829, in patronage of C. B. Plastow, Esq. The church, which is ded. to St Peter and St Paul, contains many ancient monuments, an antique font, with some fragments of stained glass.

WATLINGTON, a parish and market-town in the hundred of Piton, co. of Oxford. The name of this place is supposed to have been derived from a Saxon word signifying wattles or hurdles, and to refer to the manner in which the Saxons built their houses. The town is situated about half a mile from the Ikfield-street, and between the lines of the two roads from London to Oxford. The streets are narrow, and the houses, in a great degree, are ill-built and mean. It is well supplied with water from the neighbouring Chiltern-hills. A market has been held here since the reign of Richard I., on Tuesdays. Fairs are held on April 5th, and the Saturday before October 10th; also a statute fair for the hiring of servants on the Saturday before and after Michaelmas. The petty sessions for the hundred are held here every fortnight, and courts leet are held biennially. The market-house is a plain building, erected in 1666 by T. Stonor, Esq., containing a room where the public business is conducted. Some lace is made here by females,—a school having been established to teach them the art of making it. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, rated at £12, returned at £131 16s., and, in 1829, in patronage of John H. Tilson, Esq. The church, ded. to St Leonard, contains many interesting monuments, and the burial place of the Horne family. The Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists, have places of worship here. Here is a free grammar school, at which 19 boys are instructed in English, &c., the master receiving a salary of £20. The original endowment by Thomas Stonor, Esq., in 1664, was £10, which has been since increased by sundry benefactions, and it was formerly celebrated as a classical school. It is requisite that the master be graduated in one of the universities. Here was formerly a castle of the same name which stood not far to the south-east of the church, of which part of the moat and some other traces still remain. On Bretwell hill are some remains of ancient encampments. Pop., in 1801, 1276; in 1831, 1833. A. P., £4,069.

WATNOW, or WATNALL, a hamlet in the parish of Gresley, co. of Nottingham. Here is a free school. Distance from Nottingham, 6 m. N.W.

WATTESFIELD, a parish in the hundred of Blackburn, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, rated at £8 11s. 8d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. R. Morgan.

Church ded. to St Margaret. The Independent Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Botesdale, 2 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 520; in 1831, 590. A. P., £2,167.

WATTISHAM, a parish in the hundred of Cosford, co. of Suffolk. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, not in charge, and in patronage of the provost and fellows of King's college, Cambridge. Church ded. to St Nicholas. The Baptists have a place of worship here. Distance from Bildeston, 2 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 154; in 1831, 202. A. P., £1,381.

WATTLEFIELD, a division in the parish of Wymondham, hundred of Forehoe, co. of Norfolk. Distance from Wymondham, 2½ m. S. by W. Pop., in 1831, 451.

WATTON, a parish and market-town in the hundred of Wayland, co. of Norfolk. It is situated near the centre of the hundred, on the borders of that part of the county commonly called Fildan, or the open country. The town suffered severely from a fire in 1673, property to the amount of £10,000 being then destroyed. The town is well supplied with water, and the greater part lighted with oil. Wednesday is market-day; and fairs are held on July 10th, October 11th, November 3d, the first Wednesday in July, and the Wednesday after old Michaelmas-day; the last two were recently introduced, but the first three are very ancient. Large quantities of butter are produced in the vicinity, which is principally sent to London, and is there well known under the name of Cambridge butter. The petty-sessions for the hundred are held by the magistrates of the county once a-month, and the lord of the manor holds an annual court. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £7 0s. 4d., and, in 1829, in patronage of John Raby Hicks, Esq. The church is an ancient structure, ded. to St Mary, said to have been built in the reign of Henry I., but afterwards re-dedicated in the reign of Henry VI. There are a few brazen monuments within the church, and over the north porch is a valuable crucifix, which has most unfortunately received severe injury. It has a tower which is of a circular form at the bottom, but which farther up assumes an octangular form. In the town is a bell, which is hung in a building part of which is occasionally used as a lock-up house. The Independents have a place of worship within the parish, but at a short distance from the town. Here is a school on the national system of education, supported by annual subscriptions, the school-room of which was erected by William Law Robinson, Esq., in 1819; about 100 children receive education at this institution. Here are four almshouses for the same number of poor aged widows, founded and endowed with a small annual income by Mr Goff. The sheriff formerly held a court, commonly called the sheriff's torn, in a wood called Wayland wood, which is well known as the reputed scene of the tragical ballad of the Babes in the Wood. It gives its name to the hundred. Distance from London, 91 m. N.N.E.; from Norwich, 24 m. W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 693; in 1831, 1027. A. P., £5,132.

WATTON, a parish in the Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, E. R. of the co. of York. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of the E. R. and dio. of York, rated at £10 10s., returned at £40, and, in 1829, in patronage of R. Bethall, Esq. The church—which is ded. to St Mary—is a small edifice of brick, with stone dressings, consisting of a nave and chancel, with a low tower at the west end. The interior is plain, and contains several neat tablets to the memory of different members of the families of Bethall and Dickenson.—A society of nuns existed here in the seventh century, but of its early history little is known. It is generally supposed that this nunnery was destroyed by the Danes in 870, at the same time with the neighbouring monastery of Beverley, and the inmates entirely dispersed. In Doomsday-book we find the following notice of Watton:—"Lands of the earl of Morton,—in Wattune, Turchil and Milegrim, Orm and Gamel, had four manors of thirteen carucates to be taxed, and there may be seven ploughs. Nigel has there three villains, with two ploughs, a church and a priest. Meadow half a mile long, and the same broad. The whole two miles long and one broad. Value in King Edward's time, £6, now 6s. Lands of the king's thanes,—manor. In Waton, Torel had three carucates of land to be taxed, the same has it himself. Land to two ploughs." About the year 1148, the monastery was again founded by Eustace Fitz-John, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary. On the original foundation were supported 13 canons and 30 nuns, which numbers were afterwards increased by subsequent donations. They were of the Gilbertine order, which had been recently introduced into England. The lordship of Watton was given to this monastery by the noble founder, for the good of his own soul and others of his friends and relations, which charter was afterwards confirmed by others granted by his wife Agnes, the daughter of William Constable Cestrie, and others of the same family. The monks inhabited the same building, but their portion was separated from that of the nuns by a party wall. The nuns had increased to such a number, that, in 1326, we find 53 consecrated at once by the archbishop of York. Its character for sobriety and regularity does not appear to have been of the most admirable description. According to Speed, the revenues in the 26th of Henry VIII., was £453 7s. 8d., but Dugdale only estimates it at £360 16s. 10d. Robert Holgate, afterwards archbishop of York, was prior at the dissolution, which took place 9th December, 1540. The site was granted in the reign of Edward VI. to John, earl of Warwick; we afterwards find it, in the reign of Elizabeth, in the hands of John Farnham; in the reign of James I. it was granted to Sir Thomas Earikyn, Knight; and it finally passed into the hands of the Bethall family who now possess it. The remains of the abbey as it now is, is composed of brick and stone, and appears to have been rebuilt in the Tudor period. It consists of the abbey, a large and massive building, with towers and pointed arch windows, and an oriel window of imposing appearance; a nunnery, surrounded by a range of cloisters now gone to decay; the whole surrounded by a moat which formerly inclosed about 20 acres of land. The abbey, though much dilapidated, is still sufficiently perfect to arrest the attention of the antiquary. The interior of the abbey is spacious and roomy, and some of the apartments have fine tapestry in them. The nunnery is now converted into stables; it occupies about 11 acres. There is said to have been formerly a subterranean passage; and, as usual with old abbeys and castles, there is a legend and haunted chamber connected with the building. Distance from Great Driffield, 5½ m. S. Pop., in 1801, 197; in 1831, 345. A. P., £5,906.

WATTON-AT-STONE, a parish in the hundred of Broadwater, co. of Hertford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £19 8s. 9d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Samuel Smith, Esq. The church—which is ded. to St Mary and St Andrew—has a small chapel attached, with a square embattled tower on the west. Here is a free school, founded and endowed by Maurice and William Thompson in 1662 with a small sum, which was afterwards increased by a bequest in 1703 by Abraham Crossland. The parish lies on both sides of the small river Beane; and several Roman antiquities have been found, this having been formerly in a line of road made by that people. Distance from Hertford, 4½ m. N.N.W.

WAVENDON, a parish in the hundred of Newport, co. of Buckingham. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £26 6s. 10d., and, in 1829, in patronage of H. Hugh Hoare, Esq. Church ded. to St Mary. Here is a charity school at which 10 boys are taught, clothed, and afterwards apprenticed, endowed with £1000 by Mr George Wells in 1714, and his niece Mrs Miller, for the purpose of building a school-room; in addition to this it possesses lands to the annual value of £40. Distance from Fenny-Stratford, 3¼ m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 602; in 1831, 802. A. P., £3,621.

WAVERLEY, an extra-parochial liberty in the hundred of Farnham, co. of Surrey. "William Giffard, bishop of Winchester, founded here, A. D. 1128, not far from his episcopal seat at Farnham, the first house which the monks of the Cistercian order had in England. This abbey was dedicated to the blessed Virgin Mary; had in it, about the time of the dissolution, thirteen religious, and was endowed with £174 8s. 3d. ob. per ann. clare; £196 13s. 11d. ob. in toto. It was granted, with all the estates belonging thereto, to Sir William Fitz-William, 28th Hen. VIII."—Tanner's Not. Mon. There are still some remains of the building covered with ivy. Pop., in 1801, 40; in 1831, 74.

WAVERTON, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Broxton, co.-palatine of Chester, including the townships of Hatton, Huxley, and Waverton. Living, a rectory, annexed to the see of Chester, in the archd. and dio. of the same, rated at £23 6s. 8d., returned at £70, and patronage with the bishop of Chester. Church ded. to St Peter. The parish has the advantage of the Chester canal, which passes here. Distance from Chester, 4½ m. S.E. by E. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 246; in 1831, 324. A. P., £1,923.

WAVERTON, a township divided by the river Waver into High and Low Waverton, in the parish of Wigton, ward and co. of Cumberland. Distance from Wigton, 3 m. W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 375; in 1831, 487. A. P., £3,531.

WAVERTREE, a township and chapelry in the parish of Childwall, hundred of West Derby, and co.-palatine of Lancaster. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester, not in charge, returned at £100, and in patronage of the trustees of the chapel. It is a modern edifice with a tower, erected by subscription. There is a well in the neighbourhood at which popish ceremonies were formerly performed, and on which there is an ancient inscription dated 1414. Distance from Liverpool, 3 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 860; in 1831, 1932. A. P., £9,561.

WAXHAM, a parish in the hundred of Happing, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Palling, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £6 13s. 4d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Sir G. B. Brograve, Bart. Church ded. to St John and St Margaret. Distance from North Walsham, 2 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 63; in 1831, 59. A. P., £1,384.

WAXHOLME, a township in the parish of Owthorne, middle division of the wapentake of Holderness, E. R. of the co. of York. Distance from Hull, 16 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 61; in 1831, 68. A. P., £598.

WAY, a hamlet in the parish of Throwley, co. of Devon.

WAYBERGTHWAITE. See WABERTHWAITE.

WAYBOURNE, a parish in the hundred of Holt, co. of Norfolk. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, not in charge, and, in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Orford. Church ded. to All Saints. "Sir Ralph Meyngaryn, Knt., in the time of Henry II., founded a small priory of Black canons here, which was at first subordinate to West Acre. This house was ded. to the blessed Virgin Mary and All Saints, and rated, 26th Henry VIII., at £32 7s. 2d. The site of it was granted, 37th Henry VIII., to Richard Heydon."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Holt, 4 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 240; in 1831, 273. A. P., £979.

WAYFORD, a parish in the hundred of Crewkerne, co. of Somerset, including the tythings of Ashcombe, Oathill, and Wayford. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £5 1s. 5½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of John Pinney, Esq. Here is a school in which eight poor children receive education on an endowment of £2 10s. per annum, given in 1719 by Elizabeth Bragg. Distance from Crewkerne, 2½ m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 162; in 1831, 219. A. P., £1,465.

WAYTOWN, a hamlet in the parish of Netherbury, co. of Dorset.

WAYHOUSE, a liberty in the Dorchester division of the co. of Dorset, containing the parish of Upway, and, in 1831, 618 inhabitants.

WAYLAND, a hundred near the centre of the co. of Norfolk, containing 16 parishes, and, in 1831, 6824 inhabitants.

WEALD, a chapelry in the parish of Seven-Oaks, hundred of Codsheath, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, co. of Kent. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, in the deanery of Shoreham, and peculiar jurisdiction of the archbishop of Canterbury, endowed with £2,300, and subordinate to the rectory of Ickham. Distance from Seven-Oaks, 2½ m. S. Pop., in 1801, 487; the remaining returns are included in those of the parish.

WEALD, a joint hamlet with Greenhill, parish of Harrow-on-the-Hill, hundred of Gore, co. of Middlesex. Distance from Harrow-on-the-Hill, 2½ m. N. Pop. returned with that of the parish.

WEALD, a township in the parish and hundred of Bampton, co. of Oxford. Distance from Burford, 6½ m. S.S.E. Pop. returned with that of the parish.

WEALD (NORTH), or NORTH WEALD-BASSET, a parish in the hundred of Ongar, co. of Essex. It contains the hamlets of Haslingwood and Thornwood. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London, rated at £13 6s. 8d., and alternately in patronage of the bishop of London and the improprator of the greater tithes. Church ded. to St Andrew. Distance from Epping, 3½ m. N.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 340; in 1831, 887. A. P., £2,818.

WEALD (SOUTH), a parish in the hundred of Chafford, co. of Essex. It contains the chapelry of Brentwood, the township of South Weald, and the hamlet of Brookstreet. Total pop. in 1831, 2625. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London, rated at £26 13s. 4d., and in patronage of the bishop of London. Church ded. to St Peter. At Brentwood is a free grammar school, founded in 1556 by Sir Anthony Browne, to which the children of the whole parish are entitled to be sent. Here is a chalybeate spring. Courts leet and baron are occasionally held here. Distance from Brentwood, 1½ m. W. Pop. of South Weald and Brookstreet, in 1801, 881; in 1831, 1183. A. P., £6,668. The remaining returns will be found under Brentwood.

WEARDALE-ST-JOHN, or ST JOHN'S CHAPEL, a market-town and chapelry in the parish of Stanhope, north-western division of the ward of Darlington, co. of Durham, with which the pop. is returned. This is a small flourishing town, the inhabitants of which are chiefly employed in lead mines in the neighbourhood. It stands in the vale of the river Weare, and for a century past has had a market on Saturday. About 35 years ago, a market-cross was erected by Sir Ralph Millbank, Bart., on the occasion of his return to parliament for the county of Durham. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Durham, not in charge, returned at £84, and subordinate to the rectory of Stanhope. An annual fair is held here on the 4th of July. The chapel is a handsome structure, rebuilt at the expense of the late Sir William Blackett, Bart., aided by a bequest of £50 by Dr Hartwell. There is also a chapel founded by Dr Shute Barrington, late bishop of Durham, the patronage of which is vested in the rector of Stanhope. The Independents and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. Here is a national school founded by Bishop Barrington. Distance from Stanhope, 6½ m. W.N.W., and from London, 269 m. N.N.W.

WEARDLEY, a township in that part of the parish of Harewood, which is in the upper division of the wapentake of Skyrack, W. R. of the co. of York. Distance from Otley, 6½ m. E. Pop., in 1801, 707; in 1831, 894. A. P., £3,837.

WEARE (THE), a river in the co. of Durham, which flows by Auckland, Binchester, and Durham, and falls into the German ocean at Sunderland.

WEARE, a hamlet in the parish of Topsham, co. of Devon.

WEARE, a parish in the hundred of Bempstone, co. of Somerset. "Its ancient name," says Collinson in his description of Somerset, "was simply Were or Werre; but it was additionally called Over or Upper Weare, to distinguish it from a place of the same name in the turnpike road from Bristol to Bridgewater, which is now, for a similar reason, denominated Lower or Nether Weare, being situated lower than the other. This last-mentioned place is now a hamlet belonging to the former, though in ancient days it deserved a better title, having sent members to parliament in the 34th and 35th of Edward I., and having been honoured with diverse privileges from many of our kings. It at present consists of 22 houses. The river Ox runs through it under an old bridge of stone, and the place might formerly have received its name from some wear raised in former times upon that river. There are three other hamlets within this parish, viz., Allington, Brinscombe, and Streame." Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £12 ls. 5½d., and in patronage of the dean and chapter of Bristol. Church ded. to St Gregory. A weekly market and an annual fair were formerly held at Nether Weare. Distance from Axbridge, 1½ m. S. by W. Pop., in 1801, 433; in 1831, 764. A. P., £4,874.

WEAR-GIFFORD. See WARE-GIFFORD.

WEARMOUTH (BISHOP or SOUTH), a parish in the northern division of the ward of Easington, co.-palatine of Durham. It comprises the townships of Bishop-Wearmouth, Wearmouth-Pans, Burdon, Ford, Ryhope, Silksworth, and Tunstall. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Durham, rated at £89 18s. 1½d., and in patronage of the bishop of Durham. The church, which is ded. to St Michael, was erected in 1807 on the site of an ancient edifice, said to have existed since the time of Athelstan. The Methodists of the new connexion have a place of worship here. The rector of the parish is lord of the manor, and occasionally holds courts. The name is derived from the circumstance of its having been given by King Athelstan about 930 to the church of St Cuthbert at Durham. The town forms part of that of Sunderland, which was formerly included within the parish, but was separated in 1719. A regular and continued street, nearly a mile long, joins the two places. Here is a quarry of stone, which, on the inclosure of the parish in 1649, was reserved for the free use of the copy-holders within the manor. A more detailed account of this township will be found under the article SUNDERLAND, on the south-western side of which it lies. The total pop. of the parish in 1831, was 16,690; that of the township of Bishop-Wearmouth in 1801, 6126; in 1831, 14,462. The remaining returns will be found under the different townships. A. P., £28,703.

WEARMOUTH (MONK), a parish in the eastern division of the ward of Chester, co.-palatine of Durham. It comprises the townships of Monk-Wearmouth, Monk-Wearmouth-Shore, Fulwell, Hylton, and Southwick. The name is derived from its situation on the northern bank of the Weare near its mouth. It consists chiefly of two long streets running east and west, situated on the declivity of a hill, the base of which is skirted by the river Weare. It lies opposite to Sunderland, on the left bank of the river near the suspension bridge. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the various branches of trade connected with the shipping of Sunderland. The greater part of the town consists of irregular buildings on the shore, on a site lately occupied by a few fishermen's huts. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Durham, rated at £5 6s. 8d., returned at £130, and, in 1829, in patronage of Sir H. Williamson, Bart. The church, which is ded. to St Peter, is said to be as ancient as the year 634, and presents some remains of Saxon architecture. During some repairs, a stone-coffin was lately found. The Baptists, Presbyterians, and Wesleyan Methodists, have places of worship here. "King Egfrid gave this town to the famous Abbot Benedict Biscopius, who, in 674, founded a monastery here, and ded. it to St Peter. It suffered in the Danish wars, and was burned down in the inroad made by Malcolm, king of Scotland, in 1070, but was afterwards begun to be rebuilt by Walcher, bishop of Durham, whose successor, William de Carllepho, about 1083, removed most of the monks to Durham, to which Wearmouth became a cell for three or four Benedictine monks.

It was valued, 26th Henry VIII., at £26, and granted, 37th Henry VIII., to Thomas Whitehead."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Here is a free school for boys supported by voluntary contributions, with an annual subscription of £25 from Lady Williamson. About 100 children are educated here. In this parish were found some remains of stags' horns, and a skeleton of gigantic stature. Near the church some remains of the monastery are yet visible. The venerable Bede passed the early part of his monastic life in this monastery, and is supposed by some to have been born in this parish, though others regard Iscombe as his native place. For a further account of this parish, see article SUNDERLAND. Distance from Sunderland, $\frac{1}{2}$ m. N. Pop. of the whole parish in 1831, 9428; that of the township of Monk-Wearmouth in 1801, was 1103; in 1831, 1498. The remaining returns will be found under the different townships. A. P., £2,506.

WEARMOUTH-PANS (BISHOP), a township in the parish of Bishop-Wearmouth, northern division of the ward of Darlington, co.-palatine of Durham. Here were formerly extensive salt-pans, which have long since disappeared. Pop. in 1801, 564; in 1831, 363. A. P., £898.

WEARMOUTH-SHORE (MONK), a township in the parish of Monk-Wearmouth, eastern division of the ward of Chester, co.-palatine of Durham. Here are extensive yards for ship-building, constructed during the late continental war, to which, with the increased commerce of the port of Sunderland, the place owes its rise, which is comparatively of recent date. It is situated on the northern bank of the river Wear, and is adjacent to the town of Sunderland. Pop. in 1801, 4239; in 1831, 6051. A. P., £5,463.

WEARNE, a hamlet in the parish of Pitney, hundred of Kingsbury, co. of Somerset.

WEASENHAM (ALL SAINTS or SOUTH), a parish in the hundred of Launditch, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged vicarage, to which is annexed that of Weasenhams-St-Peters, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £15 10s., and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. Distance from Fakenham, $7\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.W. Pop. in 1801, 207; in 1831, 313. A. P., £1,758.

WEASENHAM (ST PETER, or NORTH), a parish in the hundred of Launditch, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to that of Weasenhams-All-Saints, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, certified at £40, and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. Distance from Fakenham, 7 m. S.W. Pop. in 1801, 196; in 1831, 309. A. P., £1,714.

WEATHERCOAT CAVE, in the chapelry of Ingleton, parish of Arncliffe, W. R. of the co. of York. It is one of those natural curiosities with which this part of the county abounds. It is a stupendous subterranean cataract in a huge cave, the top of which is on a level with the adjoining lands. On approaching its brink, the stranger is equally astonished with the sublime and terrible. The margin is surrounded with trees and shrubs, which have an excellent effect both in guarding and ornamenting the steep and ragged precipices on every side. The cave is divided in two by a rugged and grotesque arch of limestone rock. The whole length from north to south is about 60 yards, and the breadth about 30. At the south end is the entrance down into the little cave; on the right of which is a subterranean passage under the rocks into the great cave, where the astonished stranger sees with amazement an immense cataract issuing from a large cavity in the rock, sufficient to turn several mills, falling 25 yards, in an unbroken sheet, on the rock at the bottom, with a noise which amazes the most intrepid ear. The water disappears as it falls among the rocks and pebbles, running by a subterranean passage about a mile. The cave is filled with the spray that arises from the water dashing against the bottom, and from 10 till 12 o'clock in the forenoon when the sun shines bright, a small vivid rainbow appears, which for colour, size, and situation, is perhaps no where else to be equalled."—Allen's History of the County of York.

WEATHERSFIELD, a parish in the hundred of Hinckford, co. of Essex. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London, rated at £12, and in patronage of the master and fellows of Trinity hall, Cambridge. Church ded. to St Mary Magdalene. The Independents have a place of worship here. Here is a school in which 20 boys are educated and partly clothed on an endowment of £30 per annum, bequeathed in 1702 by Thomas Fitch; and 20 girls are taught, partly clothed and furnished with books, on an endowment of £20 per annum, arising from land given by Dorothy Motta. Distance from Braintree, $6\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.N.W. Pop. in 1801, 1296; in 1831, 1698. A. P., £5,971.

WEAVER (THE), a river in the co. of Chester, which falls into the Mersey at Rock-Savage. It has been rendered navigable from Winsford to Frodland by means of locks.

WEAVER, a hamlet in the parish of Columpton, co. of Devon.

WEAVERHAM, or WEEVERHAM, a parish in the second division of the hundred of Eddisbury, co.-palatine of Chester. It comprises the lordship of Wenverham and the townships of Acton, Crowton, Cuddington, Ouston, Wallerscoat, and Weaverham cum Milton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chester, rated at £12 11s. 10d., and in patronage of the bishop of Chester. Church ded. to St Mary. The sum of £100 was left by Mary Barker, the interest of which is applied for apprenticing poor children. Here is a charity for six poor decayed housekeepers and their wives. Distance from Northwich, $3\frac{1}{2}$ m. W. by N. The total pop. in 1831 was 2321; that of the township of Weaverham cum Milton, and the lordship of Weaverham, in 1801, was 1040; in 1831, 1246. The remaining returns will be found under the different townships. A. P., £6,076.

WEAVERTHORPE, a parish partly within the liberty of St Peter of York, and partly in the wapentake of Buckrose, E. R. of the co. of York. It comprises the townships of Weaverthorpe and Suttons-Ambo. Living, a vicarage rated at £9 6s. 0^d., and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the dean and chapter of York, and returned at £150. The church, which is ded. to All Saints, is situated on the brow of a hill, and consists of a nave, chancel, and tower, of Norman architecture. The interior is plain, with a circular font at the west end. On the south side of the church, in the burial ground, is the mutilated effigy of a female, and three flag-stones with foliated crosses. The village is long and straggling, with a neat Wesleyan chapel, and through the valley runs a small stream of water. The lord of the manor is Sir Thomas Sykes, Bart. The township of Suttons-Ambo is partly in the liberty of St Peter, and has a small chapel consisting of a nave and chancel, with a turret on the west end. The village is neatly built, and contains a place of worship belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists, erected about ten years ago. G. Brown, Esq., is lord of the manor. Distance from Great-Driffield, 10½ m. N.N.W. Pop. of the township in 1801, 182; in 1831, 403; total pop. in 1831, 753. The remaining returns will be found under Suttons-Ambo. A. P., £2,750.

WEBBERTON, a hamlet in the parish of Dunchideock, co. of Devon.

WEBTREE, a hundred in the western side of the co. of Hereford, bounded on the north by the river Wye. It contains 28 parishes, and the pop., in 1831, was 9059.

WEDDICAR, a township in the parish of St Bees, ward of Allerdale above Darwent, co. of Cumberland. Here is Dyewood mill. Distance from Whitehaven, 3 m. E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 34; in 1831, 55. A. P., £620.

WEDDINGTON, a parish in the Atherstone division of the hundred of Hemlingford, co. of Warwick. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £8 10s. 7½^d., and, in 1829, in patronage of C. B. Adderley, Esq. Church ded. to St James. Distance from Nuneaton, 1½ m. N. Pop., in 1801, 60; in 1831, 69. A. P., £1,714.

WEDGWOOD, a township in the parish of Wolstanton, northern division of the hundred of Pirehill, co. of Stafford, containing, in 1831, 135 inhabitants.

WEDGENOCK-PARK, in the parish of Leek-Wootton, Kenilworth division of the hundred of Knightlow, co. of Warwick. "In the reign of Henry I., Henry de Newburgh, earl of Warwick, in imitation of that king, who made a park at Woodstock, began making Wedgenock-Park, about two miles from his castle at Warwick. Whether it was finished by himself or his successors is not certain, but he was soon imitated in this piece of magnificence by others, and hence the waste of land for parks became so frequent in after ages among the nobility of England."—Edmondson's Family of Greville.

WEDHAMPTON, a tything in the parish of Urchfont, hundred of Swanborough, co. of Wilts. Distance from East Lavington, 4 m. E. The pop., in 1801, was 173; in 1831, 221.

WEDMORE, a parish in the hundred of Bempstone, co. of Somerset, containing also the hamlet of Panborough, which is in the hundred of Glaston-Twelve-Hides. The name was originally written Wet-moor, descriptive of the nature of the country, which was formerly wont to be under water for nine months in the year. This was the residence of the West Saxon monarchs, and with their hunting-seat at Cheddar and the borough of Axe, was given by Alfred to one of his sons. It is divided into 5 tythings, viz., Wedmore, the Borough, Churchland, Blackford, and North-Load, and contains the hamlets and farm-houses of Bagley, Blackford, Clewer, Cocklake, Crickham, Westham, Heathhouse, Latcham, North-Load, Mudgeley, Old-wood, Panborough, Perrow, Sand, Upper and Lower Stoughton, and East and West Theal. The borough is governed by a portreeve, annually chosen. The duke of Chandos is lord of the borough, and holds a court annually, at which are appointed bread-weighers, ale-tasters, haywards, water-bailiffs, and constables. A fair is held in this parish on the 22d of July, and a revel the Wednesday after Whitsun-week. The custom of appointing water-bailiffs, and the discovery of a large vessel in draining the adjacent moor, have induced an opinion that the sea at some remote period came up to the town. The village stands in a pleasant situation on a slight elevation, and is surrounded by much valuable land, which, within the last century, has been reclaimed from the moor by extensive drainage. Living, a discharged vicarage, rated at £20 8s. 6½^d., and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the dean of Wells. The church—which is ded. to St Mary—is a handsome cruciform structure, in the early style of English architecture. Small chapels are annexed to the south aisle and each side of the chancel, and a stately tower springs from the intersection. The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. Here is a national school recently established. In the church is a parochial library founded by the Rev. Mr Andrews, formerly vicar of the parish. Distance from Axbridge, 4½ m. S. by E. Pop., in 1801, 2122; in 1831, 3657. A. P., £22,698.

WEDNESBURY, a parish and market-town in the southern division of the hundred of Offlow, co. of Stafford. This place was formerly called Weadesbury by the Saxons, and is now commonly known by the name of Wedgebury. It was situated in the Anglo-Saxon kingdom of Mercia, and a strong castle was built here in the time of the heptarchy, which, in 916, was strongly fortified by Ethelfleda, the courageous and high-spirited daughter of Alfred. At the time of the Norman conquest, we find it included in the royal demesnes. It is now well known as a place of considerable manufacturing importance, large quantities of iron articles being made here, principally gun locks, horse shoes, locks, screws, nails, agricultural and other implements, &c. In the neighbourhood coal is raised to a great extent, and a particular kind is well adapted for, and much used in, the forging of iron. Here is an extensive manufactory of knives, axes, and other edge tools, as also mills for the grinding of corn. Communication with Birmingham is kept up by means of a branch of the Birmingham canal, which passes near the town. The lord of the manor holds an annual court in October, at which a constable is chosen for the municipal government of the town. A court of requests for the recovery of debts under £5, is held here occasionally, including within its jurisdiction the parish of Wednesbury and Darlaston, and the townships of Bilston and Willenhall. Friday is market-day; and fairs for cattle are held on the 6th of May and 3d of August. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £4 3s. 4d., and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church, ded. to St Bartholomew, is supposed to stand on the site of the ancient castle already mentioned, and is situated on a rising ground, commanding an extensive prospect of the adjoining country. It is built in the later style of English architecture, with an octagonal end, containing many curious monuments, with some wooden seats of great antiquity. The incorporated society for the building and enlargement of churches having lately contributed £500 towards the improvement of the church, it underwent in consequence a thorough repair, having received an addition of 450 sittings, of which number 300 are free. The Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists and Independents have places of worship here. Here is an almshouse and a school for the instruction of poor children, both endowed with a small rent-charge, bequeathed in 1602 by Thomas Parker. The income of the former has been since increased by some small bequests. Here is also a school conducted on the Lancasterian system, erected and supported by subscription. In this town was born William Lord Paget, the first of his family who bore the title, who was secretary of state in the reign of Henry VIII. Distance from London, 117 m. N.W.; from Stafford, 19 m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 4160; in 1831, 8437. A. P., £7,614.

WEDNESFIELD, a chapelry and township in the parish of Wolverhampton, southern division of the hundred of Offlow, co. of Stafford. In the vicinity is the site of a battle fought in 911, by Edward the Elder against the Danes, in which the latter were completely defeated, with the loss of two kings and many other chiefs. Till lately there existed two barrows on the supposed spot where the battle was fought. Locks, traps, &c. are manufactured here; and the town has the advantage of the Easington and Wirley canal, which crosses the parish. Living, a perpetual curacy within the archd. of Stafford and Coventry, but within the jurisdiction of the royal peculiar court of Wolverhampton, not in charge, returned at £100, and in patronage of J. Gough, Esq. The church—which was built in 1756—is ded. to St Giles. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Wolverhampton, 2 m. N.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 1068; in 1831, 1870. A. P., £5,360.

WEEDON, a hamlet in the parish of Hardwicke, hundred of Cottesloe, co. of Buckingham. Here is a school which derives its support from annual subscriptions. Distance from Aylesbury, 8 m. N. Pop., in 1801, 385; in 1831, 406. A. P., £2,974.

WEEDON-BECK, or WEEDON-ON-THE-STREET, a parish in the hundred of Fawsley, co. of Northampton. Welfere, one of the Anglo-Saxon kings of Mercia, had a palace here. "St Werburgha, about the year 690, turned the royal palace here into a monastery or nunnery, and probably for some time presided over the religious whom she placed in it. How long these nuns continued is not certain. Roger de Theobovil, shortly after the conquest, having given a moiety of his manor of Weedon to the abbot and convent of Bec in Normandy, they erected an alien priory here, which Henry VI., in the 22d year of his reign, made part of the endowment of Eaton college."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £11, and, in 1829, in patronage of T. R. Thornton, Esq. The church is ded. to St Peter and St Paul, and is an edifice built in different styles of English architecture. The incorporated society for the building and enlargement of churches having lately granted £500 to this church, it has been enlarged to the extent of 447 sittings, of which 257 are free. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have each a place of worship here. Here is a school at which 20 boys receive clothing and education, supported by an annual income of £100, arising chiefly from the price obtained for a number of houses, bequeathed in 1712 by Nathaniel Billing, and partly from a small sum of £76, given in 1736 by the Rev. John Rogers. The lord of the manor holds annually courts leet and baron. A branch from the Grand junction canal passes through the parish. Here is the grand military depot, capable of containing 200,000 stand of muskets, about two-thirds of that number being in fact usually kept here. This magnificent establishment is not surpassed by any thing of the kind in Europe. Distance from Daventry, 4 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 750; in 1831, 1439. A. P., £3,521.

WEEDON-LOYS, or PINKENEY, a parish in the hundred of Green's-Norton, co. of Northampton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £6 17s. 6d., and in patronage of the provost and fellows of King's college, Cambridge. Church ded. to St Peter and St Mary. Here is a mineral spring. Distance from Towcester, 6 m. W. by S. Pop., with the hamlet of Weston, in 1801, 387; in 1831, 526. A. P., £2,956.

WEEDON (UPPER), a hamlet in the parish of Weedon-Beck, co. of Northampton.

WEEFORD, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of Offlow, co. of Stafford, containing the hamlet of Swinfen and the liberty of Packington. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, and a peculiar of the prebendary of Alrewas and Weeford, in the cathedral church of Lichfield, returned at £50 10s., and in the patronage of the chancellor of Lichfield cathedral. Church ded. to St Mary. Here is a school which is supported by the family of Lawley. This place probably takes its name from a ford called Wayford, on the Roman way commonly called the Watling-street. Here is the Low, which being called Offlow, gives its name to the hundred in which this parish is situated. It is said to have been the burial-place of Offa, which is however a mistake, as it is well ascertained that Offa was buried at Bedford. Distance from Lichfield, 4 m. S.S.E. Pop. of the parish, in 1801, 200; in 1831, 806. A. P., £2,750.

WEEK, a hamlet in the parish of Binstead, co. of Southampton.

WEEK, a parish in the upper half hundred of Buddlesgate, Fawley division of the co. of Southampton, and situated within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney court, which is held once a-week, on Thursdays, at Winchester, for the recovery of debts of any amount. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £12 19s. 2d., and in patronage of the bishop of Winchester. Church ded. to St Mary. The ancient walls of the city of Winchester inclose part of the parish. Distance from Winchester, 1 m. N.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 65; in 1831, 162. A. P., £1,526.

WEEK, a hamlet in the parish of Arretton, and partly in that of Godshill, in the isle of Wight, co. of Southampton.

WEEK, a hamlet in the parish of St Mary Bourne, co. of Southampton. Distance from Whitchurch, 4 m. W.N.W.

WEEK-FITZPAINE, a hamlet in the parish of Stoke-Courcy, co. of Somerset.

WEEK-ST-LAWRENCE, a parish in the hundred of Winterstoke, co. of Somerset. It is a chapel to the vicarage of Congressbury. It includes the hamlets of Bourton, Cullum, Ebdon, and Iceldown, or Iclinton. Distance from Axbridge, 8½ m. N.N.W.

WEEK-ST-MARY, a parish in the hundred of Stratton, co. of Cornwall. This was formerly a borough, and a mayor is still elected annually, although the duty attached to his office is little more than nominal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter, rated at £17, and in patronage of the master and fellows of Sidney Sussex college, Cambridge. Fairs for cattle and sheep are held here on the 8th and 12th September. Here are still visible, on a site called Castle-hill, the remains of an ancient fortress. Distance from Stratton, 6 m. S. Pop., in 1801, 566; in 1831, 769. A. P., £3,012.

WEEKE-CHAMFLOWER, a chapelry in the parish of Bruton, co. of Somerset. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells, endowed with £1000, and in patronage of Sir R. C. Hoare, Bart. Chapel ded. to St Mary. Distance from Bruton, 1½ m. W. Pop., in 1831, 93.

WEEKLEY, a parish in the hundred of Corby, co. of Northampton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £9 0s. 5d., returned at £135, and, in 1829, in patronage of the duke of Buccleugh. The church—which is ded. to St Mary—contains a monument to the memory of Lord Chief-Justice Montague. Here is an hospital for seven poor men, situated near the southern side of the church. Distance from Kettering, 2 m. N.E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 253; in 1831, 273. A. P., £1,732.

WEIGHTON-MARKET, a parish, township, and market-town, partly in the liberty of St Peter of York, and partly in Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, E. R. of the co. of York. It includes the market-town of Market-Weighton, the chapelry of Shipton, and the hamlet of Arras. It is a thriving town, situated on the road from York to Beverley, near a branch of the river Foulness, at the foot of the Wolds, and has lately been greatly benefited by the construction of a canal to the Humber. This place was formerly, by the great proportion of antiquaries, regarded as the Roman Delgovitia, until Drake assigned that station to Lonsdesbrough, about $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. farther to the north; in support of this opinion he has given very plausible reasons. Near this town, however, are several ancient barrows, which are, however, apparently not Roman, but Danish monuments, and which afford reason to believe that this was the site of an action fought between the Danes and Saxons, of which event, however, no account is preserved in history. On opening these tumuli, bones and parts of ancient armour have been discovered. Roman coins have also been discovered in the enclosure, but how they came there has not been satisfactorily accounted for. Living, a discharged vicarage in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean and chapter of York, rated at £4 13s. 0d., returned at £133, and in patronage of the prebendary of Weighton in York cathedral. The church is ded. to All Saints, and is situated near the centre of the town. It is a handsome structure, consisting of a nave and aisles, and a chancel, with an embattled tower at the west end, in the Norman style, with pinnacles at the angles. On the south side of the nave is a large stone porch. The windows of the aisles are pointed, of three lights, with perpendicular tracery in the sweep of the arches. The clerestory windows are small. The east window of the chancel was formerly circular-headed, but is now pointed. The interior is neat; the nave is separated from the aisles by three pointed arches resting on octagonal columns. At the west end is a double gallery; in the upper one is a small organ; the lower gallery is continued over the north aisle, and one arch of the south aisle. Under the gallery at the west end is a plain, circular font. The Independents, Wesleyan, and Primitive Methodists, have places of worship here. Here is a school for ten children, endowed with two small bequests. Wednesday is market-day, and fairs for horses, cattle, &c., are held on the 14th of May and 25th of September. This is the birth-place of the well-known Wm. Bradley, commonly called the Yorkshire giant, who, when 19 years of age, weighed 27 stones, and was 7 feet 8 inches in height. Distance from London, 192 m. N. by W.; and from York, 19 m. E.S.E. Pop. of the whole parish in 1831, 2169; of the town, including the hamlet of Arras, in 1801, 1183; in 1831, 1631. A. P., £7,436.

WEIGHTON-PARVA, a township in the parish of Rowley, (in which the pop., &c. are included), E. R. of the co. of York. Distance from South-Cave, 5 m. N.E. by E.

WEILD, a parish in the hundred of Fawley, Fawley division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a perpetual curacy in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean and chapter of Winchester, not in charge, and, in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Portsmouth. Church ded. to St James. It is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney court held every Thursday at Winchester, for the recovery of debts of any amount. Distance from Alton, 6 m. W. Pop., in 1801, 206; in 1831, 248. A. P., £1,601.

WELBECK, an extra-parochial liberty in the Hatfield division of the wapentake of Bassettlaw, co. of Nottingham. "An abbey for Premonstratensian canons from Newhouse in Lincolnshire, begun in the parish of Cakenay, 18th Stephen, A. D. 1153, and finished in the reign of King Henry II., by Thomas fil. Liardi fil. Jocel le Flemangh. From whose heirs and descendants John Hothom, bishop of Ely, A. D. 1329, bought the whole manor of Cakenay with other lands, and the advowson of this abbey, the former of which he settled upon the abbat and convent, who thereupon added eight canons to their former number, the latter he annexed to the see of Ely; and so his successors, bishops of Ely, were, after that time, accounted founders or patrons of this house, which was ded. to St James, and made the chief abbey of the Premonstratensian order in England, A. D. 1512. It was, 26th Henry VIII., rated at £249 6s. 3d. per annum, Dugd.; £298 4s. 8d., Speed; and granted, 30th Henry VIII., to Richard Whalley."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Worksop, $3\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 66; in 1831, 63. A. P., £4,122.

Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, rated at £8 13s. 7d., returned at £63 6s., and, in 1829, in patronage of Charles Chaplin, Esq. The church, which is ded. to St James, contains several monuments to the lords of Snape. This parish contains the townships of Snape and Well. The name of this place is derived from a celebrated well ded. to St Michael. In 1605, Thomas, earl of Exeter, and Dorothy his wife, founded and endowed a house called Nevill's workhouse, for the maintenance and education of a master and mistress, and eight poor girls of the townships of Well and Snape. In 1788, this house was changed into four free schools, for a boy and a girl out of every house in each township, above the age of 5, and under the age of 13. The funds now amount to above £100 per annum. Snape-hall, now the residence of Miss Clarke, was in Leland's time "a goodly castel, in a valley belonging to the Lord Latimer, and two or three parks well woded." "Sir Ralph de Neville, lord of Middleham, founded here in 1342, an hospital for a master, two priests, and 24 poor brothers and sisters, to the honour of St Michael the archangel, whose revenues were valued, 37th

Henry VIII., at £65 5s. 7d."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Badale, 5 m. S. The united pop. of Snape, in 1831, 1066; of Well township in 1801, 368; in 1831, 404. A. P., £1,336.

WELL-HAUGH, a township in the parish of Falsstone, north-western division of the ward of Tindale, co. of Northumberland. Distance from Bellingham, 12 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 228; in 1831, 272. The assessed property is included in that of the parish of Simonburn.

WELLAND, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Oswaldslow, co. of Worcester. Living, a discharged vicarage, rated at £8 2s. 11d., in the peculiar jurisdiction of the bishop of Worcester, and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St James. Distance from Upton-upon-Severn, 3 m. W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 334; in 1831, 460. A. P., £2,008.

WELCOMBE, a parish divided into Upper and Nether, in the hundred of Hartland, co. of Devon. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter, certified at £8 10s., returned at £43, and in patronage of the perpetual curacy of Hartland. Church ded. to St Nectan. Distance from Bideford, 17 m. S.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 220; in 1831, 258. A. P., £984.

WELLE, in the parish of Gayton, Lyna division of the hundred of Freebridge, co. of Norfolk. "This manor, with the advowson of the church of Gayton, being given to the abbey of St Stephen, near Caen in Normandy, by William de Streis, in the time of William the Conqueror, here was fixed an alien priory of Benedictine monks from that foreign house; which, upon the wars with France, being seized into the king's hands, was granted, 47th Edward III., to Hugh Fastolph; 23d Richard II., to John Devereux for life; and, 3d Henry V., to John Wodehouse and John Irelington: but King Edward IV. gave it to the dean and canons of Westminster, who enjoyed it till the general dissolution, and then it was granted, 2d Edward VI., to Osbert Mandeford and Thomas Gawdy; but it is since by exchange become part of the possessions of the bishop of Ely."—Tanner's Not. Mon.

WELLESBOURNE-HASTINGS, a parish in the Warwick division of the hundred of Kington, co. of Warwick. Living, a discharged vicarage, to which is annexed the rectory of Walton-Delville, in the archd. and dio. of Worcester, rated at £7 11s. 8d., and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church—which is ded. to St Peter—presents a combination of the Norman and early English styles of architecture, and contains a monument to the memory of Thomas Lestrangle, lord-lieutenant of Ireland in the reign of Henry VI. Here are schools in which about 50 boys and 60 girls are gratuitously educated, on an endowment of £82 per annum, chiefly arising from land and houses, given in 1723 by the Rev. Richard Boyse. The petty-sessions for the hundred of Kington are held here. Dis-time from Kington, 5 m. N.W. Pop., with that of Walton-Deville, in 1801, 1096; in 1831, 697. A. P., £4,478.

WELLESBOURN-MONTFORD, a parish in the Warwick division of the hundred of Kington, co. of Warwick. Distance from Kington, 5 m. N.W. Pop., in 1831, 660. A. P., £3,299.

WELLINGBOROUGH, a market-town and parish in the hundred of Hamfordshoe, co. of Northampton. The name is derived from numerous wells or springs, one of which, denominated the red-well, was formerly regarded as possessing important medicinal properties, inasmuch that in 1626, Charles I. and his queen resided in tents here during a whole season, for the purpose of drinking its water. A destructive fire took place here in 1738, since which the town has been rebuilt, and now stands on the slope of a hill about a mile to the north of the navigable river Nen. The houses, which are modern and handsome, are chiefly constructed of red sandstone, and the town consists of well-lighted streets, diverging from the market-place. Here is a silk-mill, recently established. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufactures of boots and shoes, and of bobbin lace; the latter is on the decline, but still gives employment to many women and children. The market, which is held on Wednesday, and at which large quantities of corn are sold, was granted by King John at the request of the monks of Croyland abbey, who at that time held the manor, which at the dissolution fell into the hands of the crown. Fairs are held on the Wednesdays in Easter and Whitsunday, and also a considerable one for horses, cattle, sheep, &c. on the 29th of October. The lord of the manor holds an annual court in October, and the magistrates hold the petty-sessions for the division weekly in the town-hall, which was recently erected. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £24 1s. 8d., and, in 1829, in patronage of John Vivian, Esq. The church is ded. to All Saints, and is a handsome structure, in the three styles of English architecture combined, with a tower and spire. The southern entrance to the church is by a door built in the Norman style, and the interior is spacious and elegant, the east being richly ornamented with designs in sculpture and tracery. Here are some richly carved stalls, and a handsome stone screen. The Independents have three, and the Baptists, Society of Friends, and Wesleyan Methodists, have each one place of worship. Here has existed since the 2d of Edward VI., a free school, situated near the church, and originally endowed with the revenues which formerly belonged to a guild of the Virgin Mary, formerly attached to the church. Since then, however, it has received many bequests at different times; the funds are now pretty considerable, and are apportioned among the head and under masters by 16 feesees, who act as trustees. The masters are appointed by all the inhabitants paying assessed taxes. Here is a charity school, the school-room of which was bequeathed in 1711

by John Freeman, Esq.; belonging to the school is land, which now produces annually about £137 10s., left by Sarah Knight, Mary Roan, and John Robinson, including one half of the rental of forty-five acres of land, the other half being given to the free-grammar school, and to two individuals in the parish, who require not to be in receipt of assistance from the parish. These funds are appropriated to paying the salaries of a schoolmaster and mistress, 25 boys and the like number of girls being educated here. Here is also a small annual income derived from a bequest left about 250 years ago, by a person whose name is now unknown. The mineral spring formerly mentioned now turns a mill for grinding corn, and has lately been arched over. Distance from London, 67 m. N.N.W.; from Northampton, 10 m. N.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 3325; in 1831, 4688. A. P., £11,877.

WELLINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of Launditch, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged rectory with those of Tittlehall and Godwick, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £5 8s. 6½d. The patronage is with the two conjoined rectories. Church ded. to St Andrew. Distance from Fakenham, 6 m. S.W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 150; in 1831, 165. A. P., £1,066.

WELLINGLEY, a township conjoined with Stansill and Wilsick, in the parish of Tickhill, southern division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, W. R. of the co. of York. Distance from Bawtrey, ¼ m. N.W. by N. The pop. and other returns will be found under Stansill.

WELLINGORE, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of Boothby-Graffo, parts of Kesteven, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged vicarage, which is exempt from visitation, in the dio. of Lincoln, but in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the dean and chapter of Lincoln; it is certified at £11 10s. Church ded. to All Saints. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Sleaford, 9½ m. N.W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 559; in 1831, 752. A. P., £2,577.

WELLINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Grimsworth, co. of Hereford. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford, rated at £6 13s. 4d., returned at £140, and in the patronage of the prebendary of Wellington, in the cathedral of Hereford. Church ded. to St Margaret. Distance from Hereford, 5½ m. N. Pop., in 1801, 532; in 1831, 630. A. P., £3,480.

WELLINGTON, or WILLINGTON, a township in the parish of Walls-End, Castle ward, co. of Northumberland. Here are extensive collieries, a quarry, a rope-work, a steam-mill for the grinding of corn, and several coal stalls. It is advantageously situated on the river Tyne. Distance from North Shields, 3 m. W. by S.

WELLINGTON, a parish and market-town in the Wellington or southern division of the hundred of Bradford, co. of Salop. This was the place chosen by Charles I. as a residen-vows in 1642, when, having collected his forces on the 19th of September in that year, he delivered to them the memorable address of which Clarendon gives a particular account. It contains the townships of Aston, Hodley, Horton, Ketley, Lawley, and Walcott. The town is in a low part of the country, about two miles south from the Wrekin, situated near the ancient Roman road, commonly known by the name of the Watling-street: the above-mentioned mound, the Wrekin, is about 1100 feet in height, and has at its summit an ancient fort. The river flows along one of the boundaries of the parish. Within the town are many excellent and handsome houses; the streets are not in general wide, although they have been lately much improved by being Macadamized, and the town has been within these two or three years lighted with gas. The lord of the manor holds a court annually in November, at which are appointed the municipal officers for the government of the town, consisting of a mayor, and constables, and two clerks, who take the charge of, and regulate the market. The magistrates of the county hold the petty-sessions for the hundred here weekly: as also on particular specified days, a court of record, before which all debts not exceeding £20 can be recovered. The market, at which very much business is transacted, is held on Thursday, and was granted to Hugh Burnel in the reign of Edward I. Fairs are held on the 29th of March, 22d of June, 29th of September, and 17th of November. At these fairs large quantities of farm and dairy produce, as also horses, horned cattle, and sheep, are sold. The parish is well supplied with coal, and large quantities of ironstone and limestone are found here. In consequence of these advantages, Wellington has long been the seat of extensive operations in the manufacture of iron and iron articles, and in particular of nails. In the neighbourhood are establishments for the working of iron, belonging to the Lawley, Lilleshall, Ketley, and Hodley companies. Here are a glass-work, several malt-kilns and corn-mills. The town participates to a small extent in the trade of timber. It has ample communication with the Severn by means of the Shrewsbury and Shropshire canal, which passes this place, and also affords it communication with the interior counties. Along this the principal part of the manufactures of the town passes, as also some of its supplies for domestic consumption.—Living, a vicarage united to the rectory of Eyton-on-the-wild-moors, in the archd. of Salop, and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £9 5s., and exempt from the visitation of the bishop. The patronage is with Eyton rectory. The church is ded. to All Saints, and is an elegant structure of recent erection. The windows have a peculiarly light appearance, arising from the circumstance of their divisions being made of iron. Wesleyan Methodists, Independents, and Baptists, have places of worship here. Here is a free school at which poor children of both sexes are taught: also a national school, the school-room of which is in a building situated in the church-yard. Here is an almshouse for poor women. In the vicinity are two wells, the basis of one of which is sulphureous, and of the other chalybeate. They are situated at Admaston, almost a mile and a half distant from the town, are supposed to possess medicinal qualities, and having, of late years, attained a considerable degree of celebrity, have been frequented by people from all parts of the country, particularly by those who are afflicted with rheumatic complaints. For the accommodation of these visitors, a large and comfortable inn, with ample baths, has been lately built. Petrifications of vegetable and other substances are often found in the vicinity. This is the birth-place of Dr Withering, a celebrated botanist, who wrote a 'Botanical Arrangement of British Plants.' Distance from London, 142 m. N.W.; from Shrewsbury 11 m. E. Pop. in 1801, 7531; in 1831, 9671. A. P., £22,518.

WELLINGTON, a parish and market-town in the hundred of Kingsbury, co. of Somerset. The houses in the town are in general well built, and great improvements have lately taken place in the town. It consists of several streets, the principal of which is upwards of a mile in length. The foundation stone of a new market place was laid in June, 1832; this was done in consequence of its being supposed that the trade of the town had suffered from the ruinous state of the market-place; an application was therefore made to the duke of Wellington as lord of the manor, for permission to erect a new one, which is accordingly being done. Druggets and sarges were formerly manufactured here to a pretty considerable extent; but these branches have, of late years, considerably fallen off. It is supposed that a great increase of trade will be consequent on the completion of the Grand Western canal. A market is held every Tuesday, at which corn is the chief article of sale, and fairs are held on the Thursdays preceding Easter and Whitsuntide. These were obtained for the inhabitants by the bishop of Wells, at a time when the town was in manorial possession of the see. The lord of the manor holds an annual court-leet, at which are chosen the municipal officers of the town, consisting of a bailiff and other inferior officers. Near the town is a magnificent pillar, erected by subscription, in commemoration of the victory at Waterloo. Arthur Wellesley, the distinguished commander on that momentous occasion, was created Viscount Wellington on the 4th September, 1809; earl of the same place on the 28th February, 1812; marquess on the succeeding 18th of August; and finally duke on the 3d May, 1814, in consequence of his splendid victories in the peninsula and elsewhere. Living, a vicarage united to the perpetual curacy of West Buckland, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the bishop of Bath and Wells, although locally within the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells, certified at £15 10s. 2d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. W. P. Thomas. The church—which is ded. to St John the Baptist, is a handsome building with an embattled tower, with lofty pinnacles at the angles at the west end. Annexed are two sepulchral chapels, one of which contains a splendid monument richly adorned with carving and a number of effigies, erected to the memory of Sir John Popham, Knt., formerly lord-chief-justice of England during the reigns of Queen Elizabeth and her successor, James I. In the western part of the town is a handsome chapel, erected some time ago by the Rev. W. P. Thomas at his own expense. This chapel was recently ded. to the service of the church of England. The Wesleyan Methodists, Independents, Society of Friends, and Baptists, have places of worship here. Here are almshouses, founded and endowed, in 1604, by Sir John Popham, already mentioned, for the support of six poor men and the like number of women. The master and matron are required to instruct poor children. Distance from London, 148 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 4033; in 1831, 4762. A. P., £14,897.

WELLESFORD, a hamlet in the parish of Langford-Budville, co. of Somerset.

WELLOW, or WELHOVE, a hamlet in the liberty of the town of Great Grimshy, which is locally within the wapentake of Bradley-Haverstoe, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln; it is in the parish of St James. "King Henry I. built here and endowed an abbey to the honour of St Augustine, for Black canons, which was valued, 26th Henry VIII., at £95 6s. 1d. per annum, Dugd.; £152 7s. 4d., Speed; and granted, 36th Henry VIII., to Sir Thomas Henneage."—Tunners Not. Mon.

WELLOW, a parish in the South Clay division of the wapentake of Basselaw, co. of Nottingham. Living, a perpetual curacy subordinate to the vicarage of Edwinstowe, in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, rated at £11, and in patronage of the Hon. and Rev. J. R. Saville. Church ded. to St Swithin. Here is a school endowed with a small annual income, the donor of which is not known. Distance from Ollerton, 1½ m. S.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 344; in 1831, 473. A. P., £1,005.

WELLOW, a hundred situated at the north eastern angle of the co. of Somerset, lying on the borders of Wiltshire, containing 13 parishes, and, in 1831, 8974 inhabitants.

WELLOW, a parish in the hundred of Wellow, co. of Somerset. A railway from the collieries at Welton, which communicates with the Avon, and Kennet, and the Avon canals, passes through this parish. The parish contains the hamlets of Beggeridge, Hassage, Peglinch, Shascombe, Stony-Littleton, Twinney, or Twynho, Whitexmead, and Woodborough. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £20 6s. 10d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Edward Gardiner, Esq. The church—which is ded. to St Julian—was built about 100 years ago by Sir Walter Hungerford. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Here is a school at which ten poor children receive instruction on an endowment of £10 per annum, given in 1756 by Rachael Coles; two also are educated for a rent charge of £2, given in 1699 by Daniel Summers. Many Roman antiquities have been discovered in the vicinity, consisting of tessellated pavements, paterae, pillars, altars, coins, &c. Here is a large barrow called Woodborough, and a smaller one, which latter on being opened, has been found to contain coffins of stone. Distance from Bath, 4 m. S. by W. Pop., in 1801, 770; in 1831, 960. A. P., £6,311.

WELLOW (EAST), a parish in the hundred of Thorngate, Andover division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £5, and, in 1829, in patronage of the duke of Buckingham. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Romsey, 4 m. W. Pop., in 1801, 257; in 1831, 318. A. P., £1,767.

WELLOW (WEST), a tything in the parish of East Wellow, hundred of Amesbury, co. of Wilts. Distance from Romsey, 4½ m. W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 345; in 1831, 394. A. P., £927.

WELLS, or WELLES, a parish and seaport town in the northern division of the hundred of Greenhoe, co. of Norfolk. It is mentioned in Domesday-book under the name of Guebla, and is advantageously situated on a small creek, about a mile from the German ocean, consisting chiefly of two partially paved streets. It is well supplied with water. Here is a small neat theatre built of brick, as also a library which was recently established, and is supported by subscriptions. The races, which used formerly to have been held here, are now entirely given up. Here is an extensive fishery, and excellent oysters are found here, forming an extensive branch of commerce. Large quantities of grain, malt, &c., are exported; the imports consist chiefly of linseed and rapeseed cakes, tar, coals, deals, tiles, bark, wine, &c. The entrance to the harbour has been rendered difficult by the gradual accumulation of sand and other obstructions; but it has of late been considerably improved under the inspection of the harbour commissioners. The establishment of the customs here consists of a collector, comptroller, land and tide-waiter, &c. On the quay is the custom-house, a plain brick building. A fair is held here on Shrove-Tuesday. The county magistrates meet here once every fortnight to hold the petty sessions for the hundred; and the steward of the lord of the manor holds courts leet and baron annually. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £26 13s. 4d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of the Rev. J. R. Hopper. The church is a handsome building, constructed of flint, and ded. to St Peter. Here are places of worship belonging to the Independents, Society of Friends, and Wesleyan Methodists. Here are free schools for 30 boys and 30 girls, founded about the middle of 17th century by Christopher Ringlee, Esq. of Field-Dalling. Distance from Norwich, 33 m. N.W. by N.; and from London, 120 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 2316; in 1831, 3624. A. P., £4,471.

WELLS,

A city, locally situated in the hundred of Wells-Forum, co. of Somerset, but having separate jurisdiction. The name is derived from the numerous springs which abound in the city and its vicinity, more especially from that of St Andrew, which is the source of a rivulet, flowing through the south-western part of the city. It owes its origin to the formation of a collegiate church, ded. to St Andrew the Apostle, by Ina, king of the west Saxons, in 704. Around this ancient ecclesiastical establishment the city appears to have grown up, and to have gradually increased in prosperity from the period of the foundation of the bishopric. When the sees of Bath and Wells were united, great disputes arose between the inhabitants of both cities, as to which should be regarded as the head of the diocese. A charter of incorporation was granted by Reginald Fitz-Jocelyne, in the reign of Richard I., when it became a free borough.

Description.—The city is situated in an agreeable and fertile plain, on the south side of the Mendip hills, by which it is sheltered from the north winds. An extensive tract of rich meadow land stretches to the southward. The town has a peculiarly interesting appearance, from the number of ancient ecclesiastical edifices, more especially the magnificent cathedral, the church of St Cuthbert, and the buildings which remain of the ancient monasteries. It consists chiefly of four principal streets, by which it is divided into districts, three of which are called the verderies of Chamberlain-street, High-street, and Tucker-street. It contains also the extra-parochial liberty of St Andrews, the parish of St Cuthbert within, and the parish of St Cuthbert without, in which are the hamlets of Burcot, Chilcot, Coxley, Dulcot, Easton, East and West Horrington, Milton, Polsham, Wallcombe, East Water, East Wells, Whitnell, and Worminster. In the vicinity are many handsome residences surrounded by diversified and picturesque scenery.

Municipal Government.—The charter, originally granted by the Bishop Fitz Jocelyne, and confirmed by King John, intrusted the government of the city to a master and commonalty. A new charter was granted by Queen Elizabeth in the 31st year of her reign, vesting the government in a mayor, recorder, seven aldermen, and 16 common-councilmen, with a town-clerk, and other officers. The freedom of the city is inherited by the eldest son, or obtained by marriage with the eldest daughter of a freeman; it is also obtained by a servitude of seven years to a freeman. The mayor, recorder, and the senior alderman or master, are justices of the peace within the borough, and are entitled to hold half-yearly courts of session for all offences not capital, and a court of record for the recovery of debts to any amount; but both of these courts have long since fallen into disuse. The magistrates of the county hold the Epiphany and Easter quarter-sessions here; and the assizes for the county are held alternately at this place, at Bridgewater, and at Taunton. The elective franchise was conferred upon the inhabitants in the 23d of Edward I., and two members were regularly returned by the mayor, master, and burgesses, in number about 400, whose rights were confirmed by decisions of the house of commons, in 1723 and 1729. Since the passing of the reform bill the number of electors has been increased to about 800. The mayor is the returning officer. The pop., in 1801, was, in the extra-parochial division of St Andrew, 268; in 1831, 381; A. P., £3,976: in the parish of St Cuthbert within, in 1801, 2829; in 1831, 3430; A. P., £2,253: in the district of St Cuthbert without, in 1801, 2063; in 1831, 2838; A. P., £20,498. Total pop., in 1831, 6649. The inhabitants are partly employed in the manufacture of stockings, and excellent paper is manufactured at Wookey, about two miles distant. Wednesday and Saturday are market-days, and a large market for corn, cattle, and cheese, is held every fourth Saturday. Fairs for cattle, horses, and pedlery, are held on Jan. 6th, May 14th, July 6th, Oct. 23rd, and Nov. 30th. The market-place is a spacious area, situated on the east side of the city. On the north side of this are 12 handsome houses of stone, formerly inhabited by priests, for whom use they were erected by Bishop Beckington. This same bishop erected an elegant conduit in the later style of English architecture, in 1450. About thirty years ago, this being considered an obstruction, was taken down, and removed to Stowerhead, the seat of Sir R. C. Hoare, Bart., and a new one was erected on the site of the old cross, taken down in 1780. The town-hall and market-house stand at the south-eastern angle of the area. At a short distance to the east of the city are held annual races.

History of the Diocese.—The collegiate church, founded by Ina, and endowed with considerable estates by Eynewulf, appears to have been first erected into a bishopric by Edward the Elder, in 905: the early history of the see is exceedingly obscure, but it would appear that Aldhelm, abbot of Glastonbury, was first appointed to the see of Wells, which then extended over the county of Somerset. Edward the Confessor appointed Giso his chaplain to be the 13th bishop, and added to its possessions the extensive domains belonging to Harold, earl of Wessex. During the absence of Giso at Rome, where he was consecrated, Harold plundered the church and resumed his possessions, and subsequently through the influence of the queen, his sister, procured the banishment of Giso. After the conquest, Bishop Giso was recalled from exile, and reinstated in all the former possessions of the bishopric. Under him the number of canons and wealth of the see were increased, and the buildings extended. The first bishop of whom there is any certain account is John de Villula, who, before his elevation to the mitre, is said to have practised physic at Bath, and by that means to have earned the means of purchasing the see from the rapacious Rufus. This was about the year 1091. As soon as he obtained his ecclesiastical dignity, De Villula removed the episcopal seat from Wells to Bath, whether with the object of still continuing to pursue his original profession, we do not know, but, at any rate, not without all the opposition in their power from the subordinate functionaries of the former church. The act, indeed, was the occasion of bitter and long protracted animosity between the Wells and Bath establishments; whose disputes were rather appeased for the moment than finally settled by the decision of De Villula's successor, Bishop Robert, about the year 1139, that the diocesan should be styled Bishop of Bath and Wells, and be enthroned, on his admission, in both churches. De Villula had thrown aside the old title altogether, and called himself bishop of Bath only. But although this prelate is not spoken of in very laudatory terms in the chronicles of his church, and his slight regard for the more ancient seat of his bishopric, in comparison with the city in which he had been accustomed to exercise his lay-functions, seems to have been strongly enough manifested, he was probably a person of much greater merit than his detractors would lead us to conclude. From his successful practice as a physician, we may suppose that in learning and scientific knowledge he was considerably beyond his age. Notwithstanding, too, what is reported of the way in which he obtained his bishopric, he does not appear to have been deficient in the munificence becoming his place. He built, out of his revenues, a new church at Bath, being the structure which preceded the present abbey church. At Wells, however, he allowed the cathedral to fall to ruin; and he also gave great offence, not unnaturally, to the canons, by pulling down a cloister, hall, and dorter, or lodging-place, which Bishop Giso had built for them, and erecting a residence for himself on their site. It must be confessed that he would seem to have carried matters with rather a high hand.—De Villula died in 1123, and was succeeded by Bishop Robert, already mentioned, who repaired or rebuilt the cathedral which his predecessor had allowed to go to decay. After him Reginald Fitz-Joceline, archdeacon of Salisbury, was appointed to the see. This prelate, who was afterwards elected archbishop of Canterbury, though he died before his actual removal to that see, obtained from King Richard I. a strange grant, the original of which is still preserved, giving him and his successors the right of keeping dogs for hunting over all the county of Somerset, as fully, so it runs, as any of his predecessors had ever enjoyed the same.—Lavaricus was succeeded in 1205 by Joceline de Welles, under whom the monks petitioned the court of Rome to be restored to their ancient government by an abbot, an indulgence which they obtained, on condition of relinquishing to the bishop a considerable portion of their revenue. Joceline then assumed the title of bishop of Bath and Wells, which has ever since been retained by his successors. For some time after the death of Joceline, the monks of Bath frequently elected the bishops, thereby giving rise to great dissatisfaction on the part of the canons of Wells, and the dispute was finally settled by an appeal to the pope, who decided that the right was divided equally between both parties. At the Reformation, the chapter of Bath was dissolved, and the election of the bishops has ever since been vested in the dean and chapter of Wells. At the dissolution the monastery of Wells was said to have been worth £1,989 12s. 8d. per annum. The ecclesiastical establishment now consists of a bishop, dean, precentor, chancellor, 3 archdeacons, (viz., of Wells, Bath, and Taunton,) a treasurer, a subdean, 49 prebendaries, 4 priests-vicar, 8 lay-vicars, organists, 6 choristers, and other officers. Many alienations having been made from the revenues of the bishopric, they are valued at £533 1s. 3d., and the common revenues of the church at £837 1s. 11d. The deanery, which is in the patronage of the crown, is rated at £116 7s. 6d.; the subdeanery is rated at £21 15s.; the chancellorship at £40 5s.; precentorship at £24 6s. 3d.; the treasurer's office at £62 2s. 3d.; the archdeaconry of Bath at £25 15s.; that of Wells at £144 2s. 11d., and that of Taunton at £83 7s. 6d.; all of these, with the prebends, are in the patronage of the bishop. The cathedral church is ded. to St Andrew, and is a magnificent cruciform structure, chiefly in the earliest style of English architecture. The foundation was laid by Wiffeline, second bishop of the diocese, though some consider Joceline de Welles to have founded it in the reign of Henry III. The entire body of the church, from the west end to the middle of the present choir, is supposed to be the work of Bishop Joceline de Welles. The two western towers, however, were only added, that on the south, about the end of the 14th century, by Bishop John de Harewell, and that on the north, about 20 years after, by Bishop Bubwith. Before this, the body of the church had been completed to its eastern extremity; and the great central tower had also been erected by Bishop Drokensford, soon after the commencement of the 14th century, in the reign of Edward III. This at least is Mr Britton's conjecture, from the style of the architecture. This is, in many respects, one of the most magnificent of our cathedrals; its form is the usual one of a cross extending from east to west about 371 feet; the transept measuring from north to south 135 feet. From the intersection springs a tower 160 feet in height, and two towers 126 feet in height from the western entrance. Perhaps the most remarkable portion of the building is the west front, which is covered with elaborate sculpture, with statues of kings, popes, cardinals, bishops, and abbots. In the centre are statues of the 12 apostles, below which is a sculptured representation of the resurrection in high relief. Altogether, there are introduced into the composition no fewer than 150 statues of the size of life, and above 300 others of smaller size. Notwithstanding the mutilation which nearly all of these sculptures have undergone, the effect of so vast a throng of figures, and of the elaborate decoration of every niche and buttress, is rich in the extreme. The central tower is of large dimensions, but from the elegance of its construction, has a remarkably light appearance. It is crowned with a pierced parapet, and decorated with lofty pinnacles. Each of the western towers is pierced with fine windows, and ornamented with lofty canopies rising from the buttresses; the nave and transepts are in the early English style of architecture, and the former is separated from the aisles by ranges of clustered columns supporting pointed arches. It is lighted from the sides by a range of clerestory windows in the later English style, and from the west by a magnificent window of beautiful stained glass. The choir, which is 108 feet in length, is in the decorated style. The glory of the cathedral is the Lady Chapel, placed, as usual, beyond the choir. Here the columns are formed of clusters of the most slender and elegant shafts, crowned with capitals of exquisite richness and beauty; while all around is a profusion of the most elaborate ornament. As a whole, this chapel has been sometimes esteemed the most beautiful and perfect gem of ecclesiastical architecture in England. There are other chapels, some of them of great beauty in different parts of the cathedral; one of them contains an ancient clock formerly belonging to the abbey of Glastonbury, having an astronomical dial, and a moving train of knights in armour. The ancient font is preserved in the south transept. In the centre of the nave was interred King Ina, and in the middle of the choir is the grave of Bishop Joceline. In a chapel in the presbytery is the tomb of Bishop Beckington, on which is his effigy in alabaster. To the south of the building are the cloisters, forming three sides of a quadrangle, the western side of which was built by Bishop Beckington, the southern by Thomas Henry, treasurer of Wells and archdeacon of Cornwall, and the eastern by Bishop Bubwith. The chapter-house is an octagonal structure, 480 feet in circumference. Underneath is a crypt with a curiously groined roof, and connected with the chapter-room by a singularly constructed staircase. The episcopal palace is an ancient castellated mansion standing to the south of the cathedral; it is surrounded by a wall and moat, and communicates with the cathedral through a venerable gateway leading over a bridge. The great hall is now in ruins, having been destroyed, in the reign of Edward VI., for the sake of the materials. The building called the Vicar's close was erected by Walter de Hull, sometime a canon of the cathedral here, but was greatly improved and enlarged in 1348 by Bishop Ralph de Salopia. By this last, a college for the residence of the choristers and vicars was built and endowed at his private expense: under Bishop Beckington it was afterwards enlarged and enriched, he having built the gateways; that on the east communicates with the cathedral by means of a long covered passage, with a flight of steps at either end. The east and west sides are occupied by dwelling-houses; on the north are the chapel and library, and on the south is a wall with a buttery and similar offices annexed. The revenue of this college was estimated, in the 26th year of Hen. VIII, at £73 10s. 9½d., and not having suffered confiscation at the general dissolution of religious houses in the latter part of the reign of the same monarch, it was again remodelled in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and by her charter the number of vicars was required to be not less than 14, nor more than 20. The deanery is situated near the west gate, which is an ancient edifice, and the principal entrance to the city on the road from Bath. It is a handsome structure, and was erected by Dean Gunthorp about the time of Henry VII., that monarch having been entertained by the founder on his return from a visit to the western counties of England. In allusion to the name of the founder, many guns are carved on different parts of the walls and gateways.

Benevolent Institutions, &c.—The parish of St Cuthbert includes the greater part of the city, and the surrounding hamlets being about 7 miles in circuit. The in-parish is in the peculiar jurisdiction of the bishop, and the out-parish in that of the dean. The living is a vicarage rated at £33 13s. 6d., and in the patronage of the dean and chapter. The church, which is ded. to St Cuthbert, is in the later style of English architecture, with an embattled tower of singular beauty, which is strengthened with angular buttresses, and crowned with pinnacles. The whole of the exterior is of a remarkably elegant design, and highly ornamented. The upper part of the tower, from the loftiness and lightness of the windows, has much of the character of a lantern. The interior, consisting of a nave, aisles, and choir, is in some respects of a less decorated character than the exterior, and contains many ancient monuments and mural tablets. Several sepulchral chapels are distributed around it, some of which, from the style of architecture, are conjectured to be of more ancient date than the greater part of the church itself. The Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists, have places of worship here. In 1711, Mr Archd. Harper founded almshouses for five decayed wool-combers of the city. The endowment consists of property at present yielding about £70 per annum, from which the inmates receive five shillings per week during the summer, and one shilling per week additional during the winter. The buildings comprise apartments and a common room. In 1688, Mr Walter Brick founded almshouses for decayed burghesses to be appointed by the bishop. In Priests'-Row are almshouses for six aged women, founded in 1614 by Mr Henry Llewellyn; the endowment yields about £170 per annum, which is appropriated to the support of the inmates, and four aged widows not resident in the almshouses; each of these has an allowance of 5s. 6d. per week, 5s. yearly for coal, 12s. 6d. on St Thomas's day, and £1 every two years for clothes. Here is an hospital for 18 aged men, 12 aged women, and a chaplain, founded in the beginning of the 15th century by Bishop Bubwith, and extended with additional endowments by Bishops Still, Beckington, and Bourne. The endowment amounts at present to about £400 per annum, from which each of the inmates receives a weekly dole of 4s. 6d. in summer, and 5s. in winter, with a supply of coal, clothes, and other necessaries. The buildings comprise a small chapel, a common room, and separate apartments for each of the inmates. In 1654, Mrs Mary Barkham, Mr Adrian Hickes, and Mr Phillip Hodges, founded the united charity school, and endowed it with property now yielding £500 per annum. In this school are educated 34 boys and 20 girls, 20 of each sex being clothed; the girls are taught needle work, and placed out at service. A premium of £10 is given with each boy on entering his apprenticeship, and an additional sum of £10 at the termination of the fourth year of their servitude. At the expiration of the term each receives a sum of £5 on the production of a certificate of good conduct. In the division of Southover is a wool-comber's shop, forming part of the remains of a priory ded. to St John, which was founded in 1206 by Hugh, archdeacon of Wells, afterwards bishop of Lincoln. At the dissolution the revenues amounted to £41 3s. 6d. Among the eminent individuals who have been prelates of the see, are Cardinal Wolsey and Archbishop Laud. In the 16th century the celebrated Polydore Virgil held one of the archdeaconries. Distance from London, 120 m. W. by S.; from Bath, 19 m. S.W.; from Bristol, 19 m. S.

WELLS-FORUM, a hundred in the co. of Somerset, situated near the east side of the county, containing 10 parishes, and, in 1831, 11,420 inhabitants.

WELLSBOROUGH, an extra-parochial liberty situated within the parish of Sibson, hundred of Sparkenhoe, co. of Leicester. The returns are included in those of Sibson. Distance from Market-Bosworth, 3 m. W. by S.

WELNETHAM (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of Thedwestry, co. of Suffolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, rated at £9 15s. 7½d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of Sir H. E. Bunbury, Bart. Here was formerly a priory of Crouched friars, subordinate to the principal house of that order near the tower of London. Distance from Bury-St-Edmund's, 4 m. S.S. by E. Pop., in 1801, 222, in 1831, 422. A. P., £1,851.

WELNETHAM (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of Thedwestry, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, rated at £4 13s. 4d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of Sir Charles Davers, Bart. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Bury-St-Edmund's, 4 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 142; in 1831, 180. A. P., £869.

WELNEY, a chapelry in the parish of Upwell, partly in the hundred of Wisbeach, isle of Ely, co. of Cambridge, and partly in that of Clackclose, co. of Norfolk. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, not in charge, and subordinate to the rectory of Upwell. This is suspected to have been the site of a Roman station from the number of coins, urns, &c.

which have been discovered. Distance from March, 6 m. E.N.E. That portion which is in the co. of Cambridge, contained, in 1801, 268 inhabitants; in 1831, 338. A. P., £732. That portion which is in the co. of Norfolk, contained, in 1801, 222 inhabitants; in 1831, 467. A. P., £2,543.

WELSHPOOL, or POOL, anciently TRALLWNY, a market-town and parish, locally situated in the hundreds of Pool and Cawra, co. of Montgomery, North Wales, but having separate jurisdiction. The parish, which is all inclosed, is divided into upper, middle, and lower sections; the upper containing the townships of Dyserth, Strjdan-Fechan, Frallwn-Gollen, Tyddyn-Prydd, and Cyfronidd; the middle consists of the town of Welshpool; and the lower comprises the townships of Gyngrog-fawr, Llannerch-luddol, Tref-nant fechan, and Westtown. The town is situated near the banks of the Severn, in the vicinity of the Montgomeryshire canal. The principal street consists of respectable houses, built of brick, and ascends the front of a gentle eminence, at the foot of which is the canal. Here are two good inns, and in the vicinity are many handsome villas. The canal communicates with Chester and Liverpool, and two additional canals are in progress, through which a communication will be opened with London and Birmingham. The river is navigable here during several months of the year. The surrounding country is fertile and well-wooded. This was anciently a borough, and contributed with Montgomery in returning a member to parliament, but was disfranchised in 1798. —Here is the county-hall, which is a handsome building, lately erected by subscription. The town is governed by two bailiffs, a recorder, and high steward, with aldermen and burgesses. The two bailiffs are justices of the peace, and are entitled to hold a borough court for the recovery of debts to any amount. The magistrates for the county hold the great sessions for Montgomeryshire here every spring and autumn; and the petty-sessions for the hundred of Cawra. Lord Clive is lord of the manor, and holds courts leet and baron annually. The inhabitants are partly employed in the manufacture of flannels, for which a market is held every second week on Thursday, at which webs are sold to the annual value of £200,000. Thursday is market-day, on which extensive sales of grain are effected; and fairs are held on the second Monday in March, Palm-Monday, June 5th, first Monday after July 10th, September 12th, and November 16th.—Living, a discharged vicarage in the dio. of St Asaph, rated at £13 5s. 2½d., and in patronage of the bishop of St Asaph. The great tithes, which were granted by Cardinal Wolsey to the dean and canons of Christ church, Oxford, belonged originally to the abbey of Ystrad-marshall. Here is a free school with a small endowment. Here is a school on Dr Bell's system, also a Sunday school held in the parish church. A dispensary for the benefit of the poor has lately been established by subscription. The church has been erected since the times of the civil war, and contains no monuments of any interest. It is ded. to St Mary. It is only remarkable for not being built in conformity with the points of the compass, which may be accounted for from the situation of the ground on which it stands, which rises immediately above it on the north-west, and is so steep that the upper part of the churchyard is on a level with the roof. The manufacturing of Welsh flannels is principally confined to Newtown, Llanidloes, and the upper parts of the county, where it employs most of the population; but it is all brought down to Welshpool by the manufacturers, to which the wholesale dealers from Shrewsbury and other places resort; a large proportion of the wool is the produce of the county, the higher parts of which are chiefly occupied by extensive sheep-walks, but some is brought from the neighbouring counties. A small portion of the wools used for army clothing, which are manufactured in Merionethshire, are also brought hither for sale. Here is the ancient palace of Castell-Côch. "It is built of red sandstone, and occupies the summit of an eminence, commanding a view of the town and the rich vale of the Severn; the view is terminated by the Freldyn hills, on the loftiest of which stands Rodney's column. The style of the building is formal and quaint. There are inner and outer courts, and other appendages of baronial greatness. Hanging gardens—the taste and fashion of a different age and climate—adorn the southern front, which is approached by successive flights of steps cut in the solid rock, and protected by heavy ornamented balustrades. The park is spacious and beautiful, affording many exquisite passages of forest and general sylvan scenery. The little dark pool, whence the hundred and town are supposed to borrow their appellations, is situated within the demesne, at a small distance from the private gate leading into the High-street. Castell-Côch was the chief residence of the princes of Powis, and passed, by the marriage of Hawys-Gadarn, the last Welsh heiress of the line, to the Charltons of Apley; it was again transferred by marriage to the family of Grey, who sold it to the Herberts, now earls of Powis, and proprietors of vast possessions in this county." Here are traces of the ancient encampment of Caractacus, where he maintained the last struggle for British liberty. The learned Dr Morgan, afterwards bishop of St Asaph, was once vicar of this parish. Distance from London, 171 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 3296; in 1831, 4538. A. P., £8,989.

WELTON, a parish in the wapentake of Lawress, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged vicarage, rated at £7 6s. 8d., in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean and chapter of Lincoln, and in patronage of the five prebendaries of Welton, in the cathedral church of Lincoln. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Lincoln, 6 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 380; in 1831, 516. A. P., £3,157.

WELTON, a parish in the hundred of Fawsley, co. of Northampton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £7, returned at £130 6s. 8d., and in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Andrew. Eight pounds per annum are appropriated to the education of poor children, and a Sunday school is endowed with £7 10s. per annum, the funds being derived from charity lands. The parish is crossed by the Wailing-street, and at its south-eastern extremity the Grand junction and Union canals meet. Distance from Daventry, 3 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 485; in 1831, 600. A. P., £2,935.

WELTON, a township in the parish of Ovingham, eastern division of the ward of Tindale, co. of Northumberland. It stands on the line of Adrian's wall, and was the royal villa of King Oswy, and the place where Penda and Segbert were baptized by Finan, bishop of Lindisfarne. Distance from Hexham, 9 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 90; in 1831, 69.

WELTON, a parish in the wapentake of Howdenshire, E. R. of the co. of York. Living, a vicarage in the peculiar jurisdiction of the court of Howdenshire, rated at £23, and in patronage of the king. The church is situated on rising ground in the centre of the village, and is a neat edifice of stone, ded. to St Helen. It consists of a nave, chancel, north aisle, and south transept; in the centre is a very large tower, crowned with battlements and crocketed pinnacles; the west front of the church has a projecting porch, and a large pointed window of three lights; on the apex of the roof is a foliated cross; the south side of the nave has one window of three lights; the same side of the chancel has three square-headed windows of two lights, with trefoil heads. The church is said to have been founded in the reign of William Rufus, but this portion appears to be of the reign of Richard I. The east window is pointed, of four lights, with exquisite tracery in the sweep, principally trefoils and quatrefoils. The north side has three windows of three lights, with trefoil heads. The nave is separated from the north aisle by two pointed arches, resting on octagonal pillars, the arches between the body and the transepts and chancel are similar. Over the north transept is a gallery; the font is octagonal, particularly shallow, though evidently of considerable antiquity. On the south side of the chancel is a piscina within a pointed arch, and supported by an octagonal column. In the north aisle, placed upright, is the effigy of a templar, much defaced, and the arms and the shield obliterated. Outside the church, on a slab, is the following inscription:—

"Here lieth he,
Ould Jeremy,
Who have eight times married bee;
But now in his ould age,
He lies in his cage,
Under the grass so green; which Jeremiah Simpson departed this life in the 84th year of his age, in the year of our Lord, 1719."—The village is very neatly built. Here is a chapel for Wesleyan Methodists, built about 1810; and a national school, established about five years ago. In this parish is Welton-house, the seat of R. Raikes; and Eastdale, the highly picturesque seat of R. Raikes, jun. Esq. North of the town is a romantic and highly picturesque glade, called Welton-dale; it is about a mile in length, and winds between two hills covered with wood. At the extremity is a small circular temple, of the Doric order, surmounted by a dome; it was erected by R. Raikes, Esq., in 1819, as a mausoleum for his family. The whole of this dale has a peculiarly rich and varied appearance, partly from the arrangement of the trees, but mainly from its romantic situation. From the road from Welton to Brantingham are some of the most extensive and varied prospects in the county; from one point, York, Lincoln, and Beverley minsters, and Howden church, are visible to the naked eye on a clear day. The windings of the Humber, and the diversified country about Howden, constitute prominent objects in the landscape. Distance from South Cave, $3\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 449; in 1831, 672. A. P., £3,149. In this parish is the chapelry of Melton. Pop., in 1801, 98; in 1831, 133. A. P., £1,256.

WELTON-IN-THE-MARSH, a parish in the Wold division of the wapentake of Candlehoe, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £14 8s. 9d., returned at £70, and, in 1829, in the patronage of Mr Massingbard. Church ded. to St Martin. Distance from Spilsby, 5 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 184; in 1831, 363. A. P., £2,458.

WELTON-LE-WOLD, a parish in the Wold division of the hundred of Louth-Eske, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £11 12s. 1d., returned at £110, and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Martin. It is 4 m. W. from Louth. Pop., in 1801, 101; in 1831, 241. A. P., £2,373.

WELWICK, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of Holderness, E. R. of the co. of York. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of the E. R. and dio. of York, rated at £6 13s. 4d., returned at £80, and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church—which is ded. to St Mary—consists of a nave and aisles, and a low tower at the west end. The south side of the nave is made into four divisions by buttresses, in one of which is a modern brick porch, with an ancient niche containing a statue of the Virgin and child. Under the window, in the third division, is a canopy and much ornamental sculpture, corresponding with a beautiful monument inside the church; the clerestory of the nave has three pointed windows of two lights. The south side of the chancel has two large pointed windows, and the east end one of four lights, with tracery in the sweep of the arch, now filled up. The north side is similar to the south. The nave is divided from the aisles by four pointed windows, resting on octagonal columns. The arch between the nave and the chancel is filled with boards, which rest on a neat oak-screen of delicate workmanship; the inside of the upper part of this screen has a water-colour painting of two men on horseback, meeting in a wood, and a long quotation from scripture in black letter. The font is an octagonal basin, situated at the west end of the nave. In the south aisle is a magnificent monument, supposed to have been removed from Burstall abbey, which, though now in a state of dilapidation, has a grand and imposing appearance; it is supposed by some to have been erected in memory of John de Fortibus, by others of William le Gros, earl of Albemarle, but time has obliterated every means of determining this point. It consists of a recess made by a pointed arch, externally enriched with crockets and internally with groining, of a light and elegant character; on each side is a buttress terminating in an elegant niche, each containing a female figure, and surmounted with a crocketed pediment and finial. The upper part of this monument has numerous panels, loaded to superabundance with foliage of great beauty; attached to the wall are several shields of arms, including those of England and Edward the Confessor. On the altar-tomb, within the recess, is the effigy of a female figure in robes. Here are places of worship belonging to the Society of Friends and Wesleyan Methodists. Distance from Patrington, 2 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 312; in 1831, 401. A. P., £5,314.

WELWYN, a parish in the hundred of Broadwater, co. of Hertford. The village consists of one principal street of well-built houses, through which runs the great road from London to York. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £21, and in patronage of the warden and fellows of All Souls college, Oxford. The church—which is ded. to St Mary—contains an altar-piece of embroidered work, made by Lady Betty Young, wife of Dr Young, author of the 'Night Thoughts,' and many years rector of this parish. He and his lady lie buried under the communion table. The Huntingdonian and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. Here is a national school for about 50 boys; also a charity school, founded and endowed by Dr Young, in which 16 poor boys are clothed, and instructed in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and in the principles of the Christian religion as received by the Established church. Distance from Hertford, 8 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 1015; in 1831, 1369. A. P., £3,922.

WEM, a parish in the hundred of Pimhill, extending into the Whitechurch division of the hundred of Bradford (North), co. of Salop. It comprises the market-town of Wem, the chapelries of Edstaston and Newtown, and the townships of Aston, Cotton, Horton, Lacon, Lowe with Ditches, Northwood, Soultou, Tille, and Woolverley. This place is supposed by Horsley to have been the site of the ancient Roman station Rutenium, but this conjecture is utterly unsupported by historical evidence. At the conquest, William Pandulph, who held 28 manors of Earl Roger de Montgomery, fixed his residence here, and made it the head of a barony; but he did not become a baron of the realm till, on the forfeiture of the estates of Robert de Belesme, son of Earl Roger, for rebellion in the reign of Henry I., he held directly of the crown. In 1665, the barony was purchased by Daniel Wycharley, father of the poet, by whom it was again sold to Judge Jesfries, created baron of Wem in 1686, being the first who enjoyed that dignity by patent. In the parliamentary war, Wem was the first town in the county which declared for the parliament, and was attacked in 1648 by a party of the king's troops under Lord Capell, who were repulsed by the small garrison, aided, it is said, by the active exertions of the women. In the course of the war, the garrison plundered the houses of such neighbouring proprietors as were attached to the royal cause, and thus enriched the inhabitants. A dreadful fire took place in 1677, in which the church, market-house, and many buildings, were destroyed; the loss of property being calculated at not less than £23,000. The town, consisting of one spacious street, with several smaller cross streets and lanes, stands on a level ground near the northern bank of the river Roden. The inhabitants are partly employed in the manufacture of leather and in milking. In 1206, King John granted a market to be held on Sunday, but leave was obtained, in the 24th of Edward III., to have it transferred to Thursday, on which day it is still held. The market-house is a small edifice of brick, erected in the beginning of last century. Fairs for linen, cattle, and swine, are held on March 4th, May 6th and 20th, June 29th, September 30th, and November 22d. The town appears to have formerly been incorporated, but whether by charter or by prescriptive usage, is not known. A copy of court-roll, dated 9th Edward VI., proves the existence of the incorporation prior to that time. It is governed by two bailiffs of very limited authority, and there are about 80 burgesses the possessors of burghage tenements. The bailiffs have no magisterial power, but the town is within the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the county. The duties of the bailiffs consist chiefly in the returning of the jury to attend the courts leet, in preventing fraud in the use of weights and measures, and in being present at public proclamations. A court-leet is held annually after Michaelmas, at which one of the bailiffs is nominated by the steward of the lord of the manor, and the other by the borough-jury. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £26. 4s. 4d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of the marquess of Cleveland. The real value of the rectory is stated to be £500 per annum. The church—which is ded. to St Peter and St. Paul, was rebuilt after the fire of 1677, and contains but little of the original edifice. The Baptists and Presbyterians have places of worship here. Here is a free school founded and endowed in 1650 for the benefit of indigent children, by Thos. Adams, Esq., afterwards lord-mayor of London, and created a baronet. There are three masters, the appointment of which is vested in the justices. This school enjoys the benefit of two exhibitions, founded by Mr Carewswall. The parish is bounded on the north-west by the Ellesmere and Chester canal. Distance from London, 163 m. N.W.; and from Shrewsbury, 11 m. N. by E. Pop., in 1801, 3067; in 1831, 3967, of which the town of Wem contained 1932. A. P., £24,531.

WEMBDON, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of Petherton, co. of Somerset. It is situated near the western bank of the river Parret, which is here navigable. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £9 16s. 10d., and in the patronage of C. K. Tynte, Esq. Church ded. to St George. Pop., in 1801, 244; in 1831, 289. A. P., £7,397.

WEMBLEY, a hamlet in the parish of Harrow-on-the-Hill, co. of Middlesex. Distance from St Paul's cathedral, London, 10 m. N.W. by W.

WEMBURY, a parish in the hundred of Plympton, co. of Devon. It is situated on the western bank of the river Yealm, at the point at which it falls into the English channel, which bounds the parish on the west and south. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter, rated at £28 13s. 4d., returned at £29 9s. 4d., and in patronage of the dean and canons of Windeor. Chapel ded. to St Werburgh. Here are almshouses, founded and endowed by Sir Warwick Hill in 1625, for the use of ten poor inmates. Distance from Earl's-Plympton, 5½ m. S. by W. Pop., in 1801, 390; in 1831, 652. A. P., £5,533.

WEMBORTHY, a parish in the hundred of North Tawton with Winkley, co. of Devon. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter, rated at £11 13s. 4d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. Mr Johnson. Church ded. to St Michael. Distance from Chumleigh, 4 m. S.S. W. Pop., in 1801, 323; in 1831, 378. A. P., £1,360.

WENDERTON, a hamlet in the parish of Wingham, co. of Kent.

WENDLEBURY, a parish in the hundred of Ploughley, co. of Oxford. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, rated at £11 9s. 4d., and in patronage of the dean and canons of Christ church, Oxford. Church ded. to St Giles. Distance from Bicester, 2½ m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 146; in 1831, 196. A. P., £2,085.

WENDLING, a parish in the hundred of Launditch, co. of Norfolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, not in charge, returned at £36, and, in 1829, in patronage of T. W. Coke, Esq. Church ded. to St Peter and St Paul. Here was "An abbey of the Premonstratensian order, built by William de Wendling, clerk, before the 53d year of King Henry III., to the honour of the blessed Virgin Mary. Not long before the dissolution here were an abbot and four canons, who had revenues yearly worth £55 18s. 4d. The site was granted, 35th Henry VIII., to Robert Hogan, and in 16th Elizabeth, to Edward Dyer and H. Cressener."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Part of the church of this abbey was standing till within these few years, when it was taken down for the purpose of mending the roads. Distance from East Dereham, $4\frac{1}{2}$ m. W. Pop., in 1801, 229; in 1831, 347. A. P., £1,562.

WENDON-LOUGHTS, a parish in the hundred of Uttlesford, co. of Essex. Living, a discharged rectory with that of Elmdon annexed, within the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London, but in the peculiar jurisdiction of the commissary of Essex and Herts, concurrently with the consistorial court of the bishop of London, and rated at £9 10s. 10d. The patronage is with the rectory of Elmdon. Distance from Saffron-Walden, $5\frac{1}{2}$ m. W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 84; in 1831, 54. A. P., £673.

WENDONS-AMBO, a parish in the hundred of Uttlesford, co. of Essex. Living, a discharged vicarage with the rectory of Little Wendon annexed, within the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London, but in the peculiar jurisdiction of the commissary of Essex and Herts, concurrently with the consistorial court of the bishop of London, rated at £17, returned at £75, and, in 1829, in patronage of the marquess of Bristol. Church ded. to St Mary. "The parishes of Great and Little Wendon were united in 1662 by Bishop Sheldon, at the petition of the inhabitants of the two parishes, with the consent of the earl of Suffolk, patron of both churches. The church of Little Wendon, and the vicarage-house of Great Wendon, being ruinous, were both pulled down, and the parsonage-house of Little Wendon being in best repair, remains to the vicar of Wendons-Ambo, as he is styled in the act of union."—Morant's Essex. Distance from Saffron-Walden, 2 m. S.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 269; in 1831, 333. A. P., £1,576.

WENDOVER, a borough, without an incorporation, in the hundred of Aylesbury, co. of Buckingham. The manor has been in the possession of many different families, having, in the reign of Henry II., been granted to Faramus de Boulogne, and it afterwards came successively into the possession of the Flennees, Sir John Molins, Alice Perrers, to whom it was given by Edward III., and Thomas Holland, earl of Holland. Having again reverted to the crown, it was granted to a branch of the royal family, Edward, duke of York, in 1388, and from that time to 1564, continued attached to the crown, being enjoyed either by the reigning queen or by some junior branch. In that year we find it possessed by Sir Francis Knollys, in right of Catherine his wife, in which family it continued till 1660, when it was purchased by the Hampdens, and was held by them until the recent decease of the late lord. It is situated at the foot of the Chiltern hills, and is irregularly built, the houses being rather indifferently built. It is well supplied with water from wells in the vicinity. Lace-making is carried on to a considerable extent by the females of the town. In the neighbourhood is a large reservoir of about 70 acres, belonging to the Grand Junction canal, a branch of which extends to the town, along which coals are brought from Staffordshire for the supply of the town and its neighbourhood. Monday is market-day. The market was granted by a charter dated 1403, and confirmed in 1464. Fairs, chiefly for the sale of cattle, are held on the 13th May and 2d October. It is a borough by prescription, having returned two members to the parliament held in the 28th year of Edwd. I., and continued to do so until the 2d of Edward II., at which time the custom fell into disuse. About 300 years afterwards, in the 21st of James I., Mr Hakeville, a barrister, on searching the writs in the Tower, discovered the fact of its having formerly returned members, and measures were immediately taken by means of petitions to the commons, for the purpose of reassuming its dormant privileges. In this they were successful, although opposed by the influence of King James, who is said, on the occasion, to have declared "that he was troubled with too many burgesses already." Hampden, a name well known in the English history of that time, was returned for this place at five successive elections. The elective franchise was at that time vested in all housekeepers not in receipt of parochial aid, and the number of electors amounted to about 130, the constables being the officers by whom the writs were returned. Lord Carrington usually influenced the elections. By the reform act this place has been disfranchised. The petty sessions for the hundred are held here once a fortnight. Courts baron and leet are held occasionally by the lord of the manor, at which last are elected the constables. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £12 16s. 1d., and in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church stands about a mile from the town, and is ded. to St Mary. Here was formerly also a chapel ded. to St John the Baptist, which is now, however, desecrated. Part of the ruins are still visible. The Baptists and Independents have places of worship here. Here is a school, founded and endowed with £20 annual income by William Hill, in 1723, at which 20 poor children are instructed: also a national school established in 1816, held in a room over the market-place, and supported by annual subscriptions. This parish was, with the exception of the common of Bottendown hill, inclosed 1771 and 1794. Here were born Roger de Wendover, historiographer to Henry II., and Richard, bishop of Rochester, in the reign of Henry III. Distance from London, 36 m. N.W. by W.; and from Buckingham, 23 m. S.E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 1397; in 1831, 2008. A. P., £4,963.

WENDRON (Str), a parish in the western division of the hundred of Kerrier, co. of Cornwall. Living, a vicarage united with the curacy of Helston, in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter, rated at £26 19s. 4d., and in the patronage of the provost and fellows of Queen's college, Oxford. Church ded. to St Wendron. Here is a school with a small endowment, at which a few poor children are instructed in reading; as also two Sunday schools. It contains the borough of Helston. Distance from Helston, $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.E. by E. The pop., including the borough of Helston, in 1801, was 5254; in 1831, 8073. A. P., £8,870.

WENDY, a parish in the hundred of Arm-ingford, co. of Cambridge. Living, a discharged vicarage united with the perpetual curacy of Shingay, in the archd. and dio. of Ely, rated at £5 10s. 10d., returned at £42, and,
in 1829, in the patronage of Lord Sondes.
Distance from Royston, $6\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 109; in 1831, 126. A. P., £1,035.

WENFOE, a parish in the hundred of Dinas Powys, co. of Glamorgan, South Wales.
Living, a rectory in the dio. of Llandaff, rated at £13 7s. 1d., said to be worth about £350 per annum, and in the patronage of — Jenner, Esq., who possesses a mansion here built in a castellated style. The parish contains about 2000 acres of land. Distance from Cardiff, 5
m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 331; in 1831, 432.
A. P., £3,004.

WENHAM (GREAT or BURNX), a parish in the hundred of Sampford, co. of Suffolk.
Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £8 13s.
4d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev.
George H. Deane. Church ded. to St John.
Distance from Hadleigh, $4\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 170; in 1831, 181. A. P., £1,294.

WENHAM (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of Sampford, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged rectory united with that of Capel-St-Mary, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, and rated at £5 8s. 11d. The patronage is with the rectory of Capel-St-Mary.
Here is a granary which has been formed of part of the ruins of an old castle, which, from a date which has been discovered, is conjectured to have been either built or undergone considerable repair in the year 1569. Distance from Hadleigh, 5 m. S.E. by E. Pop., in 1831,
88. A. P., £1,507.

WENHASTON, a parish in the hundred of Blything, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and
dio. of Norwich, rated at £6 0s. 10d., returned at £107 10s. 2d., and in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Peter. Distance from Halesworth, 3 m. E.
S.E. Pop., including the hamlet of Mells, 578; in 1831, 1070. A. P., £2,580.

WENLOCK (LITTLE), a parish within the liberties of the borough of Wenlock, co. of Salop. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford, rated at £11 13s.
4d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Forester. The church—which is ded. to St Lawrence—has been considerably enlarged within these few years, having received a grant of £200 from the incorporated society for the building and enlarging of churches and chapels, towards defraying the expense of 500 additional free sittings. Coal, limestone, and iron, are found in the parish, the raising and preparing of which afford employment to many of the inhabitants. Distance from Wellington, $3\frac{1}{2}$ m.

S. Pop., in 1801, 980; in 1831, 1067. A.
P., £1,083.

WENLOCK (MUCH), a parish, market-town, and borough, the head of a liberty in the co. of Salop. It has separate and independent jurisdiction. This place existed in the time of the Britons, and was by them called Llan-Meillen, which signifies 'St Milburgh's church;' and in the Monasticon it is denominated Winnica or 'the Windy-place.' There was a nunnery established by the daughter of the king of Mercia about 680, from which may be dated the prosperity of the town. It suffered with most other places in that part of England, severely from the inroads of the Danes. The town consists principally of two long streets, at right angles to one another, and the houses are in general well-built of brick.
It is well supplied with water, and the streets are Macadamized; but it is not yet well lighted. It is said that large quantities of copper-ore were formerly raised here; but this branch is not now carried on, although limestone quarries are still wrought to a considerable extent. Monday is market-day, for which the town is indebted to the prior and other religious brethren. Fairs, chiefly for the hiring of farm servants, and the sale of horses, cattle, and other live stock, are held on the second Monday in March, and on the 12th of May; for sheep alone on the 5th of July, and for horned cattle, horses, sheep, pigs, &c., on the 17th of October and 4th of December. A charter of incorporation was granted to Wen-lock by Edward IV., which received confirmation and enlargement in the subsequent reigns;
it consists of a bailiff, a recorder, bailiff's peers,
a treasurer, a coroner, a town-clerk, a serjeantat-mace, and other officers. The bailiff, recorder, and two of the bailiff's peers are justices of the peace ex officio. The recorder holds his office for life, and the others are elected annually on Michaelmas day by a jury of the burgesses. The jurisdiction of these magistrates is extensive, comprising a district of 17 parishes, and the district of Posenall, which is extra-parochial. By their charter they are allowed to hold a court of common pleas every second Tuesday, as also an assize court for the trial of all criminals, not even excepting those who are suspected of capital crimes: this power is, however, seldom if ever used. A court of record is also held by the bailiff and recorder, at which debts of any amount may be recovered: as also a court of requests under the authority of an act passed in the 22d year of the reign of George III., for the better recovery of debts under 40s. The jurisdiction of this court extends over the parishes of Brosley, Benthall, Madeley-Barrow, Linley, Willey, Little Wenlock, and the extra-parochial district of Posenall. The lord of the manor holds annual courts at Michaelmas and Easter, at the former of which, parish constables are appointed. The guildhall is an ancient building of rather plain exterior, and consists of a timber frame-work resting upon plazas. The town returned one member to parliament in 1478, in the reign of Edward IV., and it afterwards acquired the privilege of sending two, who were elected by the burgesses, in number about 500, the writ being returned by the bailiff. It is remarkable as being the first borough which acquired the right of representation by charter from the king. The freedom is acquired by inheritance, and occasionally by election from a common hall. Under the old system Lord Forester and Sir W. W. Wynn usually influenced the returns. Under the provisions of the reform act, it continues to send two members, the number of electors being now upwards of 900. The bailiff is the returning officer. It is the head of a deanery, and the living, united with the perpetual curacies of Burton and Benthall, in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford, rated at £12 9s. 7d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Sir W. W. Wynn. The church is ded. to the Holy Trinity, and is an ancient structure, consisting of a chancel, with nave and aisles, the last separated from the two former by pointed arches, supported by rows of clustered columns. It is in a mixed style, being partly Norman and partly in the decorated style of English architecture. The general style bears some distant resemblance to that of the remains of the ancient abbey, of which the following account is taken from Bishop Tanner's Not. Mon.:—"St Milburga, daughter to King Merwald, founder of Leominster, and niece to Wolphere, king of Mercia, erected a nunnery here about the year 680, and presided as abbess over it. It was destroyed by the Danes, but restored by Leofric, earl of Chester, in the reign of Edward the Confessor; and being again decayed and forsaken, Roger of Montgomery, earl of Arundel, Chichester and Shrewsbury, a person of vast possessions in these parts, rebuilt and endowed this monastery in the 14th year of the reign of William the Conqueror, placing therein a prior and convent of Cluniac monks, who were looked upon as a cell to the house De Caritate in France, and suffered the same fate with other alien priories, till it was made 'prioratus indigena' in the 16th year of Richard II. It was dedicated to St Milburgh, who was said to have been here buried, and in the 26th year of Henry VIII., had revenues to the yearly value of £401 0s. 7d. clear, as Dugdale; and £434 1s. 2d. in the whole; and was granted, in the 36th year of the reign of the same monarch, to Augustine de Augustines." The splendid ruins of this monastery are still in existence. The south transept of the church is the most perfect portion remaining, the upper clerestory windows of the centre being still complete, exhibiting great elegance both in the design and workmanship. The wall of the north transept, which is still standing, proves that the design of both was the same, and that the execution of this also was alike remarkable for the same qualities. The great centre tower has long since disappeared; but the four massive piers, the bases of which are still in existence, clearly show that it must have been built on a scale of no ordinary magnificence and size. The entrance to the chapter-house is constructed of three arches in the most beautiful style of Norman design, and the hall of that building itself is exquisitely ornamented with ranges of clustered and spreading columns. One of the two cloisters which still remain is in the Norman style, the massive pillars of which are set on plinths of a circular form; the other is of the decorated style, and one of its most elegant specimens, the ceiling being richly groined, and the roof lofty; altogether it presents a whole which leads us to believe that it possessed few equals, in cathedral architecture, in the kingdom, presenting, as it does, specimens of English architecture, from the massive and solid Norman down to the more elegant and enriched decorated style. The lady chapel, situated as usual to the east of the choir, may be traced by its foundations, which seem to have been of a later date than the rest of the church. South-eastward of the great cloister was the house of the prior, which seems to have inclosed a quadrangular front, now occupied by a farmer. Fragments of this opulent monastery are scattered to a great distance from the site. Here is a circulating library, which was originally a library of theological works, left by one of the former vicars of the parish for the use of the parishioners. It is now supported by subscription. Here is a free school at which 12 boys are educated, partly supported by subscription, and partly by the interest of £200, bequeathed in 1778 by the Rev. Francis Southem; besides which, there are some other small endowments. Here are almshouses for the support of four poor widows. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from London, 148 m. N. W.; and from Shrewsbury, 10 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 1981; in 1831, 2424. A. P., £10,812.

WENNE (Sr), a parish in the hundred of Pyder, co. of Cornwall. Fairs for cattle are held at Tregonetha, within the parish, on the 25th of April and 1st of August. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter, rated at £16 6s. 8d., and, in 1829, in patronage of P. Rashleigh, Esq. Distance from St-Columb-Major, 4 m. N.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 358; in 1831, 649. A. P., £2,963.

WENNINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Chafford, co. of Essex. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London, rated at £8, and in the patronage of the bishop of London. Church ded. to St Peter. Great part of this parish is occupied by extensive marshes, extending to the south and west towards the river Thames. Distance from Purfleet, 2 m. N. by W. Pop., in 1801, 91; in 1821, 127. A. P., £2,918.

WENNINGTON, a hamlet in the parish of Abbot's-Ripton, co. of Huntingdon. Distance from Huntingdon, 5 m. N. Pop. returned with the parish.

WENNINGTON, a township in the parish of Melling, hundred of Lonsdale, south of the Sands, co. palatine of Lancaster. Distance from Kirkby-Lonsdale, 6½ m. S. by E. Pop., in 1801, returned with the parish; in 1831, 165. A. P., £1,593.

WENSLEY, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of Hang, N. R. of the co. of York. It includes the chapelry of Bolton-Castle; the townships of Preston-under-Scar, Redmire, and Wensley; and the market-town of Leybourn. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of York, rated at £49 9s. 9½d., and, in 1839, in the patronage of Lord Bolton. Church ded. to the Holy Trinity. The parish is situated on both sides of the river Ure, of the bridge over which Leland says in his Itinerary,—"The fayre bridge of 3 or 4 arches that is on Ure, at Wenscelaw, a mile or more above Middleham, was made 200 yer ago and more, by one called Alwyne, parson of Wenscelaw." It has recently undergone repair, and been enlarged, at the expense of the north riding. Here is Bolton-hall, the seat of the Hon. T. O. Powlett, which was built in 1618 by the marquess of Winchester, first duke of Bolton. It is a handsome edifice, and stands nearly in the centre of Wensley dale. The remains of Bolton castle still stand on the brow of a hill, on the northern side of Wensley dale, which was built by Richard I. Scrope, chancellor of England in the reign of Richard II. This prince granted his license to Richard I. Scrope, chevalier, to found a chantry of six chaplains in this castle, and endowed it with the yearly rent of £106 13s. 4d. This castle was for some time the scene of the tyrannical imprisonment of the beautiful and unfortunate Mary of Scotland. Elizabeth, probably suspecting Lord Scrope's fidelity, from his connexion with the turbulent duke of Norfolk, removed Mary to Tatbury castle, and placed her under the surveillance of the earl of Shrewsbury. During the civil wars this castle long held out for the royal cause, under Lord Scrope and a party of the Richmond militia, against a large body of parliamentary troops, but at last surrendered on honourable terms, Nov. 5th, 1645. Emmanuel Lord Scrope, who died in the reign of Charles I., was the last of this family who inhabited the castle, as this branch then became extinct through default of male heirs. The building of this stately edifice occupied 16 years, and cost the family £12,000. It is the property of Lord Bolton—from whom the name is taken—having descended to that family by the marriage of one of his ancestors with a daughter of Emmanuel Lord Scrope, and earl of Sutherland. From the damage it received during the siege not being properly repaired, the tower on the north-east angle became so much injured, that on the 19th of November, 1761, it fell to the ground. But though the north and east sides are mostly in ruins, the west front is in good repair. Distance from Middleham, 3 m. N.W. by W. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 237; in 1831, 268. A. P., £3,351. Total pop. of the parish, in 1831, 2266. The remaining returns will be found under the several heads.

WENSLEY, a township in the parish of Darley, wapentake of Wirksworth, and co. of Derby. Distance from Matlock, 3¼ m. W.N.W. Pop., including the hamlet of Snitterton, in 1801, 620; in 1831, 671. A. P., £3,868.

WENTLOOG, a hundred at the western extremity of the co. of Monmouth, on the borders of the counties of Brecknock and Glamorgan, containing 17 parishes. The Monmouthshire canal, and the rivers Scry and Ewby, cross this hundred. Pop., in 1831, 16,191; in 1831, 29,476.

WENTBRIDGE, a hamlet partly in the parish of Badsworth, partly in that of Darrington, and partly in that of Kirk-Smeaton, W. R. of the co. of York. Distance from Pontefract, 4½ m. S.E. by S.

WENTNOR, a parish in the hundred of Purlow, co. of Salop. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford, rated at £7 2s. 11d., and in the patronage of the dean and canons of Christ church, Oxford. Church ded. to St Michael. Distance from Bishop's-castle, 5½ m. N.E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 452; in 1831, 707. A. P., £3,026.

WENTWORTH, or WINGFORD, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of Witchford, Isle of Ely, co. of Cambridge. Living, a rectory, a peculiar of the bishop of Ely, rated at £10, and in patronage of the dean and chapter of Ely. Distance from Ely, 4½ m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 115; in 1831, 144. A. P., £2,233.

WENTWORTH, a chapelry and township in the parish of Wath-upon-Dearn, northern division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, W. R. of the co. of York. The chapel is a perpetual curacy, in the archd. and dio. of York, rated at £27 10s. 5d., returned at £120, and, in 1839, in patronage of Earl Fitzwilliam. The chapel—which is ded. to the Holy Trinity—is a small but neat edifice, with a nave, chancel, and north aisle, and an embattled tower at the west end. In the interior are several monuments of different members of the Wentworth family; in particular, a graceful figure of a man in armour kneeling, erected to the memory of Thomas Wentworth, earl of Strafford, &c., who died in 1641. Here are also some figures in alabaster. Wentworth-house, the seat of Earl Fitzwilliam, is situated between Barnsley and Rotherham, and in point of extent is not excelled by any in the county. The principal facade is upwards of 600 feet in front, and has in the centre a splendid style-bate 60 feet in length. The interior corresponds in magnificence, and the gallery of paintings is justly celebrated, containing pictures by Titian, Guido, the Carracci, Paul Giordano, and the celebrated one by Vandyck of Lord Strafford and his secretary, considered by many the best painting by that master in existence. The park contains 1500 acres of ground. South of the mansion, on a considerable elevation, is the splendid mausoleum, erected to the memory of the late marquess of Rockingham, on the completion of which, in August, 1788, Mr Burke's taste in epitaph, or rather character-writing, was put in requisition. The interior of the base is a dome supported by twelve Doric columns, with niches for the statues of the deceased nobleman and his friends, among whom the distinguished writer of the following piece now takes his stand. The inscription, for force, precision, and fitness, has, perhaps, like the mausoleum itself, no equal among the mortuary remains of the country:—

“CHARLES, MARQUIS OF ROCKINGHAM,

“A statesman in whom constancy, fidelity, sincerity, and directness, were the sole instruments of his policy. His virtues were his arts. A clear, sound, unadulterated sense, not perplexed with intricate design, or disturbed by ungoverned passion, gave consistency, dignity, and effect, to all his measures. In opposition, he respected the principles of government; in administration, he provided for the liberties of the people. He employed his moments of power in realizing every thing which he had promised in a popular situation. This was the distinguishing mark of his conduct. After twenty-four years of service to the public, in a critical and trying time, he left no debt of just expectation unsatisfied.

“By his prudence and patience he brought together a party which it was the great object of his labours to render permanent, not as an instrument of ambition, but as a living depository of principle.

“The virtues of his public and private life were not in him of different characters. It was the same feeling, benevolent, liberal mind that, in the internal relations of life, conciliates the unfeigned love of those who see men as they are, which made him an inflexible patriot. He was devoted to the cause of liberty, not because he was haughty and intractable, but because he was beneficent and humane.

“Let his successors, who from this house behold this monument, reflect that their conduct will make it their glory or their reproach. Let them be persuaded that similarity of manners, not proximity of blood, gives them an interest in this statue.

“Remember—Resemble—Persevere.”

Many temples and similar ornamental buildings break in upon the eye at every angle; and a Doric column was erected by the late marquess of Rockingham, in commemoration of the acquittal of his friend Admiral Keppel. Here is a school at which 50 are educated and partly clothed, endowed with £8 per annum, the bequest, in 1716, of Thomas Wentworth, £3 left by Anna Pickles in 1669, and £12 by Earl Fitzwilliam. Distance from Rotherham, 5½ m. N.W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 978; in 1831, 1394. A. P., £13,354.

WEOBLEY, a parish, market-town, and borough, not incorporated, in the hundred of Stretford, co. of Hereford. The town—which is situated on the road from Hereford to Knighton—consists of one principal street. The lord of the manor holds an annual court, for the recovery of debts under £2, in October. The petty-sessions for the hundred are held here by the magistrates of the county. This borough sent members to all the seven parliaments in the reign of Edward I., and afterwards having neglected to do so till 1640, it recovered the right by order of the house of commons. The voters consisted, before the reform act came into operation, of “the inhabitants of the ancient vote-houses of twenty shillings per annum, resident during 40 days previous to the election, and paying scot and lot, also in such owners of ancient vote-houses paying scot and lot as shall be resident in such houses previous to the time of election.” Under these regulations the number of voters approached one hundred, the writ being returned by the constables. Under the reform act it has been disfranchised. Thursday is market-day; and a fair is held on Holy Thursday for horned cattle and horses; and another three weeks after for coarse linen, cattle, &c. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford, rated at £9 1s., and in the patronage of the bishop of Hereford. Church ded. to St Peter and St Paul. Here is a free grammar school for the use of children within the parishes of Weobley and Wormesley, and the village of Wooton, in the parish of King’s-Pion, with an annual income of £20, arising from the bequest of William Crother in 1655, who left the above sum chargeable on the Wormesley-Grange and another estate in King’s-Pion. Here is also a national school for children of both sexes, which chiefly derives its support from annual subscriptions. Here are some remains of an ancient castle to the south of the town, which, in the civil wars between Stephen and the empress Matilda, was held out for a considerable time by William Talbot, for the interest of the latter, and finally taken by Stephen. Distance from London, 147 m. N.W. by W.; and from Hereford, 12 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 606; in 1831, 919. A. P., £3,658.

WEONARD’S (St), a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Wormelaw, co. of Hereford. Living, a perpetual curacy, annexed and subordinate to the vicarage of Lugwardine, in the archd. and dio. of Hereford, and rated at £20. The patronage is with the vicarage of Lugwardine. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Ross, 7½ m. W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 465; in 1831, 564. A. P., £4,148.

WEREHAM, a parish in the hundred of Clackclose, co. of Norfolk. Living, a perpetual curacy, united with that of Wretton, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £10 2s. 6d., returned at £147 6s. 5d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of Edward R. Pratt, Esq. Church ded. to St Margaret. “In this parish was a Benedictine priory, as ancient as the time of King Richard I., or King John, founded by the earls of Clare, subordinate to the abbot and convent of Mounstroll, or Mustrell, in the diocese of Amiens, who sold it, in the year 1321, to one Hugh Scarlet of Lincoln, and he parted with it again to the Lady Elizabeth de Burgo, who gave it to the abbey of West Dereham. It was dedicated to St Winwaloe, or St Guenolo—whose body was enshrined in that foreign abbey already mentioned—and was granted as parcel of the possessions of West Dereham monastery, to Thomas Guibon and William Mynn, in the 4th and 5th years of Philip and Mary. In the year 1428, the abbat of Dereham paid tenths for the temporalities of the priory of Wynwaloe, which were then valued at £7 2s. 8d., and for the spiritualities of the same, taxed at 13s. 4d.—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Stoke-Ferry, 1½ m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 407; in 1831, 575. A. P., £2,927.

WERLAND, a hamlet in the hundred of Coleridge, co. of Devon. "A house for a minister and friars of the order of the Holy Trinity, ded. to the Holy Spirit, founded by Walter, bishop of Exeter, in the time of Henry III."—Tanner's Not. Mon.

WERNETH, a township in the parish of Stockport, hundred of Macclesfield, and co.-palatine of Chester. The greater part of this township is known by the name of Geo-Cross, so called from a cross erected by the family of Geo. It is situated on the road running from Stockport to Mottram, in Longendale, and consists chiefly of a wide street, about half a mile in length. The Unitarians have a place of worship here, as also an extensive cemetery and Sunday school. Here is held annually a court-baron; and fairs for cattle on the 28th of April and 20th of November. The manufacture of cotton goods, the printing of calicoes, and hat making, are carried on here to a considerable extent; a great proportion of the inhabitants being thus employed. The Peak-Forest canal, which passes through the town, opens a communication with Manchester, Ashton, and other of the large manufacturing towns in Lancashire. Coal and freestone are raised to a considerable extent within the township. Here is a hill commonly called Werneth-Loe, from the summit of which an extensive prospect is obtained, extending as far as Manchester, Stockport, &c., finally bounded by the Cheshire and Derbyshire hills. Distance from Stockport, 4 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 1152; in 1831, 3462. A. P., £2,821.

WERRINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Black-Torrington, co. of Devon. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter, and, in 1829, in the patronage of the earl of Buckinghamshire. Church ded. to St Martin and St Giles. Distance from Launceston, 2 m. N. by W. Pop. in 1801, 489; in 1831, 661. A. P., £2,809.

WERRINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of Paston, liberty of Peterborough and co. of Northampton. Living, a perpetual curacy, subordinate to the rectory of Paston, not in charge, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough. The patronage is with the rectory of Paston, and the chapel is ded. to St Mary and St John the Baptist. Distance from Peterborough, 3½ m. N.N.W. Pop. in 1801, 372; in 1831, 537. A. P., £2,049.

WESSINGTON, or WESTINGTON, a hamlet in the parish of Chipping-Campden, upper division of the hundred of Kiftgate, co. of Gloucester. Pop., including the hamlet of Combe, in 1801, 128; in 1831, 144. The assessed property is included in the return from Chipping-Campden, from which it is distant 1 m. S.

WEST, a hundred near the centre of the co. of Cornwall, containing 19 parishes, with the boroughs of Liskeard, and East and West Looe. Pop., in 1831, 18,254.

WEST, the central ward of the co. of Westmoreland, containing 10 parishes, 12 townships, 4 chapelries, and, in 1831, 7894 inhabitants. The river Lowther crosses it, and here are the beautiful lakes of Ulswater, Hawswater, &c.

WEST-ACRE, a parish in the Lynn division of Freebridge, co. of Norfolk. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, certified at £16, returned at £20, and, in 1829, in the patronage of P. Hamond, Esq. Church ded. to All Saints. Here is the hamlet of Casthorpe. "A priory of Black canons, who afterwards became canons of the order of St Augustine, was begun by Oliver the parish priest, and his son Walter, in the time of William Rufus, under the protection of the then lord of the manor, Ralph de Toney, who confirmed the grants made to the same. It was dedicated to St Mary and all Saints, and had annual revenues in the 26th year of the reign of Henry VIII., valued at £308 19s. 11d., according to Mr Speed. The site was granted, 3d Henry VIII., to Mary, duchess of Richmond, and the reversion, 7th Edward VI., to Sir Thomas Gresham."—Tanner's Not. Mon. The remains of this house are still in existence, and exhibit traces of great architectural beauty, principally in the early and later styles of English architecture. Distance from Swaffham, 5½ m. N.W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 319; in 1831, 415. A. P., £2,564.

WESTALL, a hamlet in the parish of Cheltenham, co. of Gloucester.

WESTANSWICK, a township in the parish of Stoke-upon-Tern, Drayton division of the hundred of Bradforth, co. of Salop. Distance from Drayton-in-Hales, 6 m. S.W.

by S. Pop., in 1831, 181. The other returns are included in those made from Stoke-upon-Tern.

WESTBERE, a parish in the hundred of Bleangate, lath of St Augustine, co. of Kent. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, rated at £7, and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to All Saints. Distance from Canterbury, 4 m. N.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 188; in 1831, 219. A. P., £1,533.

WESTBOROUGH, a parish in the wapentake of Loveden, parts of Kesteven, co. of Lincoln. Living, a rectory in two mediætes, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln. The first of these annexed with Shefford is rated at £20, and returned at £73 19s. 10d. The second is joined with the vicarage of Dry-Doddington, and rated at £6 13s. 4d.: in 1829, the patronage of both belonged to R. Hall, Esq. Church ded. to All Saints. Of the hamlet of Shefford above-mentioned, the following is the only account which could be procured by the Rev. J. R. Litchford, rector of the parish in 1806: "I can give you no other account of the hamlet of Shefford, than that it was situate to the east of the village of Westborough, nor could the father of the late Mr Hall collect any particulars when a young man. There were also two other hamlets belonging to Westborough, which lay to the west, not a vestige of either remains, except a draw-well. One of those hamlets was known by the name of Holme, and the old inclosures thereabouts are called the Holmes to this day." Distance from Grantham, 7 m. N.W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 181; in 1831, 215. A. P., £2,934.

Living, a discharged vicarage, united to the perpetual curacy of Priddy, a peculiar of the dean of Wells, rated at £11 4s. 9½d., and in the patronage of the bishop of Bath and Wells, Church ded. to St Lawrence. Distance from Wells, 4 m. N.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 429; in 1831, 681. A. P., £5,169.

WESTBURY, a hamlet joined to that of Peake, in the parish of East-Meon, hundred of Meon-Stoke, co. of Southampton. Here was formerly a chapel, which is now used as a wood-house. Distance from Petersfield, 6½ m. W. Pop., with Peake, in 1801, 35; in 1831, 226. A. P., in 1815, returned along with that of the parish.

WESTBURY, a hundred in the co. of Wilts. It is situated at the western extremity of the county, and borders upon Somersetshire. It only contains the parish and borough of the same name. Pop., in 1801, 5921; in 1831, 7324. A. P., £24,551.

WESTBURY, a parish, forming the above hundred, and in the co. of Wilts. It comprises the borough of the same name, the chapelries of Bratton and Dilton, and the townships of Leigh, Hawkeridge, and Haywood. It is an ancient place, and is supposed to have existed in the time of the Britons, and to have been afterwards the site of the Roman station Verlucio. The name refers to the relative position of the town, and is derived from the Saxon. The kings had a palace here in the time of the heptarchy. The town is situated under Salisbury Plain, and consists almost entirely of three streets, irregularly built, and leading respectively towards Frome, Bradford, and East-Lavington. The town is well supplied with water. Tuesday is market-day, which is now fallen almost completely into disuse. Fairs are held on the first Friday in Lent and Whit-monday, for pedlery, and on Easter-Monday, and the 24th of September, for cattle, horses, and farm and dairy produce. The town was originally incorporated by charter of Henry IV., under which the town is still governed. The municipal body consists of a mayor, recorder, 12 aldermen and burgesses, with subordinate officers. The corporation possesses no magisterial jurisdiction. The mayor holds a court leet in November, and the steward of the lord of the manor holds another in May, at which latter two high constables are appointed. A court of requests is held once a fortnight for the recovery of all debts not exceeding £5, and having jurisdiction over the hundreds of Heytesbury, Warminster, and Westbury, for that purpose. The sittings of this court are held alternately here and at Warminster. Broad cloths and kerseymeres are manufactured here to a considerable extent, there being eight manufactories near the town, and several others in the vicinity, for these purposes. The clothing trade was formerly so extensive, that one house employed 1000 persons; it has, however, considerably declined of late years. Malt is made to a limited extent. This borough began to return members to parliament in the 27th of Henry VI., and continued to do so without intermission, until the passing of the reform act, when its representation was limited to one. Under the old system, the right of election was vested in all occupiers of burghage tenements, amounting to about 60, who held such tenements in fee, or for lives, or 99 years, determinable on lives, or by copy-hold, paying a burghage rent of fourpence or twopence annually. Under the new system, the number of electors is about 400. The mayor returns the writ. The town-hall is a handsome building, situated near the centre of the town. Living, a discharged vicarage with the perpetual curacies of Bratton and Dilton annexed, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the prebentor of the cathedral church of Salisbury, rated at £44 16s. 0^d. The church—which is ded. to All Saints—is a venerable building, supposed to have been erected about the time of Alfred. It has a tower in the centre, and contains several handsome monuments. The incorporated society for the enlargement of churches, &c., having granted £300, for the purpose of obtaining 330 free sittings, great additions have in consequence been made. The Wesleyan Methodists have one place of worship, the Independents two, and the Baptists three, all in the town, besides some others in the neighbourhood, within the parish. Here is a school conducted on the national system of education, at which 40 boys receive education, it being endowed with £1000, the bequest of John Matravars, a member of the Society of Friends, who had a considerable fortune in this place, and who also left a similar sum for the use of clothing 20 poor women at Christmas, for which purpose several other benevolent individuals have bequeathed small sums. This having been, as already mentioned, a Roman station, coins of that people are frequently found here, as also many other antiquities. William de Westbury, formerly one of the pisme judges in the court of common pleas, and James Ley, earl of Marlborough, are buried here. Bryan Edwards, author of a history of the British West Indian Colonies, and Dr Philip Withers, a writer who lived about the end of last century, were both born here. Distance from London, 99 m. W. by S., and from Salisbury, 24 m. N.W. by W. Total pop., in 1831, 7324. Pop., of the borough, in 1801, 1837; in 1831, 2495. Total A. P., £24,551.

WESTBURY-LEIGH, a township mentioned in the preceding article, for which see LEIGH.

WESTBURY-UPON-SEVERN, a parish in the hundred of Westbury, co. of Gloucester. It includes the township of Redley, which is locally situated within the duchy of Lancaster. The river Severn is on the east and south of the parish. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Hereford and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £20 2s. 8^d., and in the patronage of the custos of the college of vicar's-choral in the cathedral church of Hereford. Church ded. to St Peter and St Paul. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. There is a national school endowed with £4 10s., being the amount of two small bequests, one of them made in 1650, by John Young, and the other by Joseph Houlstead, in 1722; it is also partly supported by annual subscriptions. Of the situation of this parish, Atkyn says, in his history of the county, "This parish lies in three hundreds; part of it lies in the duchy hundred, part in the hundred of St Briavil, and the greater part lies in the hundred of Westbury, which has its name from this considerable parish. This large parish contains many hamlets, viz., Adset, Bolloe, Boseley, Claxhill, Cleve, Elton, Nether-Laugh, Norwood, and Upper-Laugh." Distance from Newnham, 3 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 1651; in 1831, 2032. A. P., £9,298.

WESTBURY-UPON-TRIM, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Kenbury, co. of Gloucester. It contains the chapelry of Shirehampton and the tithing of Bishop's-Stoke. Living, a perpetual curacy within the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Bristol, a peculiar of the bishop of Bristol, rated at £13 16s. and alternately in the patronage of the Rev. J. Baker and S. Edwards, Esq. Church ded. to the Holy Trinity. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. "A monastery here is mentioned in the acts of the synod of Clovesho, A. D. 824, which, with several lands herabouts, was given by Ethelric, son of Ethelmund, after the death of his mother, to Worcester. But Oswald, bishop of that see, in the year 983, replaced the monks, who being partly removed to Ramsey, and partly driven away by the wars, this religious house was, in the year 1093, re-edified to the honour of the blessed Virgin, the old possessions were recovered, new were added, and the monks restored by Wulstan, bishop of Worcester, who made it a cell to the priory of Worcester: but his successor, Bishop Sampson, in the reign of Henry I., revoked the said grants, and removed the monks. From which time, nothing occurs of any religious house in this place, till about the year 1288, when Godfrey Giffard, bishop of Worcester, endeavoured to make several churches in these parts of the patronage of the see of Worcester, prebendal to this of Westbury, which, after great opposition from the prior and convent of Worcester, he effected, and here became a college for a dean and canons, (in the gift of the bishop of Worcester,) dedicated to the Holy Trinity, which was afterward augmented by the benefactions of John Carpenter, bishop of Worcester, who sometimes styled himself bishop of Westbury, Richard, duke of York, King Edward IV., Sir William Cannings, Knt., (who was afterwards dean here,) and others, so as to be valued, in the 26th year of Henry VIII., at £232 14s., and was granted, 35th Henry VIII., to Sir Ralph Sadler."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Bristol, 3 m. N.N.W. Pop. of the whole parish, in 1831, 4263; A. P., £7,608: of the parish, exclusive of the chapelry and tything, in 1801, 678; in 1831, 1515. WESTENHANGER, or OSTENHANGER, formerly a parish in the hundred of Stouting, lath of Shepway, co. of Kent. "Westenhanger is an eminent manor here, which was once a parish of itself, though now united to Stanford. Its ancient and more proper name, as appears by the register of the monastery of St Augustine, was Le-Hangre; yet I find it called likewise in records, as high as the reign of Richard I., by the names both of Ostenhanger and Westenhanger, which certainly arose from its having been divided, and in the hands of separate owners, being possessed by the two eminent families of Criol and Auber-ville."—Hasted's Kent. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, rated at £7 12s. 6d., and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church has now entirely disappeared, but was formerly dedicated to St Thomas à Becket. Distance from Hythe, $3\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.W. The pop. is returned with Standford.

WESTERDALE, a parish in the eastern division of the liberty of Langbaugh, N. R. of the co. of York. Living, a perpetual curacy subordinate to the rectory of Stokesley, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the manorial court of Westerdale, in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York, not in charge, and in patronage of the rector of Stokesley. Here is a school at which 15 poor children receive instruction, endowed with £15 per annum, being £3 annual rent, bequeathed in 1734 by Jane Deak, and certain land, the gift of Mary Fish, in 1741. Distance from Guilborough, $7\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 257; in 1831, 281. A. P., £1,658.

WESTERFIELD, a parish, partly within the hundred of Bosmere and Claydon, and partly within the borough of Ipswich, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £11 10s. 7½d., and in the patronage of the bishop of Ely. Church ded. to St Mary Magdalene. Here is a school endowed with £5 annual income, arising from the bequest of Bridget Callet in 1662. Distance from Ipswich, $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 246; in 1831, 327: these returns including both parts of the parish. The pop. of that portion, without the borough, was, in 1801, 59; and in 1831, 74. A. P., £1,538.

WESTERHAM, a hundred in the lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, co. of Kent. It is situated on the north-western boundary of the county, and the river Thames bounds it on the north, the co. of Surrey on the west. It contains 2 parishes, and, in 1821, 3196 inhabitants.

WESTERHAM, a parish and market-town in the hundred of the same name, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, co. of Kent. Its name refers to its situation, which is near the western border of the county. The town is well-built and regular, situated on a gentle declivity, and lies on both sides of the river Darent, which rises in the vicinity. In the centre of the town is a large, handsome obelisk, which is commonly looked upon as the market-cross. On Wednesday is held the market, which was granted in the 25th year of the reign of Edward III. to the then lord of the manor, the abbot of Westminster. A fair is held here on the 3d of March, principally for the sale of cattle: also another on the 19th of September for pedlery. It is within the jurisdiction of a court of requests for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5, which court is held for the whole hundred. Living, a vicarage annexed to the perpetual curacy of Edenbridge, in the archd. and dio. of Rochester, rated at £19 19s. 4½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. Richard Board. The church is a large, handsome building, and is ded. to St Mary. The Wesleyan Methodists and the Society of Friends have places of worship here. Here is a school conducted on the national plan, for children of both sexes; it derives its support from annual subscriptions. This place is noticed as having been the site of two very curious phenomena which took place in 1596 and 1756. In the former, about 9 acres of ground continued in motion for several days in a most remarkable manner, and in the latter, about 2½ acres exhibited the same phenomena, part being raised considerably, and other parts sinking into pits. Bishop Hoadley and General Wolfe, of immortal memory, were both born here. The church contains a monument to the memory of the latter, and at Quebec house is also erected a pillar, with an inscription commemorative of his victories and death. Distance from Maidstone, 23 m. W.; and from London, 31 m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 1344; in 1831, 1985. A. P., £6,311.

WESTERLEIGH, a parish in the hundred of Pucklechurch, co. of Gloucester. Living, a curacy, united to the vicarage of Pucklechurch, in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, not in charge; the patronage is with the vicarage of Pucklechurch. The church is a handsome building, in the later style of English architecture, contains a stone pulpit, and is ded. to St James. Here is a school at which ten boys and the same number of girls receive education, founded in 1715, and endowed with £20 per annum by Sir John Smyth. Edward Fowler, a well-known theological writer of the 17th century, was a native of this place. Distance from Chipping-Sodbury, 3 m. S.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 1582; in 1831, 1709. A. P., £10,889.

WESTER-SKIRDAL, a hamlet in the parish of Chipstead, co. of Somerset.

WESTERTON, a township in the parish of St Andrew-Auckland, south-eastern division of Darlington ward, co.-palatine of Durham. Distance from Bishop-Auckland, $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 56; in 1831, 85. A. P., £556.

WESTFIELD, a parish in the hundred and half of Mifford, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged rectory with that of Winburgh, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £4 6s. 2d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of Lady Howard. Church ded. to St Andrew. Distance from Dereham, 3 m. S. Pop., in 1801, 111; in 1831, 127. A. P., £577.

WESTFIELD, a parish in the hundred of Baldsloe, rape of Hastings, co. of Sussex. It is situated on the south side of Breda channel. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester, rated at £11 6s. 8d., and in patronage of the bishop of Chichester. The church is built in the early style of English architecture, and is ded. to St John the Baptist. Distance from Battle, $4\frac{1}{2}$ m. E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 306; in 1831, 938. A. P., £3,390.

WESTGATE, a hundred in the lathe of St Augustine, co. of Kent. It lies at the eastern extremity of the county, contains five parishes, and four extra-parochial liberties. Pop., in 1821, 4198.

WESTGATE, a straggling village in the north-western division of the ward of Darlington, co.-palatine of Durham, in the parish of Stanhope, and 6 m. W. by N. from Stanhope.

WESTGATE, a township in the parish of St John Newcastle, western division of Castle ward, co. of Northumberland. It is on the verge of the town of Newcastle, forming its north-western suburb, and contains many spacious streets, with handsome houses, of recent date. Pop., in 1801, 669; in 1831, 2996. The assessed property was returned in 1815 with that of the parish.

WEST-GRINSTEAD, a hundred in the rape of Bramber, co. of Suffolk, near the centre of the county, and containing four parishes, and, in 1831, 3011 inhabitants.

WEST-GREEN, a hamlet in the parish of Hartley-Wintney, co. of Southampton. Distance from Hartford-bridge, 2½ m. W.S.W.

WESTHALL, a parish in the hundred of Blything, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £10 2s. 5½d., and in patronage of the dean and chapter of Norwich. Church ded. to St Andrew. Here is a school with a small endowment of £2 18s., arising from two small bequests, one in 1717 by Anne Clarke, and the other in 1726 by the Rev. Wm. Gregory Clarke. Distance from Halesworth, 4 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 373; in 1831, 442. A. P., £2,300.

WESTHAM, a township in the parish of Kirkham, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Distance from Medlar, 1 m. N.

WESTHAM, a parish in the lowey and rape of Pevensey, co. of Sussex. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester, rated at £21 10s. 10d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord G. Cavendish. The church is in a mixed style of English architecture, being partly late and partly earlier. It is ded. to St Mary. The almshouse which exists here, contains four tenements, and is endowed with about 30 acres of land. Here was the abbey of Stratford-Langthorne, thus described by Grose in his Antiquities of England:—"Of this abbey there are scarcely any remains, except a small building, which appears to have been the gateway leading to the monastery, and a small ruined stone arch. The site and remains of this once celebrated monastery are about half a mile S.S.W. of the church. It was founded in 1134, or 1135, by William de Montfichet, for monks of the Cistercian order, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary and All Saints. He endowed it with all his lordship here, under the manor of Westham, and also with eleven acres of meadow and two mills; his wood of Bochest in Woodford, and the tithes of his pannage. The demesnes of the abbey in this parish comprehended near 1500 acres; and among them was Sudbury, given by King John. The manors of West-Ham, Wood-Grange, East-Westham, and Playze, were theirs. They had also the manors of East-Ham, of Berlingers and Rye-house in Little Ilford and Berking; of Low-Leyton; of Bamstead in Aveley and Upminster; of Great Burghsted, Challeweden, Whites and Gurneys; of Buckurns in Buthesby; of Cowbridge in Mountenysing; of Caldicrots in South Weald; of Brygginge in Chaldwell, with many other lands; the rectories of East Ilford and East-ham; the vicarages of West-Ham, Langton, Great Burghsted and Great Mapleston; houses in London; the manor of Lewisham, and a messuage and lands at Woolwich; in the forest of Melkesham, Wilts, 472 acres; common pasture in Warsted; free warren in most of the parishes named above; a market and two fairs in Bellerica; pasture for 800 sheep, and liberties in Windsor forest. The house being situated low among the marshes, was liable at first to frequent inundations, so that the monks were obliged to remove to a cell of theirs at Great Burghsted, where they continued till King Richard caused their damages to be repaired, and brought them back to Stratford. The abbot had summons to parliament in 1807. At the suppression this abbey was valued at £573 15s. 6d., according to Speed. As to the abbey itself, King Henry VIII., in 1538, gave the house and site, with the church, belfrey, and church-yard, and several parcels of ground thereto belonging, to Peter Meantis, Esq., and Joan his wife, and their heirs male. Some of the considerable privileges of this abbey were obtained or purchased by Sir Thomas Campbell of Clay-hill in Berking. This abbey was bound to maintain the bridge at Bowe, said to have been the first stone-bridge in the county." Distance from Hailsham, 5½ m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 560; in 1831, 752. A. P., £5,623.

WESTMORELAND,

An inland co. of England, extending from 54° 11' 30" to 54° 42' 30" north latitude, and from 2° 20' to 3° 12' west longitude. It is bounded on the north and west by the co. of Cumberland, on the south-west and south by that of Lancaster, on the south-east and east by that of York, and on the north-east by that of Durham. The area of the county is 763 square miles, or 488,320 square acres, of which 40,000 acres are computed to be in tillage, and 140,000 in pasturage. From Yorkshire, the county is divided by an irregular and artificial line, except for a short distance near Sedburgh, where the river Lune runs along the boundary. The county is separated from Durham by the river Tees, from Cumberland by Ullswater, by the river Eamont, and another tributary of the river Eden. From Lancaster it is separated on the west by Windermere and the river Winster, and on the south by an irregular artificial line extending from the river Kent to the county-stone on the boundaries of Yorkshire.

History.—Prior to the arrival of the Romans, this county was occupied by the tribes of the Brigantes, the eastern parts being possessed by the Voluntii, and the western by the Sixanctii. During the Roman government of this country, it was included in their province of Maxima Caesariensis, which reached from the Humber to the Tyne. When Alfred made the division of his kingdom into counties, this with Northumberland and Cumberland are not mentioned, and are, therefore, supposed to have belonged to the Scots. During the Saxon heptarchy it was part of the kingdom of the Northumbrians which was established in 547, and continued till 827, having had 31 kings. Its Saxon possessors gave it the name of West Moringa Land, or the land of the Western Moors, of which the present appellation is a contraction. In the middle ages it suffered considerably from the hostile incursions of the Scotch, and in 1173, the castles of Appleby and Brough were taken by William of Scotland; for permitting which, Henry II. imposed severe fines upon several of the principal families of the county. In 1388, Appleby was again destroyed by the Scots. In the beginning of the parliamentary war, the castle of Appleby was garrisoned for the king by Anne, countess of Pembroke, but was taken in October, 1648, by the parliamentary forces, under Lieutenant-General Ashton. After the restoration, some of the republican party, who were numerous in this county, attempted to stir up an insurrection at Kaber-rigg, near the village of Kaber, were dispersed by the militia. Some of were taken prisoners, and afterwards tried executed at Appleby. When the Pretender England in 1745, a skirmish took place between the Highlanders and the English, as former were retreating before the duke of Cumberland, and some of their troops entered town of Kendal; but were repulsed by the militiamen.

Feud Divisions.—“In the later parts of the old dominion, when the ancient kingdom of Lancashire was divided into six shires, one of which was called Appleby-Score: this, however, does not seem to have included the barony of Kendal, which, according to various records, appears, for some ages after the Norman conquest, to have continued to form part of the hundred of Lonsdale, co. palatine of Lancaster. In Domesday-book many places in the barony of Kendal are noticed, while Westmoreland, properly so called, is with Cumberland, Northumberland, Durham, and part of Lancaster, wholly omitted, these counties having been excluded from the survey.” The present great civil divisions are the two baronies of Kendal and Westmoreland; that of Kendal is divided into the wards of Kendal and Lonsdale, and that of Westmoreland, which is occasionally called the barony of Appleby, or the Bottom of Westmoreland, is divided into the east and west wards. The towns of the county are the borough and market-town of Appleby, the small market-town and sea-port of Milnthorpe, and the market-towns of Brough, Ambleside, Burton-in-Kendal, Kendal, Kirkby-Lonsdale, Kirkby-Stephen, and Orton. Appleby is the county town. This county is included in the northern circuit, and the assizes are held at Appleby. There are 32 acting justices of the peace, who hold the Easter and Michaelmas quarter sessions at Appleby, and the Epiphany and Midsummer sessions at Kendal.

Ecclesiastical Affairs.—This county is in the province of York. The barony of Westmoreland constituting the deanery of Westmoreland, is in the dio. of Carlisle, and that of Kendal, which is divided into the two deaneries of Kendal and Kirkby-Lonsdale, is in the dio. of Chester. It contains 32 parishes, 14 of which are rectories, 17 vicarages, and 1 a perpetual curacy. Pop., in 1801, 41,617; in 1811, 45,922, being an increase of 10 per cent; in 1821, 51,359, being an increase of 12 per cent; in 1831, 55,041, being an increase of 7 per cent: of this last number 27,594 were males, and 27,447 females. Annual value of the real property, as assessed in 1815, was £298,199. The annual rate of mortality, for an average of ten years, appears to have been as 1 to 58 of the inhabitants. In 1821, 3801 families were employed in trade, and 5096 in agriculture. The sum raised for the maintenance of the poor, in 1815, was £28,678, being at the rate of 1s. 11d. in the pound on the assessed rental. The rates for the year ending March 25th, 1827, amounted to £31,029 15s., and the expenditure to £31,514 12s., of which £27,114 3s. was applied to the relief of the poor. The sum expended on the poor, in 1831, was £26,000.

The Face of the Country is in general hilly, many parts being so much so, as to make it more than probable that great parts will never be brought into cultivation. The mountains throughout the county are in general lofty, and afford views of great beauty and extent from their summits. Helvellyn is the highest hill, rising to the height of 3050 feet. Cross-fell is situated at the south-eastern extremity of the county, and is the most lofty of the long range of hills which stretch along the eastern borders of this county and Cumberland; its height is about 2900 feet above the level of the sea. Bowfell and Rydal head are each about the same height as the last mentioned, and the former being on the borders of Cumberland, and the latter near Ambleside, and commanding an extensive view of the surrounding country, embrace within its circle the lakes of Windermere, Elter-water, Grassmere, and Rydal-water. On the summit of a hill called the High Street are annually held horse races, &c., on the 10th of July; it is about 2730 feet in height, and derives its name from the circumstance of an ancient road running along the summit. Between these mountains are extensive vales, of which the principal is that of the river Eden, which, commencing from about ten miles south-east of Kirkby-Stephen, stretches in a north-westerly direction by Appleby towards Penrith in Cumberland. Another vale is that of Kendal, which is southward and westward of the town. Large, detached masses of rock, indicating some violent convulsion, are dispersed throughout different parts of the county, and on the road toward Kendal from Shap are seen many small streams forcing themselves through large masses of rounded granite. The country has been long celebrated for its picturesque beauty, and the valleys only require a greater number of trees and brushwood to complete the beauty of their appearance.

Rivers.—The principal of these are the Eden, Eamont, Lowther, Lune, and Kent. The Eden, the source of which is in one of the hills at the top of Mallerstang, near the south-eastern extremity of Westmoreland, traverses the county principally in a north-easterly direction, passing Kirkby-Stephen; not far past which, between Great and Little Musgrave, it receives several small tributary streams, and another which rises in Crosby-Fell at Great Bowness; farther on it passes Appleby, and at the northernmost extremity of the parish of Brougham enters the county of Cumberland. Large quantities of salmon-trout and other kinds of fish are caught here. The lake of Ulleswater receives several small streams, and the river Eamont takes its rise at the most northern point of the lake, flowing in a north-easterly direction to the point where the Eden quits the county; during the whole of its course it forms the boundary of the county; it is a remarkably clear and limpid stream, and is much resorted to by anglers. The Lowther takes its rise at the foot of the Shap-Fells, and flowing at first north-east, and afterwards gradually becoming due north, it passes Shap-abbey; about two miles beyond which it receives the waters of a small stream from Hawes water, and finally joins the river Eamont at a point about two miles to the south-east of Penrith. The Lune rises in the parish of Ravenstone-Dale, flows for a few miles towards the north, and turning suddenly towards the west, reaches Tebay, where it again turns towards the south, which course it pursues till it leaves this county, and enters that of Lancaster near Kirkby-Lonsdale; from a point about 4 miles below Tebay to Killington, it forms the boundary of the county; the vale through which it flows derives its name from the river; it is much resorted to by salmon in the spawning season. The Kent has its source on the south side of the hill known by the name of the High Street; it passes about five miles from its source through the small lake, called from it Kentmere-tarn, from thence proceeds in a direction gradually becoming south-east to the town of Kirkby-Kendal, and from thence it flows almost due north till it falls into the spacious bay of Morecambe; by the time it falls into this bay it has become a broad and shallow estuary. The tributary streams which it receives are the Sprit, which rises in Long Sledale; the Munt from Fawcett forest, which joins it about a mile and a half above Kirkby-Kendal; the Underbarrow, which, rising about a mile above Crook, joins the Kent at the commencement of its estuary; the Blyth or Betha, which forms the port of Milnthorpe at its junction with the estuary of the Kent; and the Winstar, which forms the boundary between this county and Lancashire, from a point near its source to its junction with the Kent, opposite Arnside-fell. These rivers are not navigable beyond the point to which the tide flows, which is owing to the rapidity of their currents and the rockiness of their beds. Windermere receives the waters of the Brathay and the Rothay at its head; and of the Troutbeck near Calgarth; large quantities of trout are found in the Rothay, and of case, which is a kind of char, in the Brathay. The trade of Westmoreland is greatly advanced by means of the inland communication afforded by the Lancaster canal, which, commencing at the town of Kirkby-Kendal, proceeds parallel with the course of the river Kent for a considerable distance, and afterwards leaving it near Sedgwick towards Burton-in-Kendal, where it enters the county of Lancaster. The roads throughout the county are in excellent order; materials for the Macadamizing being obtained easily from the neighbouring hills. The road from London to Glasgow and Edinburgh by Carlisle enters the county a little to the south-east of Brough from Yorkshire, passes through that town and Appleby, and leaves the county near Penrith; that from London to Kendal by Bedford, Nottingham, &c., passes through Kirkby-Lonsdale; and the London road to Carlisle through Lancashire, enters Westmoreland at Burton-in-Kendal, from Milnthorpe to

Lakes.—The lakes of Westmoreland have been long celebrated, and have furnished abundant materials both for description and for the pencil. Of those in Westmoreland, the principal are Ullswater, Windermere or Winandermere, Grassmere, Hawes-water, Eiter-water, Broad-water, and Rydal-water. In addition to these are many smaller lakes, commonly called tarns, the principal of which are Aiswater, Angle-tarn, Kestel-Cove-tarn, Red-tarn, and Small-water, Grisedale-tarn, Skeggleswater, Kentmere, Sunbiggin-tarn, and Whinfell-tarn. Descriptions of these lakes will be found under the various parishes which are situated on their banks.

Soil and Climate.—The valleys in which the rivers run are tolerably fertile, and in the north-eastern quarter there is a considerable tract of cultivated plain. The south-eastern is fertile, with a warmer climate than the eastern. These two sides of the county, where the fertility lies, are divided by lofty fells and barren moors, intersected with pastoral vales. The climate of this county is extremely humid, owing to its contiguity to the western ocean, from which the winds blow two-thirds of the year, and bear along with them exhalations which fall in rain amongst the mountains. On an average of five years, the quantity of rain which fell amounted to 64 inches. The air is pure and healthy, but in the mountainous parts cold and piercing. According to an estimate of the bishop of Llandaff, three-fourths of Westmoreland consist of uncultivated land, and very extensive inclosures have taken place since this calculation. These are of various sorts, with respect to soil and situation, and capable of different sorts of improvement. Some of them consist of extensive commons, in low situations, and are of excellent soil; these might be improved by inclosures, without any risk of loss by the undertaking. Others constitute extensive mountainous districts, called by the natives fells and moors; the soil of these is, generally speaking, a hazel mould. In its natural state it produces little else than a coarse bent, grass, heath, and fern, or in the language of the country, ling and brackens. Many of these fells are, in their present state, of so little value, that the liberty of keeping 10 sheep on them may be hired for sixpence a year. The farmers of Westmoreland were long of opinion that their lands were better suited to grass than to corn; and they were ploughed for three or four years, not with the expectation that the corn would be more profitable than grass, but in order to renovate them for grass, and to destroy the moss, which, in a few years, overruns all their arable lands; but others saw plainly enough that the corn system, under proper management, was more profitable than grass; but believed that the fertility of their ground, by the production of either grass or corn, would be injured by ploughing for a longer time or shorter intervals of rest. These notions are now in a great measure antiquated.

The turnip and clover husbandry has made great progress, and considerable quantities of wheat are now annually grown, though oats is the grain principally cultivated. The high price to which corn rose in the course of last war, gave great encouragement to all these agricultural improvements, and a great number of commons were, in consequence, inclosed, while large tracts of land were at the same time drained. Fold-yard dung and peat ashes are almost the only manures; for, though the limestone of the county is inexhaustible, the want of coal for burning it prevents the general use of this manure. The farms in this county are in general small. The rents are chiefly made up by the sale of cattle, sheep, wool, butter, eggs, and hams. The last of these are cured with Liverpool salt, hung up in wide chimneys, and dried with the smoke of wood or peat fires. The wool of the county is much used in the manufactures of Kendal and of Bradford, in Yorkshire. Part of it is wrought into knitted stockings, about Kirkby-Stephen, Orton, and Ravenstonedale. The cattle bred in this county are long-horned, much resembling the Lancaster breed, and, when kept to a proper age, grow to a great size. The breed of sheep kept on the mountains and commons of Westmoreland, is either native, or a cross with Scottish rams. No attempt has yet been made to improve either the carcase or the fleece. They are horned, dark, or gray-faced, thick pitted with coarse, strong, or hairy wool. The whole flock upon a farm is herded together, which is different from the practice in those counties where sheep-farming is thought to be best understood. Numbers of geese are bred in the mountains, and afford an article of exportation."—Edinburgh Gazetteer. The occurrence of numerous trees in the mooses, proves that Westmoreland was originally a wooded county; and several extensive districts, especially on the north-eastern boundary, still retain the name of forests. Wood, however, at present, exists chiefly in plantations, and in detached groves round the country-seats and farm-houses. In some districts, considerable portions of land are covered with coppices, consisting principally of oak, alder, ash, birch, and hazel. These underwoods are usually cut down every sixteenth year, and are used for the making of hoops and charcoal. The former are sent by sea to Liverpool, and the latter is used in the iron-furnaces of the neighbourhood.

Mineral Productions.—The strata of this county are of various sorts, but divide themselves into two very distinct kinds. Limestone, freestone, and a soft species of laminous schistus, stratified horizontally, and abounding with organic remains, prevail on the east side of a line drawn from Powlsey-bridge to the river Lowther, a little below Knipe, and up the Lowther, by the abbey of Shap, to the head of the first streamlet south of Shap-Thorn; then to Shap-Wells, down the Birbeck and Lune, through the parish of Orton, and from thence by an irregular line to the river Winster, opposite the north end of Lithefell. The west side of this line consists chiefly of the schistus and trap genera, classed in layers nearly perpendicular to the horizon, and destitute of every species and appearance of fossils. One of these layers is the limestone seen at Thiefhole quarry, near the head of Windermere. A narrow vein of red porphyry crosses the road between Shap and Kendal, on the Demmings; and a little farther north-west, in Westdale-cragg, a stratum of flesh-coloured granite, in which the quartz, and especially the feldt-spar, are in layers, and the veins of gold mica are more than ordinarily beautiful. Farther up Westdale, near the farm-house, is a stratum of greenish sea-coloured granite, of a finer and harder texture than that at Westdale-cragg. A very coarse species of granite also appears in many parts of this county, especially a little to the south of Patterdale-chapel. Immense lines of basalt, or whinstone, run through the whole of this district; and a series of hills, running parallel to Dunfell, and the rest of the chain of the western mountains, is formed of this species of rock. Between these there also rises, in some places, a range of round hills, composed of alluvial stones, laid in a cement of their own substance, and the whole having the appearance of being effected through the agency of water, of a formation prior to that in which organic remains have been discovered. The Mell fells, Soulbey fell, and Demmallet, in Cumberland, and the hill on which Kendal-castle stands, are of this kind. Loose fragments of rock are very profusely thrown over all the lower hills and level parts of this county. On the south side of Shap, along the road towards Kendal, some of the brooks, and especially Westdalebeck, roll amongst immense blocks of rounded granite, of kinds similar to those at Westdale-cragg, and near Westdale-head house; and similar blocks are scattered, not only over the hills abounding with schistus and trap, but also on the limestone hills about Shap-thorn and Oddendale-nab. Veins of metallic ore, chiefly copper and lead, have been occasionally discovered; and some attempts have been made to work them, but many of these lie so deep, or are so minutely situated, that not having in general paid the expense, the greater part have been abandoned. Of the former metal, the principal mines are situated at Duf-ton, where large quantities are produced; at Greenside, near Patterdale; at Eagle-cragg, in Gisdale, a branch of the vale of Patterdale; and Dunfell, which are generally considered to be almost exhausted. On the hills above Stanley, and other places, small quantities are sometimes found; and at Hartley, was formerly wrought a vein of peculiar richness, which has not, however, been in operation for above 100 years. The principal places where copper has been found, are Limbidge, Ashby, and Rayne. The strata of coal in this county are too compact in their nature to afford much prospect of a large supply of pit coal being raised, and, in general, the quality is inferior. The best procured in this district are on the confines of the county, in Stanemore forest, and at Leacett, near the head of Hellbeck, in the Lune forest. A slaty coal is also dug from a seam at Llap-stones, in the parish of Brough-under-Stannmore; and at Trimby, Newby, Sleagill, Reagill, and Mallerstacy, are wrought certain seams, which produce a coal much impregnated with sulphur, and which, being thereby in a great measure rendered unfit for domestic use, is principally used in burning limestone. On the banks of the river Kent, about three miles below Kirkby-Kendal, a bed of white marble, partially streaked with red and other colours of great beauty and hardness, was discovered in 1793, and has since been wrought to a considerable extent. A dusky green marble, veined with white, is sometimes found towards the northern extremity of the county. The mountainous parts of Westmoreland abound with various sorts of slate, all of which are used by the inhabitants for covering the roofs of their buildings; and the best of them are either carried by sea to London, Liverpool, Lynne, or Hull, or by land, into the adjoining counties of Durham, Cumberland, Lancaster, and Northumberland. The different qualities of slates are distinguished from each other by their degree of fineness or their grain; by the thickness into which they split; by their colour and their weight. The most general colour is blue, varying in tint from a pale to a very deep blue. The blue of some slates has a greenish cast, which is very observable after a shower of rain, in a building in which those which possess this property have been improperly used along with the pure blue slates. A purple slate is also found, and also one of a very deep colour, which is partly used for writing upon.

Manufactures and Commerce.—Westmoreland by no means deserves to be called either a manufacturing or a commercial county. The manufactures are principally confined to the making of Kendal cottons, which is a coarse woollen fabric, and not made, as its name may seem to denote, of cotton; it is generally supposed to be a corruption of coatings; linseys, flannels, knitted stockings, waistcoat pieces, and leather, are also made, though not to a very great extent. The exports are principally confined to the cloths already mentioned, as being manufactured at Kirkby-Kendal, and some of the other manufactured articles, with considerable numbers of cattle, sheep, and geese, and also gunpowder, hoops, charcoal, hams, &c. The numerous lakes and rivers supply great quantities of fish, which are exported to a considerable extent, and even sent to London.

Antiquities.—“The Roman, Danish, Saxon, or British encampments in this county, are at Crackenthorpe, near Appleby; near Kirkby-Shore; at Brougham, near Brough; Mardindale; Rear-Cross upon Stanmore; at Water-Crook, near Kendal; at Ambleside, Castle-Steeds; Mayborough castle, near Eamont-bridge; and two more at Sandford, near Brough. The Roman military road from Carlisle and Old Penrith crosses at the confluence of Eamont and Soker, and afterwards the Eden. Near Kirkby-Shore we have another intersection with the other Roman military road that leads from Alone to Gallacum, and from thence to Lancaster; having crossed that road we proceed through Brough to Lavatree-under-Stannmore, and from thence to Morton. The Roman military road upon which the tenth journey of Antoninus proceeds enters the county from Alone, or Whitby-castle in Cumberland, and is called the Maiden-way, and comes to Shap, or Gallacum, from whence it has as direct a way as the mountains will admit of, by Kendal to Lancaster. Shap lies five miles from the main road, to which there was a vicinal way. The antiquities worthy of notice in this county are—Askam church; Appleby castle; Arncliffe tower, near Ulleswater; Aaby church, near Appleby; Barton church, near Ulleswater; Betham hall; Betham church, near Winandermere; Bowness church, near Milnthorpe; Brough church and castle; Brougham castle; Castle-folds; Cleburn church and parsonage; Chilton church and hall; Crosby church; Dunmalle; Godmond tower, near Kendal; Grayrig hall; Kendal castle; Green castle; Harklay castle; Helton-Bacon manor-house; Helsack tower; Howgill castle; King Arthur's round table and castle; Kirkby-Lonsdale church and bridge; Kirkby-Stephen church; Kirkby-Shore church; Livens hall and temple; Morton church; Moorland church; Musgrave church; Ormside church and hall; Orton church; Peelo castle; Pendragon castle; Penhurock-Stones; Pyramids, near Shap; round tower at Cowpland-bridge; Staveley-Chap; Shap-Abbey and church; Lizergh hall; Stone-heaps, near Orton; Warcop church; Whilp castle, at Kirkby-Shore.”—Gosse's Antiquities.

Of the modern seats of the nobility and gentry, those most worthy of notice are Lewther castle, the residence of the earl of Lonsdale, lord-lieutenant of the county; and Appleby castle, that of the earl of Thanet, hereditary high sheriff. There are various mineral springs, the most important of which are those of Clifton, Gonsedike, Shap; and petrifying springs on the banks of the river Kent. The most remarkable cascades on the mountain streams are, Levens-park waterfall on the Kent, and Gillsforth spout in Lonsdale. The family of Faur takes the title of earl of Westmoreland, and that of Clifford has that of baron viscount of Westmoreland. Westmoreland formerly returned four members to parliament, being two for the county and two for the borough of Appleby; but under the provision of the reform act Appleby has been disfranchised. The polling-places are Appleby, Shap, Kendal, Kirkby-Stephen, Ambleside, and Kirkby-Lonsdale.

WESTOE, a township and chapelry in the parish of Jarro, eastern division of Chester ward, co.-palatine of Durham. It is a populous suburb to South Shields, and contains the market-places and many of the principal streets. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Durham, not in charge, endowed with £1900, and in patronage of the perpetual curate of South Shields. The chapel was erected in 1818 at an expense of £2400, £1000 of which was defrayed by the dean and chapter of the cathedral church at Durham, and £500 by Lord Crewe's trustees. Here is a school conducted on the national system of education, at which above 300 children of both sexes receive education, the school-room of which is in the ground-floor of the chapel. It is, as already mentioned, adjacent to South Shields. Pop., in 1801, 2903; in 1831, 9682. A. P., £12,194.

WESTON, a hamlet in the parish of Welford, co. of Berks. It formerly contained a church. Distance from Speenhamland, 6 m. N.W.

WESTON, a parish in the hundred of Bath-Forum, co. of Somerset. It is situated on the north bank of the river Avon, at the point at which a small tributary stream, which rises in Lansdown hill, joins that river after bisecting the village, and being crossed by a stone bridge, consisting of one arch, on the high road from Bath to Bristol. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £10 1s. 8d., and in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. The incorporated society for the building and enlarging of churches and chapels having lately granted £300 towards the expense of enlarging the church, which is ded. to All Saints, an additional accommodation has been provided, amounting to 453 sittings, of which number 227 are free. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Bath, 1½ m. N.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 1010; in 1831, 2560. A. P., £9,940.

WESTON, a parish and township in the upper division of the wapentake of Claro, W. R. of York. It contains the townships of Aakwith and Weston. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York, rated at £6 11s. 5½d., returned at £57 6s. 8d., and in patronage of the governors of the Sedburgh grammar-school. The church—which is ded. to All Saints—is a small edifice without a tower, apparently erected in the early part of the twelfth century. In the family vault of the Vavasours, at the end of the north aisle, is a very singular dos d'ane tomb beneath an arch. It is of one stone highly ridged, and tapering from head to foot. Longitudinally on the ridge lies a sword, and above it an heater shield charged with a bend dexter, which marks it as the tomb of a Stopham. By an inscription on a modern brass-plate above, it has been assigned to Sir William de Stopham, last of the name, who was living in 1312, but from its form Mr Whitaker suspected it to be a generation or two older than the era of Edward II. Weston hall is the seat of William Vavasour, Esq. Mr Gray describes this seat as “a venerable stone fabric, with large offices of Mr Vavasour, the meadows in front gently descending to the water, and behind a great and shady wood. The present house, consisting of a centre and two deeply embayed windows, is of the latter end of Queen Elizabeth's time, and much of its antique appearance has been preserved, though the inside has been throughout modernized, and adapted to habits of modern elegance. In the gardens is a very large and highly finished casino, or banqueting-house, of the same date with the house, and bearing on several shields the arms of Vavasour and Stanley. The stone work is elaborate. In the windows were originally the armorial bearings of the principal families within the wapentake of Claro, all of whom, in those days of hospitality, were probably wont to assemble in this apartment.” Distance from Otley, 2 m. N.W. by W. Pop. of the whole parish in 1801, 437; in 1831, 521. A. P., £2,999. Of the township, in 1801, 120; in 1831, 121. A. P., £1,153.

WESTON-ALCONBURY, a parish in the hundred of Leightonstone, co. of Huntingdon. Living, a perpetual curacy annexed to the vicarage of Alconbury, in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, not in charge, and patronage with Alconbury vicarage. Distance from Huntingdon, 6 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 281; in 1831, 441. A. P., £2,153.

WESTON-IN-ARDEN, a hamlet in the parish of Bulkington, co. of Warwick. Distance from Nuneaton, $\frac{3}{4}$ m. S.S.E.

WESTON-UPON-AVON, a parish, partly in the Alcester division of the hundred of Barlichway, co. of Warwick, and partly in the upper division of the hundred of Kiftsgate, co. of Gloucester. It contains the hamlet of Milcotta. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £7 14s. 7d., returned at £80, and, in 1829, in the patronage of the duke of Dorset. Church ded. to All Saints. Distance from Chipping-Campden, 9 m. N. by E. Pop., in 1801, 118; in 1831, 93. A. P., £1,833.

WESTON-BAGGARD, a parish in the hundred of Radlow, co. of Hereford. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford, rated at £5 15s. 3d., returned at £128, and in patronage of the dean and chapter of Hereford. The Incorporated society, for the building and enlargement of churches and chapels, having lately granted £45 to the church, which is ded. to All Saints, an addition of 76 sittings has been made, of which 71 are free. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Hereford, 5 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 199; in 1831, 281. A. P., £1,308.

WESTON-BAMPFYLDE, a parish in the hundred of Catsash, co. of Somerset. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £8 15s. 10d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of the Rev. J. Goldesbrough. Church ded. to the Holy Cross. Distance from Castle-cary, 5 m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 140; in 1831, 123. A. P., £1,303.

WESTON-BIRT, a parish in the hundred of Longtree, co. of Gloucester. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £6 2s., and, in 1829, in patronage of P. Holford, Esq. Church ded. to St Catherine. Distance from Tetbury, 4 m. S.W. by S. Pop. with the parish of Lashborough, in 1801, 157; in 1831, 138. A. P., £1,906.

WESTON-IN-THE-CLAY, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of Thurgarton, co. of Nottingham. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, rated at £19 2s. 11d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Earl Manvers. The church is built in a mixed style, and is ded. to All Saints. It is within the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and is within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas, before which, debts not exceeding 40s. can be recovered, and which is held at Tutbury every third Tuesday. Here is a school at which ten poor children receive education, which is endowed with an annual income arising from £100, which sum was left in 1736 by Richard Hawkeworth for its support, who also left £60 for the purpose of erecting a school-room. Distance from Tuxford, 3 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 246; in 1831, 395. A. P., £2,771.

WESTON (COLD), a parish in the hundred of Munslow, co. of Salop. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford, rated at £2 8s. 4d., returned at £100, and in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Hereford. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Ludlow, $\frac{7}{8}$ m. N.E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 27; in 1831, 25. A. P., £304.

WESTON-COLLEY, a tything in the parish and upper half hundred of Mitcheldever, Basingstoke division of the co. of Southampton, within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney court held at Winchester every Thursday, before which, debts of any amount can be recovered. Distance from Winchester, 6 m. N. N.E.

WESTON-COLVILLE, a parish in the hundred of Radfield, co. of Cambridge. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Ely, rated at £21 13s. 6d., and, in 1829, in patronage of John Hall, Esq. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Linton, 6 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 318; in 1831, 444. A. P., £2,442.

WESTON-CONEY, a parish in the hundred of Blackburn, co. of Suffolk. Lying, a discharged rectory with that of Barningham annexed, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £13 0s. 5d. The patronage is with the rectory of Barningham. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from East Harling, 7 m. S. W. Pop., in 1801, 198; in 1831, 257. A. P., £1,685.

WESTON-CORBETT, an extra-parochial liberty in the hundred of Bermondspit, Basingstoke division of the co. of Southampton. Distance from Basingstoke, 4 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 10; in 1831, 17. A. P., £360.

WESTON-COYNEY, a joint township with Hulme, in the parish of Caverswall, northern division of the hundred of Totmonslow, co. of Stafford. Distance from Cheadle, 5 m. W. Pop. with Hulme, in 1831, 619.

WESTON-SUB-EDGE, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of Kiftsgate, co. of Gloucester. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £31, and, in 1829, in patronage of H. H. Pelly, Esq. Church ded. to St Laurence. Distance from Chipping-Campden, 2 m. W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 332; in 1831, 367. A. P., £3,053.

WESTON (EDITH), co. of Rutland. See EDITH-WESTON.

WESTON-FAVELL, a parish in the hundred of Spelhoe, co. of Northampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £16 16s. 3d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. R. H. Knight. Church ded. to St Peter. Here is a school at which 15 poor children receive gratuitous education,—the school having been endowed with land for its support, and £1 annual rent charge for the repair of the school-room, by Henry and Elizabeth Ekina. Thomas Green also left certain lands in addition in 1739. The Rev. James Hervey, the author of the celebrated 'Meditations among the Tombs,' was rector of this parish for many years, and was buried in the church. Distance from Northampton, 2½ m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 354; in 1831, 443. A. P., £2,261.

WESTON-IN-GORDANO, a parish in the hundred of Portbury, co. of Somerset. WESTWOOD, an extra-parochial liberty in the upper division of the hundred of Halfshire, co. of Worcester. "Eustachia de Say, and her son Osbert Fitz-Hugh, having given the church with other lands here, to the abbey of Font-Ebroid, or Fontevraud, in France, in the reign of Henry II., here was shortly after a small priory, dedicated to the blessed Virgin, for six nuns of the order of Fontevraud, whose revenues were valued, in the 26th of Henry VIII., at £78 8s. in the whole, and at £75 18s. 11d. clear. The priory and most of the lands belonging to it were granted, in the 30th year of the same reign, to John Pakymton."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Droitwich, 3 m. W.N.W.

WEST-WOODSIDE, a hamlet in the parish of Haxey, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln.

WETHERAL, a parish partly in Cumberland ward, and partly in Eskdale ward, co. of Cumberland. It is situated on both sides of the river Eden, and includes the townships of Cumwhinton with Coathill, Scooby, Wetheral, Great Corby, and Warwick-bridge; the two last are in Eskdale, and the others in Cumberland ward. Living, a perpetual curacy, conjointly with that of Warwick-bridge, in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle, certified at £50, returned at £58, and in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Carlisle. The church—which is ded. to the Holy Trinity—is a building seemingly built in the reign of Henry VIII. It is a handsome edifice, consisting of a nave, chancel, and two aisles, with a tower at one end; attached to it is a small sepulchral chapel, of Gothic architecture, erected in 1791 by Henry Howard, Esq. Alabaster gypsum and red freestone are raised to a considerable extent within the parish. Here is a small charity, endowed with the interest of £60, bequeathed in 1760 by Thomas Graham, which is appropriated to the education of a few poor children. "A cell of a prior and eight Benedictine monks to the abbey of St Mary at York, to which it was given by Ranulph de Meschin, earl of Cumberland, either in the time of William Rufus or Henry I. It was ded. to the Holy Trinity, St Mary, and St Constantine, and rated, in the 26th year of Henry VIII., at £117 11s. 10d. according to Dugdale, and £128 5s. 3d. according to Speed; and was granted, in the 33d year of the same reign, to the dean and chapter of Carlisle."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Of this priory there are still a few remains in existence, particularly the tower-gateway, which consists of an elliptical arch and three cells, excavated out of the solid rock. Distance from Carlisle, 5 m. E.S.E. Pop. of the whole parish, in 1831, 4149. A. P., £9,966. Of the township of Wetheral, in 1801, 376; in 1831, 607. The other returns will be found under the different townships.

WETHERBY, a market-town and chapelry in the parish of Spoforth, upper division of the wapentake of Claro, W. R., co. of York. By our Saxon ancestors, this town was called Wederbi, which signifies to turn, owing to its situation on an angle of the river Wharfe. The present name is easily traced to this. Living, a perpetual curacy under the rectory of Spoforth, in the archd. and dio. of York, rated at £18 3s. 2d., and in the patronage of the rector of Spoforth. Church—a small edifice—ded. to St James. The Wesleyan Methodists and Independents have places of worship here. It consists chiefly of one street, at the back of which is situated the market-house. The river Wharfe is here crossed by a stone-bridge of five arches, and a little above this is a weir built of stone, and erected for the purpose of raising water, by means of which several flour, oil, and logwood mills are wrought. A little below the town is a place called St Helen's ford, at which point the Roman military way crossed the river. The town has, for some time, been undergoing a series of improvements under the direction and principally at the expense of the duke of Devonshire, a considerable number of old and ruinous buildings having been pulled down, and neat houses, built of stone, erected in their place. R. Fountayne Wilson, Esq., is now lord of the manor. It was anciently in the possession of the Knights Templars, but on the abolition of that order in the reign of Edward II., it was given by the pope to the Knights Hospitallars of St John of Jerusalem, and the grant was confirmed by the parliament in 1324. In the parliamentary war this town had a small garrison, consisting of 300 foot and 40 horse, commanded by Sir Thomas Fairfax. This handful of brave men, unused to the vigilance of the camp, was surprised by 800 horse and foot from York, and the attack being made early in the morning, the soldiers were found sleeping at their posts, "for," says Fairfax, "at the beginning of the war, men were as impatient of duty as they were ignorant of it." The general, however, was awake, and, with the assistance of only four men, held the enemy at bay till more of the guards were got under arms. A smart engagement then ensued, in which the assailants were repulsed. The attack was soon renewed; but in the midst of the conflict, Fairfax's magazine was blown up, and produced so tremendous an explosion, that the royalists, believing that the parliamentary forces had cannon, began to retreat and retired to the garrison of York, from which they had issued to engage in this abortive enterprise. Thursday is market-day; and fairs are held on Holy Thursday, August 5th, October 10th, and on the Thursday before November 10th, for the sale of horses, sheep, and hogs; in addition to these, fairs are held every second week for the sale of cattle. The quarter-sessions for the west riding are held here at Christmas, being held alternately here, at Knaresborough, Skipton, and Wakefield. Courts leet and baron are also held on Lady-day and Michaelmas-day. Distance from London, 194 m. N.N.W.; from York, 12½ m. W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 1144; in 1831, 1821. A. P., £3,727.

WETHERDEN, a parish in the hundred of Stow, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, rated at £6 13s. 4d., and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. WETTON, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of Totmonslow, co. of Stafford. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £7 13s. 4d., returned at £41 8s., and, in 1829, in patronage of M. Burgoyne, Esq. The church is an ancient structure, ded. to St Margaret, and over the entrance is a curious old piece of rude sculpture. Here is a charity school endowed with £5 of annual income, bequeathed in 1754 by William Risbridge. It is within the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and consequently within the jurisdiction of the court of pleas held every third Tuesday at Tutbury for the recovery of debts not exceeding 40s. The river Manifold disappears at Weston-Mill for about five miles, when it again emerges almost at the same place where the river Hamp reappears. Here are some lead and copper mines situated at Ecton-hill, which afford employment to a considerable number of the inhabitants. Here is a cavern which is generally supposed by antiquaries to have been used in the time of the ancient Druids as a place for sacrificing to their god Thor: it is now commonly called Thor's house. Distance from Ashbourn, 7½ m. N.W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 540; in 1831, 497. A. P., £2,484.

WETWANG, a parish partly in the liberty of St Peter of York, and partly in the wapentake of Backrose, E. R., co. of York. It includes the township of Wetwang and chapelry of Fimber. The town is small and meanly built. Living, a discharged vicarage in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the prebendary of Wetwang in the cathedral church of York, rated at £9 7s. 8½d. The church—which is ded. to St Michael—is a low building, consisting of a nave and north aisle, north transept, chancel, and low tower at the west end. The latter is embattled, and is evidently the most ancient part of the church, the remainder having been built in the commencement of the fifteenth century. The walls of the nave are of brick, erected in 1821. The interior is neat; the aisle is divided from the nave by five pointed arches resting on octagonal columns. At the west end of the church is a gallery, and beneath it a circular font. A parochial school is held in the north transept of the church. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here, erected in 1812, and the Primitive Methodists another, erected in 1834. Distance from Grant Driffield, 5½ m. W. by N. Total pop., in 1831, 621; of the township, in 1801, 198; in 1831, 482. A. P., £2,573. The other returns are given under Fimber.

WEXHAM, a parish in the hundred of Stoke, co. of Buckingham. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £5 15s., and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Mary. Fleetwood, the well known author of the 'Chronicon Pretiosum,' was rector of this parish from 1705 to 1708, during which time his work was published. Rag-stone is found in large quantities in the vicinity. Distance from Slough, 1½ m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 172; in 1831, 181. A. P., £1,145.

WEYBOURNE, a parish in the hundred of Holt, co. of Norfolk. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, not in charge, and in patronage of the earl of Orford. Church ded. to All Saints. Distance from Holt, 2½ m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 240; in 1831, 273. A. P., £979.

WEYBREAD, a parish in the hundred of Hoxne, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £4 15s., returned at £90, and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. John Edge. Church ded. to St Andrew. Distance from Harleston, 2 m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 662; in 1831, 708. A. P., £3,268.

WEYBRIDGE, a parish in the first division of the hundred of Elmbridge, co. of Surrey. It is situated on the river Wey, from which it derives its name, it having been formerly crossed at this point by a bridge, at its confluence with the Thames. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester, rated at £7 0s. 5d., and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church is a small building, ded. to St Nicholas, and contains, amongst other monuments, that of her royal highness the late duchess of York. The Baptists have a place of worship here. Twelve children receive education on an annual endowment of about £5, bequeathed in 1739 by Charles Hopton, who also left £100 for the purpose of erecting a school-room. The parish enjoys the advantage of water conveyance by means of the Wey and Arun canal, which commences a little to the westward of the village. Otlands, the seat of the late duke of York, is situated within the parish, on the brow of a hill near the Thames. Several wedges or oaks were discovered at Otlands in 1725, about 20 feet below the surface of the ground: this circumstance tends to corroborate the opinion held by some, that Julius Caesar had an engagement with the Britons at Cowey-Stakes, which is situated near his camp at Walton. Distance from Guildford, 12 m. N.E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 747; in 1831, 930. A. P., £4,162.

WEYBRIDGE, a hamlet in the parish of Acle, co. of Norfolk. "Here was a small priory of Austin canons, founded by some of the family of Bigod, in the reign of Edward I. It was ded. to St Mary, rated, in the 26th year of Henry VIII., at £7 13s. 4d. per annum, and granted, in the 30th year of the same reign, to Richard Fulmerston."—Tanner's Not. Men. Distance from Acle, 1½ m. N.E.

WEYHILL, a parish in the hundred of Andover, Andover division of the co. of Southampton. It contains Clanville, Nuthin, and Penton-Grafton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £36, and in patronage of the provost and fellows of Queen's college, Cambridge. Church ded. to St Michael. A fair is held here annually, commencing on the 10th of October, for horses, sheep, hogs, and leather; it continues five days, and is visited by farmers from almost every part of England. On the last about 140,000 are usually sold. This fair being held here is the only circumstance which preserves the village from obscurity. Distance from Andover, 3 m. W. by N. Pop., in 1801 and 1831, as also the A. P. included in Penton-Grafton, in 1811 and 1821, they were included in Wey-bill

WEYMOUTH,

Or WAYMOUTH and MELCOMBE-REGIS, a seaport, borough, and market-town, possessing independent jurisdiction, in the Dorchester division of the co. of Dorset.

History.—The borough now includes the towns of Weymouth and Melcombe-Regis, of the union of which, the following account is given by Hutchins, in his history of the county of Dorset:—"Weymouth is a more ancient borough than Melcombe, although the latter appears to have enjoyed more privileges. Between these towns arose a great controversy, both enjoying like privileges, and both challenging the particular immunities of the haven which lieth in the very bosom of them. Each of them have taken the overthrow of the other; but not resting by that, continually commenced new suits. At length, having wearied the lords of the council, and other courts, with their contentious importunities, by the advice of that wise councillor, William Cecil, lord-treasurer of England, they were, by act of parliament, in the 13th year of Queen Elizabeth, incorporated into one." The opinion of Weymouth being the more ancient, is founded upon the fact, of there being remains of a vicinal way near the town, which led from the Roman camp at Maiden Castle, to the via Iceniana, where Melcombe-Regis now stands. In a charter of King Athelstan, dated 938, mention is made of this place, in granting to the abbey of Milton "all that water within the shire of Weymouth, and half the stream of that Weymouth out at sea, a saltern," &c. It is mentioned under the name of Wai, or Waia, in Doomsday-book, which is clearly proved to have been Weymouth, by the mention of salterns belonging to it. The ports of Weymouth and Melcombe came into the possession of the monks of St Swithin in Winchester, having been granted to them by Henry I. and Henry II., but Weymouth was afterwards exchanged by them for some other possessions, and then became the property of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, who obtained many privileges and immunities for it from Henry III. and Edward I. Lionel, duke of Clarence, obtained for it the privilege of being a borough, and it afterwards reverted to the crown. In the 6th year of the reign of Edward II., collectors were appointed to receive the duties on wine, the staple of that article having been then granted to it. In the succeeding reign, we find it, in conjunction with Melcombe, furnishing its proportion of the number of ships required by the king, for the expedition to Gascony. In the year 1347, the proportion furnished by it, and most probably by Melcombe, was 20 ships and 264 men; the armament, of which this formed a part, was destined for the siege of Calais. Margaret, wife of King Henry VI., landed at this port, when she made her unsuccessful attempt, in 1471, to re-establish her husband on the throne of England. In the 20th year of the reign of Henry VII., Philip, King of Castile, on his voyage from the Low

Countries to Spain, was obliged, through stress of weather, to put in here for the purpose of refitting, which he endeavoured to do without the knowledge of the king; Sir John Carew and Sir Thomas Trenchard having however marched to the spot with a body of troops, being apprehensive that the visit was made with hostile intentions, detained him until he had an interview with King Henry at Woolverton, the seat of Sir Thomas Trenchard. In 1568, when England was threatened by the formidable armada, fitted out by Spain, Weymouth contributed a subsidy of six ships, and one of the Spanish vessels having been taken by the English, was brought into the port of Weymouth. Melcombe-Regis, which forms the other part of this borough, is situated on the northern side of the harbour, and the name is derived from the circumstance of an ancient mill having existed formerly here; it formerly formed part of the royal demesne, from which the second part of the name is derived. In the Norman survey, no mention is made of this place, it having been at that time included within the parish of Radipole, and within the demesnes of the abbey of Cerne. From the monks it came into the possession of the crown, even before Weymouth; and in the reign of Edward I. we find it made part of the dowry of Queen Eleanor, who granted many valuable privileges and immunities to the town. In the reign of Edward III., the trade of this place had increased considerably, and it was then made one of the staple towns for wool. In the succeeding reign of Richard I., it was burned by the French, who landed on this coast, and suffered so much from this, that the inhabitants petitioned to be excused from paying the customs usually levied at this port. Edward IV. granted them a very advantageous charter, which conduced greatly to the prosperity of the town. By this charter the burgesses were put on the same footing as the citizens of London. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth, as already mentioned, the two boroughs were united, under the name of "the united borough and town of Weymouth and Melcombe-Regis," which arrangement has continued to the present day, having been confirmed in the succeeding reign. The prosperity of this place did not continue to increase, it having suffered severely during the civil wars between the parliamentary and royalist parties. In 1644, having been for some time previous in the hands of the royalists, it fell into the hands of the parliamentary party, who, on this occasion, obtained possession of a number of ships and a large quantity of arms and ammunition. The royalists again attempted to gain possession of this place, but were finally obliged to raise the siege, after persevering for about 18 days. It appears afterwards to have been made the scene of many subsequent military operations, a fort having been built here in 1645; and great damage having been occasioned to the town, which was obliged to petition for an indemnification for the destruction of their chapel and bridge, which reconstruction appears to have been at the time disregarded, though afterwards, in 1666, complied with. A fire having taken place in 1673, a sum of £3000 was obtained toward repairing the damage. The town of Poole having shortly after this risen into greater importance, it absorbed a great part of the trade; and the harbour having become partly decayed, the decline of the town appears to have been gradual, but steady, till about the year 1763, when it became a resort for sea-bathing; and having been visited by the duke of Gloucester, and afterwards by the late King, George III., and his family, with great benefit, in 1789, who made it their summer residence, it acquired general notice, and became immediately a place of fashionable resort.

Description.—The town is well situated at the mouth of the river Wey, in a small bay in the English channel. The river divides it into two parts, that on the north being Melcombe, which is situated on a peninsula, the isthmus of which separates the waters of the bay from the estuary of the river; Weymouth is on the south side, at the foot of a hill. These two parts of the town are connected with a handsome stone bridge, consisting of two arches, and a swivel in the centre, erected about 13 years ago by act of parliament. While the bridge was in course of erection, a great number of silver coins, principally of the reigns which preceded the commonwealth, were discovered in an urn; and in taking down an old house, a crucifix was discovered about four inches in length. Since the town has become a place of fashionable resort, a number of handsome and commodious buildings have been erected. On the esplanade, which is a spacious terrace fronting the sea, and defended from it by an artificial barrier of stone, in length about one mile, is one of the most delightful marine promenades in the world. To the west of the town is situated a commodious and extensive range of barracks. The royal lodge, which was the place of residence of George III., and the other members of the royal family who visited this place, is an assemblage of handsome building, of an appearance not at all uniform. The theatre, in Augusta-place, is a neat building, with excellent accommodation; it is open for about four nights in the week during the season, and is capable of accommodating about 300 persons in the boxes. The assembly-rooms are commodious and spacious buildings, erected at an expense of about £6000, which sum was raised in shares of £100 each; they include also an hotel, provided with stabling and other conveniences, and the whole range of buildings are about 600 feet in length, by about 250 in breadth. Assemblies are held here during the season, under the superintendence of a master of the ceremonies. The public library on the esplanade is a handsome building. The best houses are in Belvidere, the Crescent, Gloucester-row, Royal-terrace, Chesterfield-place, York-buildings, Charlotte-row, Augusta-place, and Brunswick, Clarence, Pulteney, and Devonshire buildings. The windows in the greater part of these houses command an extensive view of the sea, including also some noble ranges of hills, the whole diversified by the numerous vessels and yachts which are constantly passing. The town, particularly Melcombe, is well paved and lighted, an act of parliament having been obtained for that purpose so long ago as 1776; it is also well supplied with water, which is brought by means of pipes from a spring in the parish of Sutton. The houses belonging to the towns-people are in general indifferent, being usually roofed with tiles, and built of stone. Near the town is a tolerably good race-course, and the races have taken place in August since 1821. Among the prizes run for, may be mentioned the king's plate of 100 guineas, the mayor's of 50 guineas, the member's of 50 guineas, the Gordon of £50, and the plate given by the ladies and tradesman. A splendid regatta is annually held at the same time as the races, in the bay, which is excellently adapted to the purpose, being almost constantly protected from violent winds, as it is only when the wind blows very violently from the south or south-west that the waters are affected. Bathing machines, in great numbers, are constantly to be had, and the beach, from its extremely uniform depth, is admirably adapted for bathing. The higher and lower jetties are situated at the south entrance to the harbour. Many parts of the eastern side of the harbour are now covered with houses, the sea having retired considerably. On the Weymouth side are the look-out and the nothe, on the latter of which is a battery, in which were formerly some pieces of cannon, which are now in Portland-castle. The fort contains accommodation for a lieutenant and a few men, and there is a signal post which is arranged so as to communicate with others beyond the walls. This town is not only made the summer, but also the fixed residence of many opulent families, who have been induced to do so from the great purity of the air, and the excellent nature of the society. Weymouth, or Sandsfoot-castle, is situated about half a mile to the south-west of the town, of which the following account is extracted from Grose's Antiquities of England:—"From the ruinous state in which this building now appears, one would be apt to imagine it of much greater antiquity than it really is, it being of no older date than about the year 1539, when it was erected by King Henry VIII., at the time when he was fortifying the coast against the invasions of those enemies he expected the pope would raise against him, on account of the changes he had made, and was making, in the religion of this kingdom. Leland, in his Itinerary, called it the new castle. In the last civil war Weymouth was several times taken by both parties; when, although no particular mention is made of the castle, doubtless it had its share in these transactions; particularly as, in 1641, the parliamentarians converted a chapel, formerly standing here, into a fort, from which they battered Melcombe-Regis. It is, therefore, not likely they would omit making use of this castle, which must then really have been far from a contemptible post, and was, when entire, extremely defensible against troops much better provided and disciplined than those which composed either army. This perhaps may account for its present shattered condition. It stands on the edge of a cliff, opposite another castle built about the same time, on the peninsula of Portland, from which it is separated by a bay nearly three miles broad, called the Road of Portland. The body of the castle is a right angled parallelogram, its greatest length running from north to south. At its north end was a tower on which were the arms of England, supported by a wivern and an unicorn. The north part seems to have been the governor's apartment, and is all vaulted. Near its south end there is a lower building, said to have been the gun-room; this being broader than the other part of the edifice, forms flanks, which defend its east and west sides, and on the south front is semicircular; before, there was formerly a platform for cannon. On the east and west sides there are embrasures for guns, and below them two tier of loop holes for small arms, the lowest almost level with the ground. The north front is nearly destroyed, but the remains of an arch or gateway show that the entrance was on that side. The whole edifice seems to have been cased with squared stones, the walls were thick and lofty, and the buildings, though small, were not inelegant. Since the restoration, it has been neglected and suffered to fall to ruin. The north-east and south sides were, at a small distance, surrounded by a deep ditch and earthen rampart, through which, on the east front, was a gate faced with stone, part of which is still remaining. Mr Hutchins calls it Sandesfoot or Sandesfort-castle."

Trade.—The trade of this port was formerly very extensive, about 80 vessels being employed in the fisheries of Newfoundland, and many others in the trade with France, Spain, and Norway. The Newfoundland trade has, however, been almost totally absorbed by the rapidly increasing town of Poole, and from sand having gradually been filling up the bay, many vessels are now prevented from approaching the town. Some vessels are still, however, sent to the Mediterranean and Newfoundland, and a number are employed in the coasting trade. Here have been bonded warehouses since an order in council was obtained to that effect in 1817, and tobacco, wine, brandy, geneva, rice, coal, and timber, are imported; Portland stones, Roman cement, bricks, tiles, slates, corn, and flour, are exported to a considerable extent. In 1829, 87 vessels belonged to this port, of the total tonnage of 7175 tons; and, in 1828, 404 vessels were entered for loading, and 420 cleared outwards. A considerable number of ships are built here, and many of the other branches connected with ship-building, are carried on here to a considerable extent. The custom-house, a commodious building, is situated on the quay, which has, from the accumulation of sand, been rendered inaccessible to any but ships of small tonnage. A regular communication is kept up with Guernsey and Jersey, &c., by means of three steam packets, which sail every Wednesday and Saturday, as also by a cutter, which leaves the port once a-week for the conveyance both of passengers and goods. Tuesday and Friday are market-days, and the market is well supplied with fish from the vicinity, and with mutton from the isle of Portland.

Municipal Government.—Weymouth, before its union with Melcombe-Regis, returned members to parliament in the 12th year of the reign of Edward, and Melcombe began to do so about four years before: having been united, they continued under the old charter till 1803, when it was lost through the corporation neglecting to have vacancies in its body filled up. It was, however, immediately renewed by George III. By this charter the government of the borough is vested in a mayor, recorder, two bailiffs, aldermen, the number of which is not fixed, but is seldom less than eight, and 24 principal burgesses, assisted by a town-clerk, two sergeants-at-mace, and other subordinate officers. The election of the mayor and other magistrates, takes place on St Matthew's day. The mayor is also coroner and clerk of the market, and is elected by the inhabitants; the bailiffs are elected by the corporation; and the town-clerk and recorder by the mayor and aldermen. A court-leet is held at Michaelmas. At the same time a court is held by the mayor, recorder, and two bailiffs, who are justices of the peace, ex officio, for the trial of all offences not capital; but this court is merely held pro forma, as no prisoners have been tried for many years. A court of record for the recovery of debts to any amount, is held by the incorporation every Tuesday. In the market-place is situated the town-hall, where the courts are held and other corporation business transacted, and under it is a small prison. The borough is the only one, except the city of London, which returned four members to parliament, the right of election being vested in the corporation and all freeholders not in receipt of alms, the number of voters being about 600, and the mayor the returning officer. Under the provisions of the reform act it has been deprived of two of its members.

Living, &c.—The living of Weymouth is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Wyke-Regis, in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, not in charge. The church—which is now in ruins—is ded. to St Nicholas. The parish of Melcombe was originally a chapelry to that of Radipole, but was separated from it and made an independent parish in 1606. The chapel was then taken down and a new church erected, ded. to St Mary. The living of this parish is a rectory, to which is annexed the perpetual curacy of Radipole, in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £11 5s. 5d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of W. Wyndham, Esq. The church having fallen into a state of extreme disrepair, it was rebuilt in 1817, pursuant to an act of the 55th Geo. III., and appropriated to the use of the inhabitants of Weymouth and Melcombe-Regis. The interior is handsome, and contains a good altar-piece, representing the Last Supper, from the pencil of Sir James Thornhill. The number of sittings is 2000, and the incorporated society for the enlargement of churches and chapels contributed £800 for the construction of 800 sittings, 400 of which are free. The Baptists, Independents, Society of Friends, and Wesleyan Methodists, have each places of worship here. Here are several small bequests for the purposes of education, among which may be mentioned a sum of £20 bequeathed by Mr Taylor in 1753, the interest of which is appropriated to teaching two boys the principles of navigation; another of £70 for the purpose of educating eight boys; and a third, the annual amount of which is £21 10s., arising from a sum left by Mr Harbin in 1708. Here is a school conducted on the national system of education, and another on the Lancastrian, both of which are supported by subscription; at the former 600, and at the latter 200, children of both sexes receive instruction. A small portion of an almshouse in St Mary's-street, built by Sir James Thornhill, is still in existence, but the greater part has been taken down, it having fallen into decay through want of an endowment. Here are also Dorcas and Samaritan societies for the clothing of the poor and otherwise providing for their wants. Here is a mineral spring on the Dorchester road, the water of which is much used in scrofulous complaints. There was formerly a priory of Black canons situated near the centre of the town; it was founded by the family of the Rogers of Bryanston, and was dedicated to St Winifred. The buildings were formerly extensive, built in a quadrangular form, but have long since disappeared, and their site is occupied with several small houses, in digging the foundation of which, an immense quantity of human bones were discovered. Near the town of Weymouth is a remarkable burning cliff, which, far from abating in its fury, has been lately even more violent than it was ever before known to be. Large masses of blue lias, which, on being cut and polished, exhibit beautiful specimens of spar, cornua, ammonites, &c., have been lately discovered near Melcombe-Regis. Sir James Thornhill, the celebrated painter, who represented the borough in the reign of George I., was a native of this last named town. Weymouth, at present, gives the title of baron to the family of Thynne, and Melcombe formerly gave the same title to that of Bubb Doddington. Distance from London, 128 m. S.W. by W.; from Dorchester, 8 m. S. by W. United pop., in 1831, 7635. Pop. of Weymouth, in 1801, 1267; in 1831, 2529. A. P., £2,927. Of Melcombe-Regis, in 1801, 2350; in 1831, 5126. A. P., £12,542.

WHABURLEY, a hamlet in the parish of Stoneley, in the co. of the city of Coventry, within the co. of Warwick.

WHADDON, a parish, formerly a market-town, in the second division of the three hundreds of Cottesloe, co. of Buckingham, containing the hamlet of Nash. The market has been now long discontinued. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £10, returned at £126 1s. 6d., and in patronage of the warden and fellows of New college, Oxford. Church ded. to St Mary. Here is a charity school founded by Mr Goara, and endowed by him with £10 annual income, on which endowment twenty children are educated. An almshouse was erected by the same benefactor, but not endowed, he having died before carrying his intentions to that extent. At Snalleshall existed a small priory of Benedictine monks, previous to the time of Henry III.; it was dedicated to St Leonard, and founded by Ralph Martel, and at the general dissolution of monasteries and abbeys in the reign of Henry VIII., the annual revenue was estimated at £24. The prior obtained, in 1227, the grant of a weekly market to be held on Thursday, which, as already mentioned, is now disused. Whaddenhall is situated within the parish, and was visited in 1568 by Queen Elizabeth on her visit to this county, it being then in the possession of Arthur Lord Grey. Browne Willis the antiquary, and Edmund Spenser the poet, frequently made this place their residence, the latter being Lord Grey's secretary. Here was born in 1499, Dr Richard Cox, afterwards bishop of Ely, who was one of the principal composers of the Liturgy, and a great champion of the reformed church at the Reformation. Distance from Stoney-Stratford, 5 m. S. by E. Pop. of Whadden, (exclusive of Nash, which is returned separately,) in 1801, 545; in 1831, 512. A. P., £2,653. Total pop., in 1831, 689.

WHADDON, or WHADDON DE SCHALLARS, a parish in the hundred of Armingford, co. of Cambridge. It is situated on both sides of the river Cam. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Ely, rated at £7 2s. 5d., returned at £107 13s. 11d., and in patronage of the dean and canons of Windsor. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Royston, 4½ m. N. Pop., in 1801, 221; in 1831, 339. A. P., £1,701.

WHADDON, a parish in the middle division of the hundred of Duddeston and King's-Barton, co. of Gloucester. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £12 10s., returned at £38 5s., and in patronage of Wm. Capel, Esq., in 1829. Church ded. to St Margaret. Distance from Gloucester, 3 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 68; in 1831, 152. A. P., £1,304.

WHADDON, a parish in the hundred of Melksham, co. of Wilts. It is intersected by the river Avon. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £8 4s. 4d., returned at £134 7s. 2d., and, in 1829, in patronage of W. Long, Esq. The Kennet and Avon canal passes through the parish. Distance from Trowbridge, 2½ m. N.E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 86; in 1831, 58. A. P., £1,439.

WHALE, a hamlet in the parish of Lowther, co. of Westmoreland, situated near the south end of Lowther-park. Distance from Penrith, 5½ m. S. by E.

WHALESBONE, a hundred in the rape of Lewes, co. of Sussex, near the centre of the county, containing two parishes, and, in 1831, 24,483 inhabitants. The town of Brighton is within this hundred.

WHALEY, a joint township with Yeardeley, in the parish of Taxall, hundred of Macclesfield, co. palatine of Chester. The Peak-forest canal passes this township. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Stockport, 9½ m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 225; in 1831, 403. A. P., £1,606.

WHALEY, a hamlet in the parish of Hope, co. of Derby.

WHALLEY, a parish, containing the borough and market-town of Clitheroe; the market-towns of Barnley and Colne; the chapelrys of Old Accrington, Altham, Bacup, Cliviger, Downham, Goldshaw-Booth, Great Marsden, New-Church with Deadwin-Clough, Padiham, and Pendleton; and the townships of New Accrington, Barley with Whitby-Booths, Barrowford, Higher Booths, Lower Booths, Briercliffe with Eastwistle, Chaburn, Dunackshaw, Foulridge, Habergasham-Eaves, Hapton, Heyhouses, Higham-Booth, Ready-Hallows with Filly-Close and New Laurel-Booth, Huncoat, Lightenhill-park, Little Marsden, Mearley, Little Milton, Read, Rough-Lee-Booth, Simonstone, Trawden-Forest, Twiston, Whalley, Wheatley-Carr, Wiswell, Worthorn, Werston, and Yate with Pickup-Bank, in the higher division of the hundred of Blackburn; and the market-town of Haslingden, the chapelry of Church-Town, and the townships of Bowland with Leagram, Clayton-le-Moors, and Oswaldtwistle, in the lower division of the hundred of Blackburn, co. palatine of Lancaster; and the township of Willington, in the second division of the hundred of Eddisbury, co. palatine of Chester; it is said also that it stretches into the co. of York, comprising the chapelry of Whitwell, in the western division of the wapentake of Staincliffe and Ewcross, west riding of that county. Altogether this extensive parish contains about 50 market-towns, chapelrys, and townships, being about 30 miles in length and 15 in breadth; it is, however, by no means so considerable in size as it formerly was, having anciently included what are now the parishes of Blackburn, Chipping, Mitten, Ribchester, Rochdale, and Slaidburn. The rivers Ribble and Calder unite their waters near the western extremity of the parish.—Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chester, rated at £6 3s. 9d., returned at £115, and in patronage of the archbishop of Canterbury. Church ded. to All Saints. It is a spacious building principally in the early English style of architecture; the chancel in particular is a remarkably fine specimen of that style, and in the interior are 18 stalls of ancient workmanship, and also some beautifully wrought screen-work, which formerly belonged to the abbey which existed here, and of which Bishop Tanner gives the following account in his Notitia Monastica:—"Henry Lucy, earl of Lincoln, having given the advowson of the parish church of Whalley to the White monks of Stanlawe in Cheshire, they procured the same to be appropriated to them, whereupon, in the year 1296, they removed their abbey hither, and increased the number of their religious to sixty. There was another removal proposed to a place called Toostathe, by Thomas, earl of Lancaster, in the year 1316, but it seems not to have taken effect. Whalley was dedicated to the blessed Virgin Mary, and, at the suppression, had revenues to the yearly value of £321 9s. 1d. according to Dugdale, and £551 4s. 6d. according to Speed. It was granted to Richard Ashton and John Braddyll, in the 7th year of King Edward VI." The remains of this abbey are very magnificent, and exhibit specimens of the early, decorated, and later styles of architecture. The free grammar school which exists in the township was founded by Queen Elizabeth, and the school-room having become dilapidated, it was rebuilt in 1725 by subscription, and at the same time a dwelling-house was erected for the master. The school is endowed with an annuity of £4 14s., bequeathed by John Chewe and Sir Edmund Ashton, which is paid to the master, who also receives a sum of £12 8s. 2d. arising from the rents granted by the crown. Only about 12 boys are at present taught on the foundation, although all boys within the township are entitled to receive instruction. The township, along with the schools of Middleton and Barnley, possesses an interest in 13 scholarships, founded by Dr Nowell in 1572, in Brazen-nose college, Oxford. Here is a school conducted on the national system, built in 1819, and supported by subscription. Distance from Clitheroe, 4 m. S. by W. Total pop. of the parish, in 1831, 97,868. Of the township of Whalley, in 1801, 876; in 1831, 1151. A. P., £2,627. The returns for the other townships, &c., are given under the different heads.

WHALTON, a parish in the western division of Castle ward, co. of Northumberland. It contains the townships of Newnham, Ocle or Ogle, Riplington, and Whalton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham, rated at £13 8s. 14d., and, in 1820, in patronage of the trustees of the late — Bates, Esq. The church is an ancient structure with a tower, to which parapets and pinnacles were added in 1783, at which time the church underwent repair. Here is a small charity, endowed with a sum, left in 1720 by Margaret Moer, the annual income of which is appropriated to the education of a few poor children. The village is well built, and pleasantly situated. The rivers Blythe and Howburn intersect the parish. Here are still visible some remains of Ogle castle, in a tolerable state of preservation, surrounded with a double ditch, and situated about a mile and a half to the south of the village. Here are also some ancient earth-works, which are supposed by antiquaries to have inclosed the ancient residence and castle of the barons of Whalton. Distance from Morpeth, 6 m. S.W. by W. Pop. of the whole parish, in 1831, 936. A. P., £9,985. Pop. of the township of Whalton, in 1801, 263; in 1831, 311. The returns of pop., for the other townships, are given under the several heads.

WHAPLODE, a parish in the wapentake of Eileo, parts of Holland, co. of Lincoln. It contains the chapelry of Whaplode-Drove. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £16 14s. 9^d., and, in patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Mary. It having lately received a grant of £200 from the incorporated society, for the enlarging and building of churches and chapels, it has been greatly repaired, and has received an addition of 200 seats, of which 130 are free. Here is a school endowed with lands and houses, bequeathed in 1708 by Elisha Wilson and Frances his wife, for that purpose. Distance from Holbeach, 2½ m. W. Total pop., in 1831, 1998; pop. of the parish, exclusive of Whaplode-Drove, in 1801, 935; in 1831, 1418. A. P., £9,312.

WHARLES, a joint township with Treales and Roseacre, in the parish of Kirkham, hundred of Amounderness, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Distance from Kirkham, 2½ m. N.E. by N. The pop. and A. P. are returned under Treales.

WHARNELEY, a constabulary in the parish of Warden, co. of Northumberland. Distance from Hexham, 4 m. N.W. by W.

WHARRAM-PERCY, a parish in the wapentake of Buckrose, E. R., co. of York, containing, besides the township of Wharram-Percy, those of Ralsthorpe-with-Birdall, Thixendale, and Towthorpe. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of the E. R. and dio. of York, rated at £11 13s. 4^d., returned at £52, and, in 1829, in the joint patronage of Miss Inglesfield and Miss Isted, the sisters and co-heiresses of the late Sir Charles Buck. The church is a neat edifice, consisting of a nave, chancel, and side aisles, with an embattled tower of Norman architecture in the lower part at the west end. The chancel is modern, having been rebuilt a few years ago, and the whole church underwent a thorough repair in 1829. The interior is neat. On the north side are the remains of two pointed arches, and on the south side marks of two others of a circular form, and one pointed, which formerly separated the body of the church from the aisles. At the west end is a circular font, which gradually diminishes in depth, and stands on three steps.

WHARRAM-IN-THE-STREET, or WHARRAM-LE-STREET, a township and parish in the wapentake of Buckrose, E. R., co. of York. Living, a discharged vicarage in the peculiar jurisdiction of the court of the dean and chapter of York, rated at £60, returned at £70, and, in 1831, in patronage of Lord Middleton. The church—which is ded. to St Mary—is a neat edifice, consisting of a nave and chancel, with a square tower at the western extremity. The interior is plain. The village is pleasantly situated on a gentle ascent, and commands some good views. Distance from New-Malton, 6½ m. S.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 112; in 1831, 150. A. P., £1,922.

WHARTON, or WAARTON, a township in the parish of Davenham, hundred of Northwich, co.-palatine of Chester. Distance from Middlewich, 2½ m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 753; in 1831, 1060. A. P., £3,062.

WHELDRAKE, a parish containing the township of Langwith, partly in the liberty of St Peter of York, and partly in the wapentake of Ouse and Derwent, E. R., co. of York. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York, rated at £25 17s. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., and in patronage of the archbishop of York. The church—which is ded. to St Helen—is a large edifice, containing a nave and chancel, with a tower at the west end. The latter is of stone, embattled with pinnacles at the angles, and pointed windows. The rest of the church is of brick, with circular headed windows, and a semi-hexagonal finish at the east end. It was rebuilt, and the tower repaired, in 1778 and 1779. The interior is spacious; at the west end is a large gallery; the font is of modern workmanship. The church-yard was enlarged in 182½ by the gift of 30 perches of land, by P. B. Thomson, Esq., M. P., lord of this manor. The Wesleyan Methodists and Methodists of the New Connexion, have each a place of worship here. Here is a charity, endowed with funds to the amount of £12 per annum, which is appropriated to the education of about 20 children. The endowment arises from bequests made by Silvester Walker in 1775, and others. Wheldrake-hall was taken down about 8 years ago. A bailiff is appointed at a manorial court, which is sometimes held here for the recovery of small debts. Distance from York, 7½ m. S.E. Total pop., in 1831, 691: exclusive of Langwith, in 1801, 493; in 1831, 647. A. P., £4,507.

WHELNETHAM (LITTLE). See WELNETHAM (LITTLE).

WHELPINGTON-KIRK, a parish in the north-eastern division of Tindale ward, co. of Northumberland. It includes the townships of Great Bavington, Capheaton, Catcherside, Coldwell, Crogdean, Fawns, Little Harle, West Harle, Kirk-Whelpington, and West Whelpington. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham, rated at £7 3s. 4d., and in patronage of the bishop of Durham. The church is ded. to St Bartholomew, and is an ancient structure, being part of a much larger one, which formerly existed. The parish is extensive, and is principally laid out in sheep and dairy farms. Peat is found to great extent in the moors, and is much used here for fuel. Limestone and sandstone are quarried also to a considerable extent. Here is a spring which has been long famous for the cure of chronic complaints, the basis of which has been discovered, on analysis, to be principally sulphur. Within the parish are many traces of ancient earthworks, both circular and square, which are supposed to have been thrown up for the protection of the castles, against the inroads of the Scottish moss-troopers, during the destructive wars which often raged between England and Scotland, from the consequence of which, places in this part of the country so often suffered. The vicarage-house was formerly fortified, being then known under the name of Whelpington tower. The small river Wansbeck has its source in this parish, and falls into the sea near Seaton-Delaval. Distance from Billingham, 11 m. E. by N. Pop. of the whole parish, in 1831, 789: of the township of the same name, in 1801, 234; in 1831, 260. The returns of population for the other townships are given under their several heads. A. P., £9,184.

WHELPINGTON (WEST), a township in the parish of Kirk-Whelpington, north-eastern division of Tindale ward, co. of Northumberland. The remains of a castle, commonly called Horn's castle, situated on an eminence within the township, are now used as a farm-house. Distance from Morpeth, 15½ m. W. Pop., in 1801, 43; in 1831, 72. A. P. returned along with that of the parish of Kirk-Whelpington.

WHELPLEY, a hamlet, formerly a chapelry, in the parish of Downton, hundred of Frustfield, co. of Wilts. The chapel—which is now demolished—was ded. to St Leonard, and rated at £2 13s. 4d.

WHENBY, a parish in the wapentake of Bulmer, N. R., co. of York. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York, rated at £4 8s. 4d., returned at £120, and, in 1831, in patronage of W. Garforth, Esq. Church ded. to St Martin. Distance from Easingwold, 8 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 87; in 1831, 115. A. P., in 1815, £1,665.

WHEPSTEAD, a parish in the hundred of Thingoe, co. of Suffolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, rated at £14 4s. 2d., and, in 1829, in patronage of R. Freeman, Esq. Twelve poor children are instructed from the rent of land bequeathed in 1721 by Thomas Sparko: the annual value is now about £16. Distance from Bury-St-Edmunds, 4½ m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 546; in 1831, 618. A. P., £3,421.

WHERSTEAD, a parish in the hundred of Sampford, co. of Suffolk. The river Orwell flows along the north-eastern boundary of the parish. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, returned at £130, and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Mary. "In an old deed without date, to which Gerard, prior of Ipswich, is one of the witnesses, is mention of the monastery of Whercestide, perhaps some small foundation of short continuance, united to the priory of St Peter and St Paul in Ipswich, to whom belonged the church and manor and several lands in this village."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Ipswich, 3 m. S. by W. Pop., in 1801, 237; in 1831, 233. A. P. £2,758.

WHERWELL, a parish in the hundred of Wherwell, Andover division of the co. of Southampton. It includes the tything of West-over. The parish is traversed by the rivers Ande and Test, the former of which flows into the Redbridge and Andover canal. Living, a vicarage with the perpetual curacies of Bullington and Tufton, in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £14, and in patronage of the incumbent of the sinecure rectory, which was a prebend in the nunnery of Wherwell, rated at £44 11s. 0½d. The rector, in 1829, was J. Iremonger, Esq. Church ded. to the Holy Cross. An annual fair for cattle is held on the 24th September. "A Benedictine nunnery of the foundation of Elfrida, queen dowager of King Edgar, about the year 986, to expiate for her being concerned in the murders of her first husband Ethelwolve, that she might be queen, and also of her son-in-law King Edward, that her own son Ethelred might be king. Herein she spent the latter part of her life very penitently, as it is said, and was here buried. This abbey was ded. to the Holy Cross and St Peter, and endowed at the suppression with £339 8s. 7d. per annum, as Dugdale, and £403 12s. 10d., as Speed."—Tanner's Not. Mon. These barbarous events, with the subsequent piety of Queen Elfrida, are commemorated in the following inscription, on a stone cross within the parish: "About the year of our Lord, DCCCCLXIII., upon this spot, beyond the time of memory, called Dead Man's Plack, tradition reports that Edgar—surnamed the Peaceable—king of England, in the ardour of youth, love, and indignation, slew with his own hand his treacherous and ungrateful favourite, Earl Athelwold, owner of this forest of Harewood, in resentment of the earl's having basely betrayed the royal confidence, and perfidiously married his intended bride, the beauteous Elfrida, daughter of Ordgar, earl of Devonshire, who afterwards became the wife of Edgar, and by him mother of King Ethelred II. Queen Elfrida, after Edgar's death, murdered his eldest son, King Edward the Martyr, to make way for her own, and founded the nunnery of Wherwell." Distance from Andover, $\frac{3}{4}$ m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 531; in 1831, 686. A. P., £3,479. These returns include the tything of Fallerton and Westover, which are within the parish.

WHESSAL, a joint-township with Beaumont-Hill, in the parish of Houghton-le-Skerne, south-eastern division of Darlington ward, co.-palatine of Durham. The Stockton and Darlington railway crosses this parish. Distance from Darlington, $\frac{2}{4}$ m. N.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 77; in 1831, 123. A. P., £1,133, including the township of Beaumont-Hill.

WHETSTONE, a hamlet in the parish of Tideswell, hundred of High-Peak, co. of Derby. Distance from Tideswell, $\frac{1}{4}$ m. W. Pop., in 1801, 47; in 1831, 75. A. P., £749.

WHETSTONE, a parish in the hundred of Guthlaxton, co. of Leicester. It is situated on the south-eastern bank of the river Soar. Living, a perpetual curacy, with the vicarage of Enderby, in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, not in charge. Patronage with the vicarage of Enderby. Church ded. to St Matthew. Distance from Leicester, $\frac{5}{4}$ S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 598; in 1831, 903. A. P., £3,161.

WHETSTONE, a hamlet partly in the parish of East Barnet, and partly in that of Fryern-Barnet, co. of Middlesex. Distance from St Paul's cathedral, London, 9 m. N.N.W. Pop. and other returns included in the several parishes.

WICHARN, a parish in Aulderdale ward above Darwent, co. of Cumberland. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, rated at £8 15s., and, in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Lonsdale. Church ded. to St Mary. About 60 children receive education in a school within this parish; the school-room was erected in Churchgate, under the authority of a decree obtained in the court of chancery, in 1688. It has an annual income of £16, payable out of the exchequer, which is claimed in lieu of a supposed grant of that sum by Queen Elizabeth, out of the crown revenues derived from lands in this county. The scholars pay small quarterly fees, which contribute to increase the master's salary. The amount of these quarterages is fixed by trustees appointed in terms of the above mentioned chancery decree. Distance from Ravenglass, 10 m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 235; in 1831, 285. A. P., £2,464.

WHICHBURY, WHITEBURY, or WHITBURY, a parish in the hundred of Cawden and Cadworth, co. of Wilts. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £5 13s. 4d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of J. C. Purvis, Esq. Church ded. to St Leonard. Distance from Fordingbridge, $\frac{3}{4}$ m. N. by W. Pop., in 1801, 132; in 1831, 183. A. P., £1,200.

WHICHFORD, a parish in the Brailles division of the hundred of Kington, co. of Warwick. It contains the hamlets of Ascot and Stowerton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Coventry, and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £19 8s. 6 $\frac{1}{4}$ d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Earl Beauchamp. Church ded. to St Michael. Distance from Shipston-upon-Stour, 6 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, with Ascot, 397; in 1831, 441. A. P., £2,832. Total pop. in 1831, 638. The returns for Stowerton are made separately.

WHICKHAM, a parish in the western division of Chester ward, co.-palatine of Durham. It contains the townships of Fellside, Lowside, Swallow, and Whickham. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Durham, rated at £20 8s. 11 $\frac{1}{4}$ d., and in patronage of the bishop of Durham. The church is ded. to St Mary, and is situated on a gentle declivity. Here is a charity school, founded in 1711 by Robert Thomlinson, D.D., sometime rector of this parish. It derives its income partly from sundry bequests left by him and others, and partly from the rental of certain galleries and pews in the church, erected at the expense of the founder. The school-room was considerably enlarged by Archdeacon Bowyer, about eight years ago. Coal is raised to a considerable extent within the parish. At the time of the Scottish rebellion the English having encamped here and being afterwards hard pressed by the Scots under Leslie, set fire to their camp in order to prevent it from falling into the hands of the Scottish army, which having communicated with a bed of coal, the coal continued to burn with great fury for several years and thus calcined a large bed of earth, which still remains. The village is well built. In addition to the charity already mentioned, the earl of Strathmore allows £10 per annum to a schoolmaster at Fellside, as also the use of a house and schoolroom. Distance from Gateshead, 3 m. W.S.W. Total pop. in 1801, 3659; in 1831, 3848. A. P., £12,109. Pop. of the township of Whickham, in 1831, 873. The pop. of the other townships for 1831, are given under their several heads.

WHIDHILL, a township in the parish of St Sampson, borough of Cricklade, hundred of Highworth, Cricklade, and Staple, co. of Wilts. Distance from Cricklade, 3 m. S.E. Pop. returned with the parish of St Sampson.

WHILE, or WHEYLE, a parish joined to that of Puddleston, in the hundred of Wolphy, co. of Hereford. Living, a discharged rectory with the vicarage of Puddleston, in the archd. and dio. of Hereford, not in charge. Patronage with the vicarage of Puddleston. Distance from Leominster, 5½ m. E. by N. Pop., &c., returned with those of Puddleston.

WHIPCROSS, a hamlet in the parish of Walthamstow, co. of Essex. Distance from St Paul's cathedral, London, 6½ m. N.E. by N.

WHIPPINGHAM, a parish in the liberty of East Medina, isle of Wight division of the co. of Southampton. The parish is bounded on the west by the river Medina, which is here navigable, and on the north-east by the Motherbank. The hamlet of East Cowes, which is separated from West Cowes by the river Medina, is within the parish; as also the smaller hamlets of Burton, Coombly, and Fairlee. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £19 1s. 5½d., and in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church is a spacious edifice, with a tower and spire, principally built in the later style of English architecture; it is ded. to St Mildred. Here is East Cowes castle, the residence of Mr Nash, built on an eminence by himself; it is built in the style of the ancient castles, having one square and two circular embattled towers. A fort formerly existed on Old Castle point, which was built in the reign of Henry VIII., but has now disappeared. Here was formerly an oratory of Augustine monks, founded by John de Insula in 1282, some remains of which are still in existence, and are now used as a farm-house. Distance from Newport, 3½ m. N. by E. Total pop. of the parish, in 1801, 1089; in 1831, 2229. A. P., £8,063.

WHIPSNAD, a parish in the hundred of Manshead, co. of Bedford. Pop., in 1801, 49; in 1831, 58. A. P., £651.

WHISSENDINE, a parish in the hundred of Alstoe, co. of Rutland. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £7 1s., returned at £144, and, in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Harborough. Church ded. to St Andrew. Distance from Oakham, $\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 555; in 1831, 800. A. P., £6,043.

WHISSONSETT, a parish in the hundred of Launditch, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £10 3s. 4d., and, in 1829, in patronage of F. R. Reynolds, Esq. Church ded. to St Mary. The chancel contains several monuments of grey marble, with some effigies of the family of Bozoun. Distance from Fakenham, 5 m. S. Pop., in 1801, 387; in 1831, 628. A. P., £1,376.

WHISTLEY-HURST, a liberty in the parish of Hurst, in the hundred of Charlton, although locally within that of Sonning, co. of Berks. Here is a school with an annual income of £12, arising from subscriptions. Distance from Reading, $\frac{1}{2}$ m. E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 616; in 1831, 864. A. P. returned along with the parish of Hurst.

WHISTON, a township in the parish of Prescott, hundred of West Derby, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Here are a number of collieries, in working which the inhabitants are chiefly employed. Distance from Prescott, 1 m. S. Pop., in 1801, 1031; in 1831, 1468. A. P., £8,407.

WHISTON, a parish in the hundred of Wymersley, co. of Northampton. It is situated on both sides of the river Nene. Living, a rectory, with a detached part of that of Denton annexed, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £14 11s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Boston. The church is a remarkably elegant building, ded. to St Mary, having been built about 300 years ago by Anthony Catesby, Esq. It is principally in the later style of English architecture, consisting of a nave, chancel, and side aisles, with a very lofty tower crowned with pinnacles. In the chancel is a font of an octagonal shape, with the sides richly carved. Here are remains of an ancient moated building, which is said by tradition to have been formerly the residence of King John. Limestone is found to a considerable extent within the parish. Distance from Northampton, $\frac{1}{2}$ m. E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 54; in 1831, 64. A. P., £1,229.

WHISTON, a township in the parish of Penkridge, co. of Stafford. Distance from Penkridge, 2 m. W. Pop., &c. returned with Penkridge.

WHISTON, a township in the parish of Kingsley, northern division of the hundred of Totmonslow, co. of Stafford. Distance from Cheadle, $\frac{3}{4}$ m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 300; in 1831, 549. A. P. included in the return made from Kingsley.

WHISTON, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, W. R., co. of York. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of York, rated at £10, and in patronage of Lord Howard of Effingham. The church—which is ded. to St James—is a low built edifice. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Here are several charities for the purpose of educating the poor, among which may be mentioned, an annual sum of £6 for teaching 12 children, bequeathed by Francis Mansel in 1728; of £5 for the education of 10 children, left in 1719 by Mr Shaw; and of a proportional sum by Joseph Hammond, which is appropriated to teaching 12 children. Distance from Rotham, $\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 672; in 1831, 927. A. P., £5,884.

WHISTONS, or WHISTON, or WYTESTANE, a tithing in the parish of Claines, lower division of the hundred of Oswaldslow, co. of Worcester. Here has been recently erected a new gaol. "A priory of seven or eight White nuns, in the north part of the city of Worcester, said to be founded by a bishop of Worcester. The site of their house, and the donations which had been made to them, were confirmed by the prior and convent of Worcester in the year 1255. It was ded. to St Mary Magdalene, and valued, in the 26th year of Henry VIII., at £53 3s. 7d. per annum, as Dugdale, and £56 3s. 7d. as Speed; and granted, in the 35th year of the same reign, to one Richard Callowhill. In the north suburb of this city (Worcester) was an hospital, which was dedicated to St Oswald, and, as one asserts, founded by Bishop Oswald himself. It was certainly in being before the year 1268, for a master and — brethren, whose income was valued, in the 26th year of Henry VIII., at £14 14s. 4d. per annum, in the whole, and £13 14s. 4d. clear; and upon a new valuation, in the 4th year of the succeeding reign, at £15 18s. It was granted, 33d Henry VIII., to the dean and chapter of Worcester, and was demolished in the reign of Queen Elizabeth; but after the Restoration, Bishop Fell rebuilt it in a sumptuous manner, and recovered many of its possessions, and it still maintains 12 poor men."—Tanner's Not. Mon. It is adjacent to the north side of the city of Worcester. Pop., in 1801, 583; in 1831, 2518. A. P., £3,807.

WHITACRE (NETHER), a parish in the Atherstone division of the hundred of Hemlingford, co. of Warwick. It is situated on both sides of the river Tame. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £8, and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. S. Sadler. Church ded. to St Giles. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Here is a school endowed with one-third of the interest of £1000, bequeathed in 1775 by Charles Jennings, Esq. Distance from Cokeshill, $\frac{3}{4}$ m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 360; in 1831, 413. A. P., £2,540.

WHITACRE (OVER), a parish in the Atherstone division of the hundred of Hemlingford, co. of Warwick. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £10, returned at £140, and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Howe. Church ded. to St Leonard. Here is a charity with a small endowment, appropriated to the education of six poor children; the income arises from a bequest of £40, left in 1760 by the Rev. Thomas Morrall. Distance from Coleshill, $3\frac{1}{2}$ m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 249; in 1831, 288. A. P., £1,881.

WHITBECK, or WHITEBECK, a parish in Allerdale ward above Darwent, co. of Cumberland. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, rated at £9 14s. 8d., returned at £85, and, in 1829, in patronage of W. Parke, Esq. Church ded. to St Mary. Here is an hospital, built in 1632 by the parishioners, and endowed with £24 per annum, Henry Parke, a native of this place, having left £400 for that purpose. The parish is situated near the foot of the mountain of Black-Comb. In this hill is a deep cavity resembling much in appearance the exhausted crater of a volcano. It is several hundred yards in depth, and as broad; at the bottom is a spring of water, and the sides are covered with a semi-vitrified substance. Here is a mineral spring situated near the shore, which was formerly much used in curing scurvy and gravel. The Druidical remains in this parish are highly interesting, being three in number. Standing-stones consists of one circular range of massive stones, eight in number; Kirkstones of thirty, arranged in two circles, in which particular disposition it resembles Stonehenge; the third consists of twelve stones. In addition to these is a large cairn, surrounded with a circle of stones somewhat similar to those already mentioned. Distance from Ravenglass, $8\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 180; in 1831, 234. A. P., £1,848.

WHITBOURNE, a parish in the hundred of Broxash, co. of Hereford. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford, rated at £14 14s. 9d., and in patronage of the bishop of Hereford. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. Here was formerly a palace belonging to the bishops of Hereford, some remains of which are still in existence, being used as a farm-house. Distance from Bromyard, 5 m. E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 770; in 1831, 899. A. P., £4,156.

WHITBURN, a parish in the eastern division of Chester ward, co.-palatine of Durham. It contains the township of Cleedon. It is situated on the sea-coast, and is celebrated both as a fishing and a sea-bathing place; many excellent houses and lodgings have been recently erected for the accommodation of visitors. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Durham, rated at £39 19s. 4d., and in the patronage of the bishop of Durham. The church is an ancient structure of English architecture, with a tower and short spire. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Coal is obtained here, but although plentiful, it is not so advantageously wrought as it would otherwise be, owing to the great depth at which it is for the most part situated. Limestone is obtained here in great abundance, and is chiefly sent up the Tyne to Yorkshire. In the vicinity are several chalybeate springs, in great repute for their supposed medicinal qualities. Several Roman coins, principally copper, have been found on the sea shore, being of the reigns of Constantine, Licinius, Maxentius, and Maximian. Distance from Sunderland, $3\frac{1}{2}$ m. N. Pop., in 1801, 675; in 1831, 1001. A. P., £7,225.

WHITBY, a township partly in the parish of Eastham, and partly in that of Stoke, higher division of the hundred of Wirrall, co.-palatine of Chester. The Ellesmere or Wirrall canal passes near this township. Distance from Chester, $6\frac{1}{2}$ m. N. Pop., in 1801, 170; in 1831, 234. A. P., £1,589.

WHITBY,

A parish in the liberty of Whitby-Strand, N. R. of York. It comprises the sea-port and market-town of Whitby, and the township of Aislaby, Eskdale-Side, Hawsker-cum-Stainsacre, Newholm-cum-Dunsley, Ruswarp, and Ugglebarnby. The town stands on two opposite declivities at the mouth of the Easke, by which river it is divided into two parts, which are connected by a drawbridge, so constructed as to admit vessels of 32 feet in width. The Saxon name of this place was Streoneshalh; and Bede says that it was so called from a watch-tower or light-house which stood on the cliff, on the eastern side of the harbour. It was afterwards called Presteby, or the habitation of priests; then Whiteby, which was easily changed to Whitby. Streoneshalh, with its abbey, was, in the year 867, so entirely destroyed by the Danes, that its very name was lost in its ruins, and the place remained desolate till near the time of the Norman conquest, when a few huts being erected in the place where the town had formerly stood, it took the name of Presteby, from being in the neighbourhood of the ancient residence of monks. But the place was then so inconsiderable, that neither the names of Streoneshalh, Presteby, nor Whiteby, are to be found in Domesday-book, although Egton, Sneton, Dunsley, Stakesby, and several other villages in the neighbourhood are particularly mentioned.—About the year 1123, William, the first abbot, had a dispute with Wicheman, prior of Bridlington, respecting the tithe of fish exacted from the fishermen of Whitby and of Filey; and from the roll for 1396, it appears that the tithes and spiritual dues for the port of Whitby produced £52 13s. 11d. in half a year, besides the tithe fish made use of in the monastery. But it was not merely in the fisheries that the Whitby vessels were then employed; for we find from the rolls of the abbey that some of them were engaged in the coal-trade.—In addition to this, some of the inhabitants appear to have practised piracy, as we find from the following passage in Macpherson's Annals of Commerce:—"1405, July 16th, the king had ordered some pirates of Whitby to make restitution to two Danish merchants, whose vessels they had taken; but they paid no attention to the mandate, and an officer was now ordered to bring them before the king, that they might answer for their disobedience."—At the visit of Leland, 130 years after, Whitby was a fishing town of great note. He does not state what vessels belonged to it, but as he names Robin Hood's bay, 'a fisher townlet of 20 boats,' Whitby, which he calls 'a great fisher town,' must have had many more. After the commencement of the alum trade, the vessels of Whitby increased both in size and number, and it soon ceased to be regarded as a mere fishing town.—In the year 1540, Whitby only contained between 30 and 40 houses, occupied by more than 180, or at the most 200 inhabitants. At this period a few small trading vessels constituted the whole marine belonging to the port. At this time there were piers at Whitby for the convenience of such vessels as entered the harbour; but they were constructed only of wood, with a few loose stones put into the framing, and could never long resist the violence of the sea. Mr Charlton says, that "he could never meet with any certain account of either ship or vessel belonging to the port of Whitby, during the long reign of Elizabeth, except fishing boats only, till after the erection of the alum works at Guisborough. The important discovery of the alum-mine in those parts, at the close of that reign, was the original cause that raised Whitby from its obscurity, and, by opening a channel for commerce, enabled the town to attain a degree of maritime consequence.—The successful progress of the alum-works, established by Mr Chaloner at Guisborough, excited a spirit of emulation, and one of a similar kind was erected in the year 1615 near Sands-end, within three miles of Whitby. This also proving advantageous, and the vicinity of Whitby abounding with alumstone, other adventurers were induced to embark in those undertakings. In consequence of this extended speculation, two great branches of trade were opened at the port of Whitby; one for supplying the works with coal, and the other for conveying the alum to distant parts. The fishermen of Whitby, perceiving a favourable prospect of employment, purchased two or three small vessels, with which they traded to Newcastle and Sunderland for coals, and at length ventured to London with alum, butter, fish, &c., and returned to Whitby freighted with various articles of merchandise. This infant state of commerce was gradually matured; the number of vessels was increased; and new ships were built at this port, from the oak timber which the vicinity produced. From such an inconsiderable beginning, the town of Whitby, by the industry, the enterprise, and successful speculations of its inhabitants, rose to a state of opulence, and became a place of considerable importance."—About the commencement of the commonwealth the population of this part amounted to nearly 2000 persons; and the whole marine belonging to Whitby was about 20 small vessels, manned with 120 or 130 seamen, and all employed in the coasting trade. At the restoration of Charles II., in 1660, the number of inhabitants was increased to nearly 3000, and that of the ships to about 30; an increase which Mr Charlton ascribes to the alum-works at Saltwick. In the year 1690, the number of inhabitants in Whitby was nearly 4000, and 60 ships of 80 tons burden belonged to the port. The town contained many excellent houses, and has been so since 1789, when an act of parliament was obtained for that purpose, and a gas company existed here since 1825. On the north pier is a large stone building, erected by subscription in 1826, and containing, in the lowest story, baths, with every accommodation necessary for bathing. The middle story contains a public library, containing about 5,300 volumes, having been commenced in 1776, and supported by subscription. In the uppermost story is the excellent museum belonging to the Literary and Philosophical society, which has now existed for about ten years. Their museum is rich in fossil remains and petrifications, many of which have been found in the neighbourhood. Here is the celebrated fossil crocodile found in 1824, near Whitby, in an alum rock, which may have measured about 18 feet in length. It contains likewise many excellent specimens of the ammonites, or snake-stones, which, according to the legend, are said to be snakes converted into stone by St Hilda. A botanic garden was established in 1812, but has fallen into decay through want of encouragement. A theatre was erected by subscription in 1784, but having been destroyed by fire in 1823, has not since been rebuilt. Here are two news-rooms which are well supported. Assemblies are occasionally held in a room well adapted to that purpose in the Angel Inn.

Port and Harbour.—The port of Whitby, whatever it might have been in the Roman and Saxon periods, must have been of considerable consequence at the period of the conquest; for it was expressly given to the adjacent abbey by the Percy family, and great care was taken to have the grant repeatedly confirmed by royal and other charters. "Perhaps," says Mr Young, "in the early times of the monastery, the only facilities which it furnished to shipping consisted of a few mooring posts and one or two landing-places, partly formed by nature, and partly improved by art. Yet piers began to be erected long before the dissolution of the monastery, and perhaps the yearly making up of the horngarth had some connexion with the repairing of a pier, quay, or landing-place." Leland, who visited Whitby some time before the reformation, states, that there was 'an havenet holp with a peere,' and that a new quay and port were then 'making of stone, fallen down from the rocks thereby.' Another document, quoted in Young's History of Whitby, informs us, that after the dissolution of the abbey, Henry VIII. employed great sums of money in maintaining the piers at Whitby, for which purpose timber was granted from the king's woods, in the parish of Whitby and the vicinity. In 1632, the piers were found to be in a very ruinous state, and they were repaired through the exertions of Sir Hugh Cholmley, the whole of the west pier being then rebuilt. But as the piers at that time were constructed only of loose stones, strengthened by beams of timber, the violence of the sea soon demolished or greatly injured them; so that within thirty years after the

Whitby piers were again rebuilt and much improved by the Cholmley family, who adopted the plan of driving rows of piles to break the waves, and thus defend the piers from their fury. Notwithstanding these works, Whitby pier is described as in an unfinished state in the latter part of the reign of Charles II. Indeed, nothing effectual was done for placing the piers and harbour on a respectable footing, till the year 1702, when an act of parliament provided funds for that purpose. Several acts have been obtained since, to continue or increase the revenues then provided. These revenues arise from a duty of one halfpenny per chaldron on all coals shipped at Newcastle, Sunderland, Blyth, and their dependencies, except in Yarmouth vessels, with duties on coals, salt, corn, &c., landed at Whitby; on butter and fish shipped at Whitby; and on ships entering the port of Whitby. The first of these duties is the most productive; and the propriety of imposing that burden on the coal trade is obvious, from the consideration that the harbour is an excellent place of refuge for colliers and other coasting vessels in stormy weather. The whole revenues, provided for the maintenance of the piers, average about £2000 yearly. The money is expended under the direction of ten trustees, who have power to fill up vacancies that may occur in their number. An engineer and above 20 workmen are employed on the piers during the greater part of the year.—The improvements made in this harbour since it was taken under the care of the legislature have been very extensive. The west pier has been repeatedly rebuilt, repaired, and enlarged, and has been joined to Haggsgate, one of the principal streets, by the erection of a broad and extensive quay. This pier was completed in 1814, and is an excellent piece of workmanship, which may vie with any pier in the kingdom, either for strength or beauty. It is faced with dressed stones of immense size, some single stones weighing about six tons each; the stones are strongly rivetted together, and many of them mortised into each other. The east pier, which has also been frequently improved and extended, is now enlarging on the outside, in the same kind of durable masonry, forming a powerful barrier to defend the town and port from the fury of the German ocean. The inner piers, which contribute to check the swell of the sea, and at the same time to throw a greater depth of water into the channel, have been built and enlarged at different periods. The burgess pier on the east side, and the Scottish head opposite it on the west, which were formerly short and ill constructed, have, in recent times, been greatly improved. The fish-pier, and the jetty opposite to it at the coffee-house, are modern erections, having been built little more than thirty years ago.—By the extension of the piers, and the consequent contraction of the entrance of the harbour, the sand banks, which formerly obstructed the channel, have been cleared away, and the depth of water has been much increased. The depth at neap-tides is from ten to twelve feet; at spring-tides it is from fifteen to eighteen feet, and sometimes more. The swell of the sea is of course increased with the depth of water, and in stormy weather vessels cannot ride in safety below the bridge; but there is room above the bridge to accommodate a large fleet, the water being sufficiently deep as far as Boggall, though the channel is partly confined on the west side by a bank called the Bell Isle. Above the bridge dolphins are fixed in the middle of the harbour, to which vessels are made fast; and below are placed buoys, or floating mooring-posts, in the spaces between the piers. Spring-tides flow on the shore at half-past three, but are later in the offing. A harbour-master is appointed by the trustees for the piers, to direct vessels to proper moorings, and maintain order in the harbour. The pilots, 14 in number, are also under a governor. There are now two life boats, one on each side of the harbour; and Capt. Manby's apparatus is kept on the west side.—The piers and quays are furnished with mooring-posts, windlasses, and other conveniences for the shipping. There are stairs at various places for descending to the water, particularly from the west pier and the quay; and there are also paved roads leading down into the harbour at various openings called ghauts or gauts, both above the bridge and below it.—The west pier and the quay are not only of the greatest utility to the harbour, but form an excellent promenade for the inhabitants of the town, extending above 600 yards in length. The extremity of the pier is also intended for the defence of the town and harbour, being constructed as a battery for 6 guns. Behind the south end of the same pier, immediately under the west cliff, is a well-built half-moon battery, with a small tower at each angle, and a bomb-proof magazine, with other offices behind it. Here eight guns were mounted in time of war; but within these few years the guns have been removed both from this and the pier-head battery; and long may they continue to be unnecessary.—The batteries are erected from the same funds, and under the direction of the same trustees. All the works connected with this department are executed in a manner that does honour to the trustees and to the engineers whom they have employed.—The port of Whitby having been given to the abbot and convent, whose rights passed to the lord of the manor of Whitby, the harbour is not altogether public property; and vessels entering the port, or delivering goods on any part of the shore of Whitby-Strand, pay dues to the lord of the manor,—Colonel George Cholmley.

Trade, &c.—The improvements which took place in the harbour about the beginning of the last century, as already noticed, so greatly increased the trade of the port, that in 1734, no fewer than 130 vessels, of 80 tons burden, belonged to Whitby, and in that year three spacious dry docks were constructed on the east side of the Eske. During the war, which was terminated by the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, the trade of this port continued in a most flourishing state, so that the inhabitants were able to expend 40 or £50,000 annually in building new ships; and many of them being employed in the transport service, brought in a considerable profit. Opulence produced elegance, its usual concomitant, and the town soon assumed a new appearance. Till that time all the houses had been built either of oak-timber framed, or of stone roughly hewed, and many of them were thatched; but now, stone being almost wholly laid aside, the people of Whitby began to construct spacious and commodious habitations of brick, and many of them in a style of magnificence. In the year 1757, some of the shipbuilders began to make docks on the west side of the river.—Since the establishment of the alum-works in the neighbourhood, and the introduction of shipping at Whitby, the town has been continually increasing in wealth and population; but the increase was slow so long as the harbour was without piers. No sooner, however, were these constructed, and the harbour made commodious, than the town increased with rapidity. In the year 1776, there were 251 ships belonging to this port, besides those on the stocks; and both the marine and the population had more than doubled in the space of forty years preceding. But in 1796, there appeared to have been a decrease in the shipping; for by a register in the custom-house, the tonnage was only 46,535 tons, and the whole was navigated by 2,452 seamen. This decrease was owing to the number of ships taken or destroyed by the enemy. In time of peace, Whitby usually sends 12 or 14 ships to Greenland; this fishery annually employs a great number of seamen, each ship carrying between 40 and 50 hands; and the perils and hardships of the trade have contributed not a little to form that hardy and enterprising character for which the seamen of Whitby have generally been distinguished. The following is an official account of the number of ships, tonnage, and seamen, registered in this port, in the years below:—

	Vessels.	Tonnage.	Seamen.
1816	280	46,341	2674
1820	268	44,855	2651
1821	266	44,327	2565
1822	265	43,744	2534

The exports of Whitby to foreign parts are very limited, they consist principally of alum, whale-oil, and dried fish. The imports are much more considerable; they are chiefly articles of Baltic produce, comprehending timber, deals, hemp, flax, and ashes. The coasting trade is also considerable, and the shipments made hence to other parts of England consist principally of alum, sail cloth, butter, bacon, grain, and leather. The inhabitants of this port have long been noted for their skill in building ships, as well as in navigating them. Mr Jarvis Coates, who appears to have commenced business a little before the year 1700, was one of the first who built large vessels in Whitby. About 1730, the ship-yard of the dock company, at the foot of Green-lane, was commenced, and the double dry-dock was built about four years afterwards. The formation of the ship-yards has contributed much to the enlargement of the town, many houses having been erected in their vicinage, particularly some very handsome dwellings for the shipbuilders; among these, Eske-house, the residence of Thomas Broderick, Esq., holds a conspicuous place.—While the town and harbour of Whitby were receiving successive improvements, the adjacent country was greatly neglected. Till the latter end of the 18th century, the roads about this town lay in a state of nature, rugged, mtry, and uneven; it was dangerous in the winter to approach the town on horseback, but still more so with a loaded carriage. But about that period the roads nearest the town began to be rendered passable, and soon after commodious. The advantages attending these improvements became so evident, that, in 1760, a design was formed to join, as Mr Charlton expresses it, the town of Whitby to the other parts of England, by making turnpike roads over the extensive moors which lie to the southward in the way to Pickering. This design was soon after carried into complete execution, and travellers began to pass without danger or fear, over those deserts which so strange before that time ever durst venture to cross without a guide. The town of Whitby soon derived great advantages from being thus rendered easy of access, as it enabled the country people to bring to the market more abundant and various supplies. An account of the alum-works is given under the historical notice of the town. The custom-house is a commodious edifice in Sandgate, and on the pier is built a small edifice for the use of the governor of the pilots. Here are four mutual marine insurance companies. Whitby is a station for vessels employed on the preventive service. On Saturday is held the market, under a charter of Henry VI., and fairs are held on the 25th of August and on Martinmas day; they are both inconsiderable. Trading vessels leave this port regularly for that of the metropolis, from two wharfs in Church-street.

Municipal Government, &c.—The town has no corporation, and is consequently under the government of the magistrates of the north riding, who hold meetings here three times a week, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays. A court-leet is held annually at Michaelmas, as also a court for the recovery of small debts every third Monday. These courts are held in the townhall, which is almost the only public building in Whitby which deserves notice. The former building which occupied the same site having become decayed, was taken down by the late N. Cholmley, Esq., who, in 1788, erected the present edifice in the Tuscan order of architecture, the lower part of which is open as a piazza, and the upper part adorned with a cupola and clock. Till the passing of the late reform act, Whitby does not appear to have ever been summoned to return members to parliament excepting for a short time during the commonwealth. Under the reform act it sends one member to parliament. The number of electors is about 500.

The living is a perpetual curacy, a peculiar of Hexham cathedral, in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York, not in charge, returned at £50, and in patronage of the archbishop of York. The church—which is ded. to St Mary—is situated near the top of the hill, on the eastern side of the town, a little to the north of the abbey, and is approached from the vale by an ascent of 190 stone-steps, which renders it of difficult access to the old and infirm. The architecture of this church was originally Gothic, but it has undergone many modern alterations, and now retains little of its ancient form. Around the communion-table are tombstones of several of the Cholmley family, who have been interred in this place; but the inscriptions contain nothing remarkable. Near the door of the vestry is a superb monument, erected in 1772 over the grave of General Lascelles, who was a native of Whitby. The epitaph, which is as follows, may be regarded as a biographical memoir of that excellent officer:—"To the memory of Peregrine Lascelles, general of all and singular his majesty's forces, who served his country from the year 1706. In the reign of Queen Anne he served in Spain; and in the battles of Almanara, Saragossa, and Villaviciosa, performed the duties of a brave and gallant officer. In the rebellion of the year 1715, he served in Scotland; and in that of 1745, after a fruitless exertion of his spirit and abilities at the disgraceful rout of Preston-Pans, he remained forsaken on the field. In all his dealings just and disinterested, bountiful to his soldiers, a father to his officers, a man of faith and principle, in short, an honest man. He died March 26th, 1772, in the 88th year of his age."—The church-yard, which contains more than two acres of ground, is, in consequence of the great population of the parish, exceedingly crowded with grave-stones. But, as Mr Charlton observes, the sea-air at Whitby is so destructive to stone of whatever kind, that inscriptions are soon obliterated. Besides the church there are nine places of public worship in this town; namely, in Baxtergate is a chapel of ease, erected in 1778, being a plain edifice of brick, capable of accommodating 800 persons, and has a small spire at the west end;—the Friends' meeting-house was first erected in 1676, and was rebuilt in 1813;—the old Presbyterian chapel in Flowergate was built in 1812;—the United Associates, or New Presbyterians, have a chapel in Cliff-lane, erected in 1790;—the Wesleyans have two chapels, erected in 1788 and 1814;—the Primitive Methodist chapel was built in 1821;—the Independent chapel in 1805;—and the Catholic chapel was erected in the same year.—Among the charitable institutions, the Seamen's hospital deserves notice. It took its rise in the beginning of 1676, and now consists of an hospital, containing 42 houses or rooms, forming a centre with wings. The money distributed yearly among the widows and their children, resident in this asylum, amounts to £300. The dispensary was established in 1786, and the Dorcas society for clothing the aged female poor in 1814. About 600 children are educated at a school, conducted on the Lancasterian plan, held in a commodious building in Cliff-lane.

The following account of Whitby-abbey is extracted from Grose's Antiquities of England and Wales: "This abbey, which was also called the abbey of Streanechalch, Sinus Phari, and Presteby, is in the deanry and archdeaconry of Cleveland. The following history of its foundation is given by Matthew of Westminster, William of Malmesbury, and others: In the year of grace 655; Penda, the Pagan king of Mercia, having invaded Northumberland with a great army, Oswy, king of that district, endeavoured by large offers to prevail on him to withdraw his forces; but finding that both entreaties and offers were equally ineffectual, and that he must have recourse to arms for his relief, he, according to the superstition of those times, endeavoured to secure the divine assistance by the promise of the religious foundations in case he came off victorious; and under that condition made a vow, that his daughter should dedicate herself to the service of God by a life of calibacy, and that he would moreover give 12 of his manors for the erection of monasteries. This done, he engaged and defeated the pagan army, although three times his number; their king, Penda, was slain in the fight. Oswy, in order to fulfil his vow, placed his daughter Ethelfleda, then scarcely a year old, as a nun in the monastery called Hertesie, that is, Stag Island, of which St Hilda was then abbess; who having procured ten families, or hides of land, in the place called Streanechalch, built there a monastery for both men and women, which was dedicated to St Peter, and governed by an abbess. This place was afterwards called Whitby. It was greatly enriched by the donations of Ethelfleda, who succeeded her father, after a reign of 27 years, and here celebrated his funeral with great magnificence.

"Burton, in his account of this monastery, says, 'The building was begun in 657, for men and women of the Benedictine order; and though really founded and dedicated to St Peter, and endowed by king Oswy, yet the honour is generally given to St Hilda, who became first prioress thereof; and it is generally called St Hilda's after her.' Here, according to Tanner, many bishops, and other pious and learned men, were educated.

"The story goes, that in St Hilda's time, this place and its environs were terribly overrun with serpents. These, by the prayers of St Hilda, as the monks asserted, were deprived of their heads, and turned into stones, as the writer of her life very properly observes, to the great amazement of the beholders. But the relators of this miracle have deprived that saintess of half the honour due to her, since she kindly provided houses for the snakes so petrified—all of them being inclosed within a kind of stony matrix. These stones are still found in great quantities, and are what the fossilists call ammonites.

"This monastery continued in a flourishing state till about the year 867, when a party of Danes, under Ingua and Hubba, landed at Dunesley bay, two miles westward of this place, and encamped on an eminence on the east side thereof, still called Raven's hill; which name it is supposed to have obtained from the figure of that bird being worked on the Danish ensign, which was there displayed. From thence straggling into the country, they plundered and laid it waste, and among other depredations entirely destroyed this monastery, which lay in ruins for many years: the community being dispersed, only Titus the abbot fled with the relics of St Hilda to Glastonbury. The title of abbot given to one where the monastery was governed by an abbees, may at first seem inconsistent; but perhaps the superior placed over the men had that appellation, though subordinate to the abbees.

"At the Conquest, Hugh de Abrincis, an expert soldier, and a person of great note among the Norman nobility, had Whitby assigned to him as a reward for his services. This he did not long hold, but disposed of it to William de Percy, his associate in that expedition. Other accounts, and among them that printed in the Monasticon, from the register of the abbey, still in the possession of — Cholmeley, Esq., say, that the town of Whitby was, by the Conqueror, first bestowed on Hugh, earl of Chester, and by him granted to William de Percy and his heirs, to hold it as freely as he held it of the king.

"Whitby being then in the possession of William de Percy, he, in the reign of William the Conqueror, refounded the monastery then lying desolate and in ruins; placing therein Benedictine monks, and dedicating it to the honour of St Peter and St Hilda. He gave it only the title of a priory, his brother Serlo holding the office of prior. Under this title it remained till the reign of Henry I. when it was advanced to the dignity of an abbey. The benefactions granted by this second founder were various and ample; suitable to his rank, munificence, and devotion: among them were, the towns of Whitby, Stainshere, Newham, and Stachesby; the seaport of Wytesby and Hamesson; also Nordfield, Sudsfeld, Everley, Brokesay, and Fornelage; besides churches and fisheries, and divers other donations, too many here to enumerate; and the succeeding heirs of that family continued to endow it from time to time with a variety of valuable gifts, and many of them were there buried.

"Hugh, earl of Chester, shortly after its foundation, granted to this monastery the church of St Peter, of Whitby, with all its dependencies, and also the church of Flamborough, with its tithes. It had also many other noble benefactors, whose names and grants are registered in the Monasticon.

"William de Worcester in his Itinerary, page 360, says Alan Percy was the founder of the Whitby monastery, and that the said Alan gave to the monks of St Hilda five knights' fees.

"In the 26th of Henry VIII. the yearly revenues of this house were estimated at £437 2s. 9d. according to Dugdale; and £505 9s.

1d. Speed. The surrender of Henry Daul the last abbot was, enrolled 14th December 1540.

"Browne Willis gives the following list of pensions, and what was remaining in charge:

"John Hexham had a pension of £26 per annum assigned him, who I conceive resigned his abbacy a little before the dissolution. Ann. 1553 here remained in charge £6 13s. 4d. in fees, and £100 5s. 4d. in annuities, and these following pensions:

"To John Hexham, abbot, £26. Robert Woods, £8. Peter Thompson, £6. William Nicholasone, Thomas Thorpe, Thomas Hewete, Henry Barke, £5 6s. 8d. each; John Watsoune, William Newtonne, William Frome, and Robert Ledley, £5 each.

"The site of this abbey was granted 4th Edward VI. to John, earl of Warwick, by whom, in 1551, it was sold to John York, and in the 1st and 2d of Philip and Mary, by him to Sir Richard Cholmeley, Knt., ancestor of the present proprietor.

"The ruins of this once famous abbey stand on a high cliff south-east of, and overlooking the town, a little to the eastward of the parish church: for the ascending this cliff from the town, there is a flight of 200 steps. A small distance south of the abbey, Mr Cholmeley has a fine mansion, built probably with the materials taken from it. At the west end of these remains stands an ancient cross, mounted on a pedestal, and six steps. At present it is much out of the perpendicular. A passage printed in Leland's Collectanea, from the life of St Hilda, says, that in the painted windows of this abbey it was shown, that, before the arrival of William the Conqueror, the bordering Scots were cannibals or man-eaters, and were, by that king, punished with the sword for so unnatural and savage a practice.

"Several ancient writers, and among them Camden, mention it as an established fact, that the wild geese, which are here very common, were unable to fly over the abbey and its environs; and that in attempting it, they suddenly fell to the ground. This he proceeds to reason upon, and supposes to arise from some antipathy, or hidden quality in the earth. He would have done better if he had not taken the fact for granted; but the doctrine of sympathies and antipathies was much in fashion about his time, and true philosophy at a very low ebb. It is, however, now certain, that St Hilda and her monastery have lost their attractive powers, all sorts of birds now flying over them with impunity.

"The offices of this monastery are entirely taken down. The remains now standing are those of the church, which was once extremely magnificent, but certainly built since the re-foundation of the monastery by Henry de Percy, of which the pointed arches bear indisputable testimony. It may, perhaps, be urged, that these arches were constructed after its first erection; but an attentive consideration of the ruins, or even of this representation of them, will demonstrate them to be coeval with the original building, which seems to have been finished on one uniform plan, and was probably built when these kind of arches were first introduced, and before the round ones were entirely left off, most of the upper ranges east of the tower being circular, as is the case in the monasteries of Brinkburn, Holy Island, Kirkstall, and many others. This church was constructed in the form of a cross, and had three aisles: over the centre of the cross rose a strong square tower. The length of the church was about 252 feet; the breadth of the middle aisle about 30 feet, and that of the side ones, each 13 feet. The height of the tower is 104 feet; that of the wall 60."

Of this magnificent structure nothing now remains for the inspection of the antiquary, but the ruins of the church. Previous to the 25th of June, 1830, this noble ruin was adorned with a central tower 104 feet in height, supported by 4 massive clustered columns. It fell on the above day, having for some years past exhibited rapid symptoms of decay. In this neighbourhood is a chalybeate spring, formerly frequented for its supposed medicinal qualities. In the neighbourhood are several seats, the principal of which is that belonging to the family of Cholmley who are lords of the manor. It is situated on the hill on the east side of the town, between the church and the ruins of the abbey, and is a spacious building, although it is seldom made the place of residence of the proprietor. Some lands are held on the tenure of Horngarth; the service consists in partly keeping the harbour in repair, and is still performed by a family of the name of Herbert. Distance from York, 48 m. N.N.E.; from London, 241 N. by W. Total pop. of the parish in 1831, 11,726. Pop. of the town, in 1801, 7483; in 1831, 7765. A. P., £8,659.

WHITBY-STRAND, a wapentake in the N.B., co. of York, at the eastern extremity of the co., on the shores of the German ocean, which bounds it on the north and east, including the market-town from which it takes its name, 3 parishes, 10 townships, and a parochial chapelry; it contained, in 1831, 13,963 inhabitants.

WHITCHBURY, co. of Wilts. See WHICHBURY.

WHITCHESTER, a township in the parish of Heddon-on-the-Wall, eastern division of Tindale ward, co. of Northumberland. Here was formerly a Roman station, the locality of which was well adapted for the purposes of fortification, being almost totally surrounded with deep ravines. Distance from Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 9½ m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1831, 57. A. P., £1,070.

WHITCHURCH, a parish, formerly a market-town, in the second division of the three hundreds of Cottesloe, co. of Buckingham. The market was formerly held on Monday, and the fair on the day of the festival of St John the Evangelist; both were granted in 1245, but have been long discontinued.

Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £8 17s., returned at £96 6s., and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church, which is ded. to St John the Evangelist, is an ancient structure, with a lofty embattled tower at the one end. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Aylesbury, 4½ m. N. by W. Pop., in 1801, 646; in 1831, 928. A. P., £3,107.

WHITCHURCH, a parish in the hundred of Roborough, co. of Devon. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter, rated at £16 5s. 5d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. Peter Sleeman. Church ded. to St Andrew. Here was formerly a chantry chapel, founded by the abbot of Tavistock, in 1300. Here is a small charity, endowed with £6 annual income, which is appropriated to the education of 6 poor children. The course on which the Tavistock races are annually held is within the parish of Whitchurch-Down. Distance from Tavistock, 1½ m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 478; in 1831, 791. A. P., £4,227.

WHITCHURCH, a parish in the hundred of Caerphilly, co. of Glamorgan, South Wales. It is intersected by the Merthyr canal. Living, a curacy, not in charge, subordinate to the vicar of Llandaff, and in patronage of the dean and chapter of Llandaff cathedral. The parish contains about 2,500 imperial acres of land, and a great proportion of the inhabitants of this parish are employed in the manufacture of tin-plates, there being a number of manufactories of this article here. Distance from Caerdiff, 4 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 696; in 1831, 1,184. A. P., £3,400.

WHITCHURCH, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Wormelow, co. of Hereford. Living, a rectory with that of Ganerew, in the archd. and dio. of Hereford, rated at £6 0s. 2½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Joseph Pyrke, Esq. Church ded. to St Dubritius. The Wesleyan Methodists and Independents have each a place of worship in this parish. The lord of the manor holds a court-leet here at irregular intervals. A furnace for the forging of iron was formerly wrought here, but it has been given up for some time. The parish is intersected by the river Wye, which is here navigable for vessels of small burden. Distance from Ross, 6½ m. S.W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 708; in 1831, 885. A. P., £3,792.

WHITCHURCH, or LITTLE STANMORE, co. of Middlesex. See STANMORE LITTLE.

WHITCHURCH, a parish in the hundred of Langtree, co. of Oxford. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, rated at £16 2s. 8½d., and in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Reading, 6½ m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 577; in 1831, 745. A. P., £2,805.

WHITCHURCH, or EGLWYS-WEN, a parish in the hundred of Cemmaes, co. of Pembrokeshire, South Wales. It contains the chapelry of Llanfair-Nant-y-Gof. Living, a discharged rectory in the dio. of St David's, rated at £6, and, in 1829, in patronage of — Lloyd, Esq. The parish contains about 2000 imperial acres of land. Distance from Cardigan, 8 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 436; in 1831, 377. A. P., £1,687.

WHITCHURCH, or TAE-CROES, a parish in the hundred of Dewland, co. of Pembroke, South Wales. Living, a discharged vicarage in the dio. of St David's, rated at £5 15s. 7½d., returned at £79 7s. 9d., and in the patronage of the dean, chapter, and vicars choral of the cathedral of St David's. The village is maritime, being situated on the shore of St Bride's bay. Distance from Haverford-West, 12½ m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 599; in 1831, 1028. A. P., £1,773.

WHITCHURCH, or BLANCMINSTER, a parish partly in the Whitchurch division of the hundred of Bradford, co. of Salop, and partly in the hundred of Nantwich, co.-palatine of Chester. That part which is in Chester contains only the small township of Wirrwall; the other portion includes the townships of Alkington, Great Ash, Little Ash, Black Park, Broughall, Chimmell, Doddington, Edgeby, Hinton, and Hollyhurst, the chapelry of Tilstock, and the market-town of Whitchurch. From the ancient name of this place, which was Albem Monasterium, or Blancminster, it is supposed that a monastery formerly existed here; of this, however, no account has been handed down, and no traces of the building have ever been discovered. Here was, however, an hospital, of which the following account is given by Bishop Tanner in his Not. Mon.:—"Here was an hospital of several poor brethren, to which John le Strange, in the reign of Henry III., gave the town of Winelecome, which, together with the hospital, were afterwards annexed to the abbey of Haghmon." King John, in his route toward Wales, being about to make an attack on that country, assembled his forces here in 1211; on this occasion he succeeded in penetrating as far as Snowdon. During the parliamentary war, it appears that the inhabitants exhibited a disposition to support the cause of the royalist party, having raised a regiment in favour of the king, and otherwise contributed to his support. The town is well-built, containing many excellent and substantial houses. It is situated on a gentle eminence, and possesses many fine points of view in the vicinity, the surrounding country being rich and beautiful. In the immediate neighbourhood are three lakes, called Blackmere, Brown Moss-water, and Osmere, besides many small streamlets, one of which forms, for a short distance, the boundary between the counties of Salop and Chester, and another called Red-Brook, between England and Wales. In 1760, there existed here some remains of an ancient castle, of the date and history of which antiquaries have not been able to discover any account. The lord of the manor appoints a high steward, who takes charge of the municipal government, and holds courts leet and baron annually in October, within the town-hall, where are deposited the rolls and archives of the lordship. Lime and bricks are made to a considerable extent at establishments near the town, as also sheep, which are principally sent to Manchester; but the great trade of the town consists in grain and malt, the manufacture of which latter article employs a great number of the inhabitants. A communication with the metropolis, Manchester, Shrewsbury, and, in fact, more or less directly with most places of any consequence throughout the country, is opened by means of a branch of the Ellesmere canal, which extends to the town, and along which boats ply to the above-mentioned places, leaving Whitchurch on Saturday and carrying goods and passengers. Friday is market-day; and fairs are held on the second Friday in April, Whit-Monday, first Friday after the 2d of August, and on the 23d of October, for horses, horned cattle, sheep, swine, flaxen and hempen cloths, as also woolsens to a small extent.

Living, a rectory with that of Marbury, in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £44 11s. 8d., and, in 1839, in patronage of the trustees of the late earl of Bridgewater. The church—which is dedicated to St Alkmund—is a structure, built of freestone, in the Tuscan order of architecture, with a square embattled tower. It was erected in 1722, in room of one more ancient. It contains several monuments, principally of different members of the Shrewsbury family, in particular one to the memory of the celebrated John Talbot, earl of Shrewsbury, often called for his extraordinary personal bravery, the English Achilles, who was slain in the French wars of the reign of Henry VI. in 1453. It consists chiefly of his effigy in alabaster. The Independents, Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians, have places of worship here. Here is a free grammar school, the original founder of which was the Rev. John Talbot, sometime rector of this parish; the earl of Shrewsbury is hereditary visitor, and the government of it is in the hands of certain trustees, who appoint the master, by whom the usher is appointed; both of these are, however, required to be approved of by the visitor. A school, conducted on the national system, was established in 1827 at Highgate, at which upwards of 500 boys are now educated. Here is a charity school for the use of poor children of both sexes, and 6 almshouses for the same number of decayed housekeepers, both of which were founded and endowed by Mrs Jane Higginson. Here is a large and commodious house of industry, situated near the northern extremity of the town. Dr Bernard, chaplain of Archbishop Usher, and author of a life of that prelate, and Abraham Wheelock, a celebrated linguist, who died in 1664, were both natives of this town. Distance from London, 163 m. N.W. by N.; from Shrewsbury, 20 m. N. by E. Pop. of the whole parish, in 1801, 4618; in 1831, 5902. A. P., £30,062.

WHITCHURCH, a hamlet in the parish of Henstridge, co. of Somerset.

WHITCHURCH, or FELTON, a parish in the hundred of Keynsham, co. of Somerset. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells, not in charge, endowed with £600, and, in 1829, in patronage of Sir J. H. Smith, Bart. Church ded. to St Gregory. This formerly existed in a forest or chase, near the present village, called Filwood, in which was an ancient town, from which the present derives its name; a church having been erected and dedicated to St Whyte, where Whitchurch now stands, and on the site of an ancient chapel, the inhabitants of Filton gradually removed to the neighbourhood, upon which the new village received the names by which it is now known. Distance from Pensford, 3 m. N. Pop., in 1801, 362; in 1831, 423. A. P., £3,657.

WHITCHURCH, a parish, borough, and formerly a market-town, in the hundred of Evingar, Kingsclere division of the co. of Southampton, and comprising, besides the borough, the tythings of Charlecot, Cold Henley, and Freefolk with Freefolk-Prior. The town is situated in the neighbourhood of some chalk hills on the river Teste; the ground on which it is situated lies very low, and the town itself is small and irregularly built. Friday was formerly market-day, but it has now fallen entirely into disuse. A fair for cattle, pigs, horses, &c., is held for two days on the 19th and 20th of October, as also a pleasure fair on the third Thursday in June. The lord of the manor holds an annual court in October, in the town-hall, at which are appointed a mayor and bailiff, constituting the nominal corporation, which for some time has possessed no authority; a constable is also appointed at the same time. Another court is also held in May, at the manor-farm, under the authority of the dean and chapter of Winchester, who are at present lords of the manor. Whitchurch is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney court, which is held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount. Before the passing of the reform act, Whitchurch returned two members to parliament, which right it first exercised in the 27th of Queen Elizabeth. The right of voting was vested in all freeholders of lands and tenements, either in their own right or that of their wives; by the act of 7th and 8th William III., it was provided, that in order to put a stop to the practice which had before that time prevailed of dividing tenements in order to increase the number of voters, that all lands, &c., so divided, after the passing of that act, should no longer confer the right of voting upon the possessors. The number of voters was generally about 80, and the members were usually returned under the influence of Samuel Scott, Esq., M.P., and Viscount Sidney. Under the provisions of the reform act it has been disfranchised.—Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £13 12s. 8½d., returned at £118 6s. 8d., and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the bishop of Winchester. The church is ded. to All Saints, and is a plain structure of very unpretending appearance. Here is a library under the same roof as the church, consisting chiefly of theological works, being the bequest of the Rev. William Wood: access to this library is easily obtained on an order to that effect being given by the vicar. The Wesleyan Methodists, Baptists, and Independents, have each a place of worship here. Richard Woolston, Esq., bequeathed property in 1688, the annual income arising from which, amounting at present to £80, is laid out in the purchase of clothes, bedding, and similar necessities, which are distributed amongst the poor of this parish. Distance from London, 56 m. W.S.W.; from Winchester, 12 m. N. by E. Pop. of the whole parish, in 1801, 1275; in 1831, 1674. A. P., £6,217. In these two years the pop. of the borough is not distinguished in the parliamentary returns, but in 1811 the pop. was above two-thirds of the whole parish.

WHITCHURCH, a parish in a detached portion of the Kington division of the hundred of Kington, co. of Warwick. It comprises the hamlets of Broughton, Crimscoth, and Wimpstone. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester, rated at £20 17s. 3½d., returned at £125, and, in 1829, in patronage of James West, Esq. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Stratford-upon-Avon, 5½ m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 236; in 1831, 261. A. P., £3,028.

WHITCHURCH-CANONICORUM, a hundred in the Bridport division of the co. of Dorset, and situated at the south-western extremity of the county. The borough of Bridport is within this hundred, which contains 11 parishes. Pop. returned with Bridport division.

WHITCHURCH-CANONICORUM, a parish, anciently a market-town, in the hundred of Whitchurch-Canonicorum, Bridport division of the co. of Dorset, containing Abbotsworten, Barn, Vale, and Wild-Quarters. Living, a vicarage with the perpetual curacy of Stanton, in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £32 6s. 3d., and in patronage of the bishop of Bath and Wells. The church was formerly ded. to St Candeda, commonly called St Whyte, but is now ded. to the Holy Cross. This parish is very ancient, and was so early of considerable importance, that besides having a market granted to it by Henry III., it has given its name to the hundred in which it is situated. Distance from Bridport, 5 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 932; in 1831, 1399. A. P., £4,472.

WHITCLIFFE, a joint township with Thorpe, in the parish and liberty of Rippon, W. R., co. of York. Distance from Rippon, 1½ m. S. Pop., in 1801, 136; in 1831, 198. A. P., £1,904.

WHITCOMBE, a parish in the hundred of Califford-Trees, Dorchester division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, not in charge, returned at £13 13s., and in the patronage of the impropiators. Distance from Dorchester, 2½ m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 47; in 1831, 64. A. P., £570.

WHITCOMBE-MAGNA, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of Dudstone and King's-Barton, co. of Gloucester. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £4 6s. 8d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Sir W. Hicks, Bart. Church ded. to St Mary. In 1818, some workmen, in digging, discovered traces of building, which, on further examination, proved to be the remains of a Roman villa, with a sacrum, baths, &c.; the walls to the height of six feet being still perfect, and covered with stucco ornamented in a very beautiful manner. Parts of Mosaic pavements were also found, but the greater part of the villa appears to have been paved with red sandstone. A number of cornices and fragments of pillars were promiscuously scattered throughout the villa, and numerous coins of the lower Roman empire have been found, principally from Constantine the Great to Valentinian and Valens, besides some British antiquities. Distance from Painswick, 3½ m. N.E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 119; in 1831, 174. A. P., £954.

WHITEBALL, a hamlet in the parish of Sampford-Arundel, co. of Somerset.

WHITECHAPEL, a chapelry in the parish of Kirkham, hundred of Amounderness, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, not in charge, returned at £93 3s., and in patronage of the vicar of Kirkham. Distance from Garstang, 5½ m. S.E. by E. Pop. and A. P. returned with the parish of Kirkham.

WHITE-CHAPEL, in the W. R., co. of York. See CLACK-HEATON.

WHITEFIELD, a joint township with Apperley, parish of Deerbury, lower division of the hundred of Westminster, co. of Gloucester. Distance from Tewkesbury, 4 m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1831, 869.

WHITEFORD, a parish in the hundred of Coleshill, co. of Flint, North Wales. Livings, a sinecure rectory, rated at £28 17s. 6d., and a discharged vicarage, rated at £9 11s. 5½d.; both of which are in the dio. and patronage of the bishop of St Asaph. The church was built by Blethyn Drow, a member of the Mostyn family. Here is a school, founded and endowed by Thomas Williams of Mostyn-Gate, who bequeathed a sum of £141 for its support. The parish is near the estuary of the river Dee, and abounds with lead, zinc, and copper ore, coal, calamine, chert, and limestone, all which are wrought to a considerable extent. The parish contains about 800 imperial acres of land. Within the parish, on an eminence in the township of Whitford-Garn, are still some remains of an ancient pharos, or light-house, erected by the Romans for the purpose of assisting mariners in their navigation from the ancient Deva, in their passage of the Sætra Portus; and near the Garreg is a cross, commonly called the Stone of Lamentation, which is a structure of very beautiful workmanship. The Hon. Edward Mostyn Lloyd Mostyn, the eldest son of Lord Mostyn, has his seat within the parish, at Mostyn-hall. The inhabitants of this place seem to have a pride in keeping up the ancient customs of tolling passing bells and making offerings at fune-erals, which may be ascribed to the superstition which still retain considerable influence over the minds of many of the natives of the principality. This is the birth-place of Thomas Pennant, the author of Tours in England and Wales, and many other works on natural history. He was born at Downing in 1726, and died at the same place in 1794, being almost 70 years of age. Distance from Holywell, 4 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 2525; in 1831, 3333. A. P., £4,000.

WHITEGATE, or NEW CHURCH, a parish in the first division of the hundred of Eddisbury, co.-palatine of Chester. It comprises the townships of Darnhall and Marton. This parish at one time formed part of the parish of Over, but since 1541 it has been a distinct parish. It is situated on the river Weaver, which partly intersects it. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chester, rated at £2 10s., returned at £90, and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Delamere. The church is ded. to St Mary, and has lately received a grant of £300 from the incorporated society for building and enlarging churches and chapels, in consequence of which 227 free sittings have been added, besides 226 others. Edward I., before he came to the throne, having been confined at Hereford by the refractory barons, was treated with great consideration by the monks of Dore, in gratitude for which he removed them to Darnhall within this parish, and afterwards, in 1277, began to build a new monastery for the brethren, in the immediate vicinity, to which he gave the name of Vale-Royal. This building was not occupied by the monks till 1330, at which time it had cost the treasury about £32,000. The removal was effected with a great display of magnificence and splendour, there being present on the occasion many of the nobles, prelates, &c. The revenues of this religious house amounted, at the general dissolution, in the reign of Henry VIII., to £518. There is a mansion within the parish, the doorways of which constitute almost the only remains of this monastery. Distance from Northwich, 3¼ m. S.W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 628; in 1831, 909. A. P., £4,143. The returns are also made separately for the two townships, which will be found under their several heads.

WHITEHALL, a hamlet in the chapelry of All Hallows, co. of Cumberland. Distance from Wigton, 6 m. S.W. by S.

WHITEHAVEN, a seaport and market-town, in the parish of St Bees, Alderdale ward above Darwent, co. of Cumberland. The origin of the name of this place is disputed. By some it is supposed to have been derived from the light-coloured rocks which are very commonly met with in the vicinity, by others it is supposed to have originally taken its name from a fisherman of the name of White, who is said, according to this account, to have been the first to build a cottage here; this latter derivation is generally considered to be erroneous. It is called Whitshaven in an existing record of a trial, which took place between the abbot and monks of St Mary's at York on the one hand and the king on the other, relative to a claim advanced by the convent to some wrecks which had come to shore in the manor of St Bees. The manor of St Bees continued for some time in the possession of the religious house already named, and in the reign of Queen Elizabeth we find it consisting of only a few fishermen's huts; but the manor having passed by purchase from the hands of Sir Thomas Chaloner, Knt., into the possession of Gerard Lowther and Thomas Wybergh, and in 1644, Sir John Lowther, Bart., having succeeded to the whole, the town under his care rapidly advanced beyond its original obscurity. He obtained from Charles II. a grant of land to a considerable extent, encouraged the collieries, extended and greatly improved the harbour, and having fixed his residence near the town, contributed greatly to advance the interests of this now flourishing seaport. The greatly increased influence of his successors, arising from their being elevated to the peerage under the title of earls of Lonsdale, was applied in a great measure towards advancing the interest of Whitehaven, which is one of the most flourishing places in the county.

The town is advantageously situated on a small bay on the Irish sea, and has several very regularly built and tolerably wide streets, paved with pebbles, and in general intersecting one another at right angles. It is well lighted with gas, and supplied with water partly from wells within the town, and partly by water brought in from the vicinity by means of carts. It also enjoys the benefit of a local police under whose superintendence it is watched. The northern entrance to the town is under an arch of redstone, having the arms of the earls of Lonsdale upon the entablature. To the south-east of the town is the castle of the noble family of Lowther, which is a massive square building, with projections at the corners and a circular bastion in the centre. An extensive prospect is obtained from this building, which is surrounded with rich meadow land. Races are sometimes held here. Here is a theatre, erected in 1769, in Roper-street; it is a handsome and commodious edifice. In 1769, a subscription library was established, for which the earl of Lonsdale erected a handsome building in Catherine street. It now contains about 3000 volumes; attached to it is a subscription reading-room well supplied with the best periodicals, especially newspapers. In 1825, a mechanics' institution was founded, which is now in a flourishing condition; the building, which is in Lowther-street, also contains a good library for the use of the mechanics.

Harbour and Trade.—The town owes much of its present prosperity to the improvements on its harbour, during the reign of Queen Anne, when several strong and substantial moles and bulwarks were erected, which completely secure vessels from the Corfe rocks. These piers or moles of the harbour have been greatly enlarged and improved within the last few years. They consist of the breast work and old quay; the old tongue; the new tongue; the new quay; the new work and north wall.

The new work (formerly called the bulwark) has been entirely rebuilt on a larger plan, and to the extremity of the old wall several yards have been added, which approach towards the new work, and, by narrowing the entrance into this part of the harbour, was intended to preserve the place from the swells of the sea, to which it was formerly much exposed. The harbour is capable of giving shelter to several hundred sail of vessels. It contained at high water, in spring tides, about 20 feet of water, and neap tides about 12; at low water, however, it was dry or nearly so. It has been supposed that this inconvenience would be remedied by the erection of a new west pier, 20 yards in thickness, and in fact by this means a depth of nine feet at low water has been obtained. The plan was given by Mr John Rennie, and the works were begun in 1824, the estimated expense being £80,000. This estimate was found much too low, and the actual expense was so great that the trustees were obliged to borrow an additional sum of £180,000, in order to enable them to proceed after the sum originally raised was expended. A life boat has been in constant use here since 1803, and has often been the means of saving life. On the new quay is a light-house with revolving lamps, and on the old quay are a watch-house and light-house. The entrance of the harbour is defended by four batteries, which formerly mounted in all 98 cannons, including 12 forty-two pounders, and 18 thirty-six pounders. These batteries, which command the whole bay, and the coast towards Harrington and Workington, were repaired and an additional number of guns procured from Woolwich, in 1788, owing, it is said, to the great alarm occasioned by the landing of Paul Jones, who attempted to burn the town, on the 23d of April in that year. Since the termination of the war a great many of the guns have been removed.

Trade.—The principal article of export from this port consists of coal, besides which alabaster, lime, freestone, and grain, are exported in considerable quantities. In return, Whitehaven receives different articles of West Indian, Baltic, American, and Mediterranean produce, in particular flax and linen from Ireland, wine from Portugal, and fruit from the Levant. In addition to its being the centre of a great carrying trade, it is a place of considerable manufacturing importance, the principal articles produced being linen yarn and cloth, sail-cloth, cordage, anchors, nails, checks, ginghams, earthenware, coppers, colours, candles, and soap; the two last named are exported in considerable quantities to the West Indian colonies. Coal, it is supposed, was first raised here by Sir John Lowther, about 160 years, since which the workings have increased rapidly, and the mines now almost rival in extent those of Sunderland and Newcastle; in these the inhabitants are chiefly employed. Here are coal-pits 320 yards deep, which are supposed to be the deepest coal-mines in the world; as they extend to a great distance below the sea, ships of large burden sail over where the miners are at work. They are all wrought by means of shafts, sunk at a very considerable expense, and many of them have inclined planes, which, entering at the side of a hill, proceed at a very considerable declivity to the bottom of the pit; these are called by the miners Bear-mouths, and are used for the purpose of taking horses into the mine. From the mouth of the pit, to which the coal is raised by means of machinery, it is conveyed along inclined planes to the quay, where it is shipped. About 12 years ago it was calculated that 80,000 waggons were annually raised in these collieries, each waggon being equal to a chaldron and a quarter London measure, containing 72 Winchester bushels, and weighing in general from 42 to 44 hundred-weights. The thickness of the veins of coal is very various, being from 2 to 11 feet. Many accidents formerly occurred in these mines from explosive mixtures of air, but Davis' safety lamp has now come into general use amongst the workmen, and in consequence such accidents are less frequent. The circumstance of many of the coal mines extending under the town has often been the cause of alarm to the inhabitants, and, in 1791, owing to the falling in of some of the old coal-works, the ground under several of the houses gave way, and about 18 houses were overthrown, the pavement in one of the streets being rent in a most alarming manner. A considerable quantity of very superior iron-ore is found in the vicinity, but is not wrought there, being principally sent to the smelting furnaces in Wales. The ships built here have long enjoyed a great reputation, chiefly for their strength and lightness. This branch of industry has been greatly benefited by the erection, about 12 years ago, of a patent slip; this machine, for which the port is indebted to the public spirit of the earl of Lonsdale, enables a small number of men to draw up vessels of large tonnage into a kind of dry-dock, with which it is connected. The dock is capable of containing four vessels of 150 tons each, and of admitting those of 700 tons burden. The herring fishery was formerly carried on to a great extent by vessels belonging to this port, but within these few years it has fallen off very much. Steam-packets sail regularly for Carlisle, Annan, Dumfries, Liverpool, Isle of Man, Dublin, and other parts of the united kingdom. The jurisdiction extends from Maryport northward to the river Duddon, including the intermediate ports of Millom, Harrington, Ravenglass, and Workington. The number of ships belonging to the port amounted to 197, the aggregate tonnage of which was 30,960. Besides these vessels are a number of smaller size which are entirely engaged in the coasting trade. The town and harbour are regulated under the authority of acts passed in the 7th and 11th years of the reign of Queen Anne, by which the authority is placed in the hands of 21 trustees. Of this number the lord of the manor appoints one-third, of which number he himself is always one, and the remaining two thirds are triennially appointed by ballot. All those inhabitants who pay harbour dues, or possess a share not less than one-sixteenth of a vessel belonging to the port, besides masters of such vessels, being entitled to vote. These trustees nominate the town-constables who are afterwards appointed by the justices of the peace, who meet on Thursdays and Saturdays for the despatch of public business. An annual court-leet and a monthly court-baron are held here; before the latter all debts not exceeding 40s. can be recovered. Markets are held on Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday; that on Thursday is best attended; they are, however, all well-supplied, principally with provisions. A fair was formerly held here, but it has long fallen into disuse. The market-place is a commodious area, and a market-house was erected in 1813, being a handsome building, and used principally for the sale of eggs, poultry, &c. Here are also shambles for the use of the butchers, called the Low and St George's markets. The custom-house is a handsome building erected about 20 years ago. It is under the direction of a comptroller and collector, with a proper proportion of tidewaiters, and other officers. Here is a savings bank, a handsome new building for the use of which has been recently erected in Lowther street, principally from unclaimed interest.

Living, &c.—Here are three chapels, the livings of which are all perpetual curacies, in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester. They are all in the patronage of the earl of Lonsdale. That of St Nicholas was returned at £140; the chapel is a plain substantial building, with a square tower, erected in 1693; it contains several paintings of considerable merit, by Matthias Reed, a Dutch artist who settled here, having come from Holland with the prince of Orange. That of St James' is returned at £108 16s.; the chapel has a tower surmounted with pinnacles, having been erected about 80 years ago; it is situated in the eastern part of the town. That of the Holy Trinity is returned at £92; the chapel is a plain structure with a lofty tower, at the head of Roper-street. The Independents, Society of Friends, Particular Baptists, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, and the Roman Catholics have each one, and the Presbyterians have two places of worship here. The school on the national system, at which upwards of 500 children of both sexes are educated, was erected in 1824 at an expense of about £700, which was obtained by public subscription. It is a large and commodious structure. About 60 boys receive instruction in the elementary branches of education, at the Marine school near St James' church. The building in which it is held was presented by the earl of Lonsdale, and it is endowed with £2,000 the gift of Matthew Piper, Esq., who also bequeathed £1,000, the interest of which is annually expended in the purchase of soap, &c., for distribution amongst the poor belonging to the town. There are several bequests for distribution amongst the poor. Here is a Sunday school, at which about 500 children receive instruction; the children are of all denominations, there being no restriction in that particular. The building was erected in 1817, at Gins, in Preston quarter, and is used during the week as an infant school. A house of recovery has existed here since 1819, and a dispensary for about 50 years; both of these establishments were in 1830 removed to a building purchased in Howgill-street for that purpose, and also used as an infirmary. This was the place to which the celebrated Swift was sent when a child, on account of the disturbances which at that time took place in Ireland; during his stay in the town he resided in a house in Roper-street, with his attendant. Dr Brownrigg, who had the merit of first calling public attention to the beauty of the scenery about Keswick, having written several works on the subject, practised some years here as a physician. Pop., of the town, in 1801, 8742; in 1831, 11,393. A. P., £42,898. Including Preston-Quarter, which is a suburb. The pop. in 1831 was 15,716. In addition to these there are almost 1000 sailors belonging to vessels registered in this port. The pop. of the town in 1831 exhibits a decrease of about 1100 as compared with that of 1821, according to the parliamentary returns. As this is very improbable, it appears more likely that the figures have been misplaced, and that the pop. in 1831, instead of 11,393, should have been 13,193, thus making the total pop. of the town and suburbs in the same year, 17,516. Distance from London, 320 m. N.W.; from Carlisle, 40 m. S.W.

WHITE-ISLAND, an island in the Scilly group, situated about 2½ m. W. from St Mary's. Its area is about 50 imperial acres.

WHITEHILL, a hamlet in the parish of Ospringe, co. of Kent.

WHITEHILL, a hamlet in the parish of Tackley, co. of Oxford. Distance from Woodstock, 3 m. N.E. by E.

WHITE-LADY-ASTON, ASTON, or WHITE LADIES OF BREWOOD, co. of Salop. See BREWOOD.

WHITEOXMEAD, a hamlet in the parish of Wellow, co. of Somerset.

WHITEPARISH, a parish in the hundred of Trustfield, co. of Wilts, including the extra-parochial liberty of Earldoms. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £13 7s. 2d., returned at £100, and, in 1829, in patronage of R. Britton, Esq. Church ded. to All Saints. Twenty boys receive instruction in some of the elementary branches of education, from the income arising from £200, bequeathed for that purpose in 1639 by Henry Eyre; £200 was also left by Elizabeth Hitchcock, in 1721, for the education of 10 girls; and £236, in 1746, by Ann Hitchcock, for instructing a like number. Distance from Salisbury, 8 m. S.E. by E. Pop., with Earldoms, in 1801, 877; in 1831, 1254. A. P., £6,438.

WHITERIGG, a manor in the parish of Torpenhow, co. of Cumberland. Distance from Cockermouth, 7 m. N.E. by N. Pop. and other returns made with those of the parish of Torpenhow.

WHITESIDELAW, or WHITESIDE, a township in the parish of Chollerton, co. of Northumberland. Distance from Hexham, 7½ m. N.N.E. Pop. and other returns included in those made from the township of Chollerton.

WHITE-STANTON, or WHIT-STAUNTON, a parish locally within the hundred of Kingsbury, but within the jurisdiction of the southern division of the hundred of Petherton, co. of Somerset. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £14 2s. 11d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Isaac Etton, Esq. Church ded. to St Andrew. Distance from Chard, 3½ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 259; in 1831, 318. A. P., £2,257.

WHITESTONE, or WHITSTONE, a parish in the hundred of Wonford, co. of Devon. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter, rated at £19 3s. 4d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Thomas Brown, Esq. Church ded. to St Catherine. The poor children of the parish are entitled to receive instruction in reading, writing, &c., in a school founded by John Splatt in 1763, and endowed by him with an annual income of £20. The same benevolent person founded almshouses for the accommodation of five poor people, each of whom receives an annual allowance of 5s. Distance from Exeter, 3½ m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 471; in 1831, 643. A. P., £4,200.

WHITESTONE, a hundred in the co. of Somerset. It lies to the south-west of Shepton-Mallet, near the centre of the county. "It derives its name from a hill near Cannard's-Grave, about a mile southward from Shepton-Mallet, called Whitstone-hill, from a large stone of white appearance, which formerly stood thereon, and at which the hundred courts, before their removal to the town of Shepton, were, according to an ancient usage, held."—Collinson's Somerset. It contains 12 parishes. Pop., in 1831, 12,412.

WHITEWAY, a hundred in the Cerne subdivision of the co. of Dorset, near the centre of the county, and containing 7 parishes. Pop., in 1831, included in Cerne division.

WHITEWELL, or WHITEWELL-IN-BOWLAND, a chapelry in the parish of Whalley, western division of the wapentake of Staincliffe and Ewecross, W. R., co. of York. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester, rated at £6, returned at £82 9s., and in patronage of the vicar of Whalley. Twenty five pounds having been lately granted to the chapel by the incorporated society for building and enlarging churches and chapels, it has in consequence received an addition of 70 free sittings. Distance from Clitheroe, 7 m. N.W. by W. The population and assessed property are returned with Bowland-Forest in Slaidburn parish, in which the chapelry is locally situated.

WHITFIELD, a township in the parish of Glossop, hundred of High Peak, co. of Derby. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. About 50 years ago, Joseph Hague, Esq., built a school-house, at the same time endowing it with lands and houses, the annual rent of which is about £40.

The same person bequeathed £1000, the interest of which is annually expended in clothing twelve poor men and as many women; who require to be resident in this or in one of several other neighbouring townships, named in the will of the founder. Distance from Chapel-en-le-Frith, 8½ m. N. by W. Pop., in 1831, 1734.

WHITFIELD, a township in the parish of Deerhurst, lower division of the hundred of Westminster, co. of Gloucester. Distance from Tewkesbury, 4 m. S.S.W. Pop., including the hamlet of Apperley, returned with that of the parish.

WHITFIELD, anciently BEWFIELD, a parish in the hundred of Bewsborough, lathes of St Augustine, co. of Kent. Living, a discharged vicarage in the dio. of Canterbury, under the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the archbishop of Canterbury, rated at £5 18s. 8d. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Dover, 3½ m. N.N.W. Pop. returned with the parish.

WHITFIELD, a parish in the hundred of King's-Sutton, co. of Northampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £8 15s., and in patronage of the provost and fellows of Worcester college, Oxford. Church ded. to St John the Evangelist. Here is a charity, the annual value of which is about £6, which is expended on the education of about 20 poor children; it is drawn from land purchased with the amount of sundry small benefactions. Distance from Brackley, 2 m. N.E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 217; in 1831, 328. A. P., £1,590.

WHITFIELD, a parish in the western division of Tindale ward, co. of Northumberland. The parish is partly intersected by the rivers East and West Allen, which join at Cupola within the parish. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham, rated at £8, and, in 1829, in patronage of William Ord, Esq. The church, which had become dilapidated, was rebuilt in 1784. Mr Ord allows £20 per annum to the schoolmaster, in consideration of which a number of poor children receive instruction. Lead-ore was formerly procured in considerable quantities from a mine at Limestone-Cross, and was smelted at Cupola. There is a spring strongly impregnated with iron at Redmires within the parish. A road from Alston to Haydon-bridge has been recently made through the parish. Distance from Hexham, 11½ m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 393; in 1831, 388. A. P., £4,789.

WHITFORD, a hamlet, formerly a chapelry, in the parish of Shute, co. of Devon. The chapel has long since fallen into decay.

WHITGIFT, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of Osgoldcross, W. R., co. of York. It is intersected by the river Ouse, and includes the chapelry of Swinefleet, and the townships of Ousefleet, Reedness, and Whitgift. This place is one of those numerous villages which encompass the river island, wherein are Ditchmarch and Marshland. It was anciently the estate of the Lacey, earls of Lincoln, and afterwards descended to Henry, Lord Scroop, of Bolton, chief-justice of the king's bench. Living, a perpetual curacy with that of Swinefleet, in the archd. and dio. of York, curatized at £40, and, in 1831, in patronage of Lord Yarborough. The church—which is ded. to St Mary Magdalene—is a small edifice, with a tower at the western extremity. Here are two schools with small endowments. In December, 1614, the Hon. Sir John Sheffield, with his brothers Sir Edmund and Mr Philip Sheffield, sons to Lord Sheffield, lord-president of the north, in passing Whitgift ferry over the Ouse, were drowned, with all their servants, and their bodies never found. During the siege of Hull in 1643, the royalists erected a fort here to prevent Hull from receiving supplies by water. Distance from Howden, 6½ m. S.E. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 263; in 1831, 310. A. P., £1,683. Total pop., in 1831, 2252.

WHITGREAVE, a township in the parish of St Mary Lichfield, southern division of the hundred of Pirehill, co. of Stafford. Distance from Stafford, 3½ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 217; in 1831, 196. A. P., £3,243.

WHITKIRK, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of Skyrack, W. R., co. of York. It includes the townships of Austerhorpe, Smeacroft, Temple-Newsum, and Thorp-Stapleton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York, rated at £13 5s. 7½d., returned at £120, and in patronage of the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. Church ded. to St Mary. In the chancel is a monument sacred to the memory of John Smeaton, the celebrated architect of the Eddystone light-house, who was born at Austerhorpe within the parish, in 1724. There was formerly at Temple-Newsum, within the parish, a preceptory for Knights Templars, from which circumstance it takes its adjunct, being called in Domesday-book only Newhusum. After the suppression of the Knights Templars, it was granted by Edward III., together with Temple-Hirst, to Sir John Darcy and his heirs male, in the possession of whose descendants it remained until the time of Thomas Lord Darcy, on whose attainder, for the active part which he took in the pilgrimage of grace, it became forfeited to the crown. Henry VIII. granted it to Matthew, earl of Lennox, who resided here at the birth of his son Henry Lord Darnley, afterwards husband of Mary, queen of Scots, and father of James I. On the death of the duke of Lennox it came into the possession of James I., who conferred it upon his kinsman, Esme Stuart, duke of Richmond. The duke sold it to Sir Arthur Ingram, son of a wealthy citizen of London, and founder of the Irvine peerage, who pulled down the old house and built the present magnificent structure on its site. The old house was not, however, completely demolished, for Thoraby asserts that the identical apartment in which Lord Darnley was born, remained in his time, and was distinguished by the name of 'the king's chamber.'

It became the property of the late marquess of Hertford, in consequence of his marriage with Isabella Ann Ingram Shapard, the eldest daughter of Charles, the tenth Viscount Irvine. The last Viscount Irvine died here in 1807. The house is built in the form of a Roman H, and the roof is composed of capital letters in stone-work, forming a remarkable inscription. "In the window of the kitchen," says Dr Whitaker, "is a long and curious series of armorial bearings, from the Lacey, the first lords of this place, down to the Ingrams." Here is a valuable collection of paintings by the most eminent masters, the gallery for which is 120 feet in length, and 20 in breadth. Here is a school endowed with £10 annual income, arising from the bequest of Richard Brooke in 1702. The school-room was built by subscription. Distance from Leeds, 4 m. E. Total pop., in 1801, 1800; in 1831, 2,564. A. P., £10,684.

WHITLEY, a tything in the parish of Cumner, hundred of Horner, co. of Berks. Distance from Oxford, 5 m. W. by S. Pop., in 1831, 88.

WHITLEY, a hamlet in the parish of St Giles, borough and hundred of Reading, co. of Berks. Distance from Reading, 2 m. S. Pop., in 1801, 28; in 1831, 363.

WHITLEY, a chapelry in the parish of Tynemouth, eastern division of Castle ward, co. of Northumberland. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham, not in charge, endowed with £1400. The inhabitants are principally occupied in mining operations,—large quantities of coal and limestone being raised in the parish, and iron-ore being also found in considerable quantities. These articles are conveyed to Shields for exportation by means of a railroad. The village is in general well built, and contains several very excellent houses. It is situated near the sea. In the immediate vicinity is a reservoir belonging to the North-Shields water-works company. Distance from North-Shields, 2½ m. N. by E. Pop., in 1801, 251; in 1831, 632. A. P., £1,800.

WHITLEY, or WEETLER, a township in the parish of Whalley, co.-palatine of Lancaster. It is in Pendle forest, and is 4 m. W. by S. from Colne.

WHITLEY, a hamlet in the parish of St Chad, within the liberty of the town of Shrewsbury, co. of Salop. Distance from Shrewsbury, 3½ m. S.W.

WHITLEY, a hamlet in the parish of Staple-Fitz-paine, co. of Somerset.

WHITLEY, a hundred in the co. of Somerset, containing 20 parishes, and, in 1831, 12,794 inhabitants. It is towards the north-western side of the county.

WHITLEY, a hamlet in the parish of Wootton-Wawen, co. of Warwick.

WHITLEY, a township in the parish of Kellington, lower division of the wapentake of Osgoldcross, W. R., co. of York. Distance from Snaith, 5 m. W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 225; in 1831, 310. A. P., £1,116.

WHITLEY-BOOTHs, a joint township with Barley, in the parish of Whalley, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Distance from Colne, 4 m. W. by N. Pop., &c., returned with Barley.

WHITLEY (LOWER or NETHER), a chapelry in the parish of Great Budworth, western division of the hundred of Bucklow, co.-palatine of Chester. Living, a perpetual curacy annexed to the vicarage of Great Budworth, in the archd. and dio. of Chester, not in charge, endowed with £800. Patronage with the vicarage of Great Budworth. "In this township is a chapel-of-ease, called Whitley chapel, within the parish of Great Budworth. This chapel was built anew, but upon an old foundation, by Thomas Tuschet, late of Nether Whitley, Esq., at his own cost."—Leycester's Hist. of the Antiq. of Chester. Distance from Northwich, 5 m. N.W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 137; in 1831, 237. A. P., £1,678.

WHITLEY (LOWER), a township in the parish of Thornhill, lower division of the wapentake of Agbrigg, W. R., co. of York. In the vicinity are two scribbling mills and a tannery. Distance from Wakefield, 5½ m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 619; in 1831, 1012. A. P., £3,116.

WHITLEY (OVER), a township in the parish of Great Budworth, hundred of Bucklow, co.-palatine of Chester. "It is a great township, comprehending the hamlets of Norcot, Anterbus, Middle-Walke, Seven-Oaks, and Crowley, within the same. It is commonly called by the neighbourhood the Lordship, and is of the Fee of Halton-castle from the time of the Conqueror. Formerly this town was copyhold land to the baron of Halton, until the same was bought out into fee farm by fealty, and suit of court to Halton, and not to be held in capite nor knight-service. The king's charter is dated 17th December, 1612."—Leycester's Hist. of the Antiq. of Chester. Distance from Northwich, 5½ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 283; in 1831, 283. A. P., £1,930.

WHITLEY (OVER or UPPER), a township in the parish of Kirk-Heaton, upper division of the wapentake of Agbrigg, W. R., co. of York. Here is Whitley-hall, the seat of the ancient family of Beaumont from the reign of Henry III. It stands advantageously on an elevated plain declining to the west, but sheltered by high grounds on the east. The park was surrounded, by its last possessor, with plantations, which at once contribute to shelter and render the place conspicuous as an object in the midst of the numerous elevations resembling itself, with which the face of the country abounds. The present house is of two periods:—First, there appears to have been a hall, with a centre and two wings fronting northward, the remains of which, both in wood and stone, almost prove it to have been the work of Sir Richard Beaumont, about the end of Elizabeth's reign, or the beginning of that of her successor. But in the year 1704 was begun a new and magnificent front, closing the open space between the wings to the north, and forming a complete quadrangle within. The architecture, although rather heavy, is of a striking character. Within is an arcade of stone connecting the principal apartments, and on the western side of the principal entrance is the family chapel, fitted up with excellently carved oak, and in the taste formed by Gibbons, if not, in fact, executed by him. The hall in the centre of the south front, that is, the former house, remained in its ancient state till it was modernized, and rendered a magnificent room by the father of the present possessor, and much to the regret of the last. The portraits are very numerous. T. R. Beaumont, Esq., is the present possessor. Denby-Grange, the seat of Sir J. L. Kaye, Bart., is situated in a fertile valley, through which winds the river Colne, and which is bounded by high hills, richly cultivated. The family of Kaye is of great antiquity in this county, claiming to be descended from Sir A. Kaye, one of the knights of King Arthur's round-table. Distance from Huddersfield, 6 m. E. by N. Pop., in 1831, 885.

WHITLINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of Henstead, co. of Norfolk. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, not in charge, and in patronage of Mr Hare. The church was formerly ded. to St Andrew, but has long since been in ruins. Distance from Norwich, $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. E. S. E. Pop., in 1831, 885.

WHITMORE, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of Pirehill, co. of Stafford. Living, a rectory not in charge, in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £400, and, in 1829, in patronage of Thomas Brazier, Esq. It is within the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of pleas held every third Tuesday for the recovery of debts under 40s. Distance from Newcastle-under-Lyne, 4 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 234; in 1831, 281. A. P., £2,433.

WHITNASH, a parish in the Kenilworth division of the hundred of Knightlow, co. of Warwick. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £5 9s. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Chandos Leigh, Esq. Church ded. to St Margaret. Here is a school endowed with £2 per annum, bequeathed in 1715 by Nicholas Chamberlaines. Distance from Warwick, 3 m. E. S. E. Pop., in 1801, 203; in 1831, 260. A. P., £1,559.

WHITNEL, a hamlet in the parish of St Cuthbert, co. of Somerset.

WHITNEY, a parish in the hundred of Huntingdon, co. of Hereford. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford, rated at £5 8s., and, in 1829, in patronage of Tomkin Drew, Esq. Church ded. to St Peter and St Paul. Distance from Hay, 5 m. N. E. Pop., in 1801, 199; in 1831, 254. A. P., £1,913.

WHITREY, a hamlet in the parish of Upwman, co. of Devon.

WHITRIDGE, a township in the parish of Hartburn, western division of the ward of Morpeth, co. of Northumberland. Distance from Morpeth, 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ m. W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 10; in 1831, 11.

WHITRIGG, a joint township with Torpenhow, in the parish of Torpenhow, Alledale ward below Darwent, co. of Cumberland. On a hill within the township, known by the name of Caer-Mot, are several remains of ancient fortifications, consisting chiefly of an intrenchment doubly fortified, of a square form, intersected by the old road leading from Keswick to Old Carlisle; also a smaller one furnished with a rampart and ditch: besides these, there are traces of a beacon on the summit. The pop., &c., are returned with Torpenhow.

WHITSTABLE, a hundred in the lathe of St Augustine, co. of Kent. It is situated at the eastern end of the county, containing three parishes.

WHITSTABLE, or WHITSTAPLE, a parish in the upper half hundred of Whitstable, lathe of St Augustine, co. of Kent. It contains the hamlet of Harwich. It is situated near the entrance to the Swale, opposite to the isle of Sheppey, on the river Thames. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, certified at £22 10s., returned at £148, and in patronage of the archbishop of Canterbury. Church ded. to All Saints. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. Whitstable is connected with Canterbury by means of a railway, along which large quantities of coals are sent. These are entirely brought by sea,—a great number of vessels frequenting the port for this purpose. Hoys sail regularly to London carrying goods and passengers. A great number of the inhabitants are employed in fishing, and in dredging for oysters, Whitstable being a royalty of fishery, and a court being held here once a year in February for the purpose of regulating the trade, and settling any disputes which may arise in the prosecution of it. On the shore are several manufactories of copperas or green vitriol. There are three annual fairs held within the parish;—one held on the Thursday before Whitsuntide, near the water side; another on Midsummer day at Church-street; and the third on St James' day at Greensted-green, in Whitstable-street. This last named place is a thriving village, containing many good shops and stores well supplied with marine stores, &c. Roman pottery has been found in considerable quantities by people engaged in dredging near a rock, supposed by some to be identical with the island Caunos of Ptolemy, which is, however, entirely covered by the sea, and is commonly known by the name of the Padding-pan. Distance from Canterbury, 6 m. N. N. W. Pop., in 1801, 1205; in 1831, 1926. A. P., £5,904.

WHIT-STAUNTON, county of Somerset. See WHITE-STAUNTON.

WHITSTON, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Caldicot, co. of Monmouth. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff, rated at £6 7s. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., and alternately in the patronage of Eton college, and the dean and chapter of Llandaff.

The church is said to have belonged to Port-town,—a town which is now entirely covered by the sea, but which formerly existed in the neighbourhood. Distance from Newport, 5½ m. S.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 73; in 1831, 106. A. P., £1,901.

WHITSTONE, a parish in the hundred of Stratton, co. of Cornwall. The parish is intersected by the Bude and Launceston canal. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter, rated at £14 11s. 0½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Thomas Brown, Esq. Distance from Stratton, 5½ m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 345; in 1831, 481. A. P., £1,832.

WHITTERING, a parish in the living of Peterborough, co. of Northampton. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £8 0s. 10d., and in patronage of the marquess of Exeter. Church ded. to All Saints. Distance from Wansford, 2½ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 194; in 1831, 216. A. P., £1,556.

WHITTINGHAM, a township in the parish of Kirkham, hundred of Amounderness, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Distance from Preston, 6 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 529; in 1831, 710. A. P., £4,873.

WHITTINGHAM, a parish in the northern division of the ward of Coquetdale, co. of Northumberland. It contains the townships of Callaley-with-Yetlington, Glanton, Lorbottle, Great Ryle, Little Ryle, Shawdon, and Whittingham. The parish is intersected by the river Ain. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham, rated at £12 11s. 3d., and in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Carlisle. Church ded. to St Bartholomew. The incorporated society for building and enlarging churches and chapels have lately granted £60 to this church, an addition has been made to it amounting in all to 172 seats, of which 100 are free. Here is a strongly fortified tower, formerly used by the inhabitants as a place of refuge during the frequent incursions of the Scots. Distance from Alnwick, 8½ m. W. by S. Pop. of the township of Whittingham, in 1801, 512; in 1831, 611; of the whole parish in 1831, 1790. A. P., £18,765.

WHITTINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Scarsdale, co. of Derby. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £7 10s. 10d., and in patronage of the dean of Lincoln. The church is ded. to St Bartholomew, the chancel of which was built in 1827. Here is a free school, founded in 1674 by Peter Webster, and about four years afterwards endowed by him with £200, which was directed by him to be appropriated to the education of 20 children; this school was further endowed by Joshua Webster, in 1681, with land for the education of 10 children. The annual income arising from these benefactions being now about £32 10s., 20 boys and half that number of girls are instructed in some of the elementary branches of education, besides being partly supplied with shoes and books. Here is a spring strongly impregnated with iron, and a cold bath was erected here in 1769. A considerable number of visitors are attracted to this place by the former. On Whittington-moor is a public-house in which a meeting was held in 1688, by those friendly to the succession of the house of Nassau to the throne; this meeting was attended by the earls of Devonshire and Derby, Lord Delamere, and Sir John Darcy, eldest son of the earl of Holderness. In commemoration of this circumstance the house is known by the name of the Revolution-house. In 1788, being the centenary of the revolution, it was proposed to erect a column on the moor, and a subscription was accordingly commenced for that purpose. The committee appointed to superintend the erection, dined at the above-mentioned house on the day preceding the anniversary of the meeting, and on the succeeding day sermon was preached in the parish church, by Dr Pegge, well known as an antiquary, who was at that time rector. After sermon many of the most distinguished of the county partook of refreshments at the Revolution-house, and afterwards dined together at Chesterfield. In consequence, it is supposed, of the great, and, as it ultimately proved, pernicious spread of revolutionary sentiments on the continent, and especially in France, the design of erecting this memorial of the courage and perseverance of our ancestors was abandoned. On this moor the Chesterfield races are annually held. Distance from Chesterfield, 2 m. N. Pop., in 1801, 663; in 1831, 740. A. P., £3,638.

WHITTINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Bradley, co. of Gloucester. It is intersected by the small river Colne. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £13 6s. 8d., exempt from visitation, and, in 1829, in patronage of Mrs Tracey. Distance from Cheltenham, 4 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 194; in 1831, 247. A. P., £1,623.

WHITTINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Lonsdale, south of the sands, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, rated at £13 9s. 9½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of W. W. C. Wilson, Esq. Here is a school at which six children receive free education, on an endowment of £1,000, bequeathed in 1762 by William Margison. Distance from Kirkby-Lonsdale, 2 m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 384; in 1831, 542. A. P., £5,203.

WHITTINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Oswestry, co. of Salop. It lies on both sides of the river Perry. This place is mentioned by Lloyd in his "Archæologia," and is supposed by him to be the same as the town called Dréo Wen or the White Town, by Llowarch Hen, an ancient British bard who flourished about the end of the sixth century; by him it is said to have been the place where Conolanus, a British chief, was slain, in an attempt to repel an invading army from Ireland. According to the bards it was afterwards for some time in the possession of Tudor Trevor. After the Norman conquest, it was granted to Roger, earl of Shrewsbury, but was soon after, in the reign of Henry I., forfeited to the crown on account of the rebellious behaviour of Roger's son. By Henry it was granted to the Peverells, and from them passed by marriage to the noble family of Fitz-Warine, in whose possession it continued for above 400 years. During the time the castle was held by this family it was often the scene of bloody contests with the Welsh, having been strongly fortified and a considerable garrison being usually maintained in it. In the course of these frequent attacks the castle appears to have become dilapidated to a certain extent, as we find warrant granted by Henry III. to the celebrated Fulke Fitz-Warine for repairing and fortifying it. Of this important fortress, there is little now standing, there being only one entire tower, the remains of four others, and the house at the gateway, which is now used as a farm-house. A club called the Whittington club hold their annual meeting at midsummer on a green in front of the castle.—Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of St Asaph, rated at £25 4s. 2d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Arden and others as trustees of the late Rev. J. R. Lloyd. The church is ded. to St John the Baptist, and the ancient structure is generally supposed to have been built by Fulke Fitz-Warine, in the reign of Henry II.; it was, however, rebuilt in 1806. A market and fair were formerly obtained for this place by the influence of the same Fulke Fitz-Warine, but they have both been long since discontinued. The town enjoys the advantage of excellent canal communication with Cheshire and other parts of England, by means of the Ellesmere and Cheshire canal, which is here divided into four branches, known by the names of the Creaster, Llangollen, Montgomeryshire, and Weston canals. Coal is supposed by geologists to exist in the parish, but this has not yet been verified by experiment. William Lloyd, Esq., lord of the manor, holds an annual court leet and baron in a part of the castle rebuilt by him for that purpose. Here is a school, in support of which Robert Jones bequeathed two cottages and some land, the rents of which are appropriated to that purpose. In addition to this, Griffith Hughes left 17 acres, one-half of which he directed to be given to this school, and the other half to that of Ruabon: about 100 boys are here instructed on the national system of education. Here is also a school, conducted on the same system, founded by Elizabeth Probert, at which 50 girls are instructed. Distance from Oswestry, 3 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 1398; in 1831, 1788. A. P., £12,984.

WHITTINGTON, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of Offlow, co. of Stafford. It is intersected by the Coventry canal. Living, a perpetual curacy, in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the prebendal court of Whittington and Baswich, valued at £32, returned at £144 4s. 2d., and in patronage of the dean of Lincoln. Church ded. to St Giles. Here is a charity, endowed with some land and a house by Sarah Neal, in 1741, and with £300 by the Rev. Richard Levett, in 1800; the annual income arising from these benefactions, amounting to about £8, is appropriated to the education of about 25 children. Distance from Tamworth, 4 m. N.W. by W. Pop. with the hamlet of Tamhara, in 1801, 631; in 1831, 773. A. P., £4,118.

WHITTINGTON, a township in the parish of Grendon, Tamworth division of the hundred of Hemlingsford, co. of Warwick. It is within the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, before which all debts not exceeding 40s. can be recovered. Distance from Athertonstone, 2 m. N.W. The pop. and other returns are included in the parish of Grendon.

WHITTINGTON, or WITHINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of St Peter, city of Worcester, lower division of the hundred of Oswaldslow, co. of Worcester. The chapel, which is an ancient structure, is built of wood, and contains some tracery of a remarkable character, and is ded. to St Philip and St James. "Oshere Viceroy, lord-lieutenant, or earl of Worcestershire, with the consent of King Ethelred, about the end of the 7th century, gave a parcel of land here to two nuns, in order to found a monastery, which seems to have continued under three or four abbesses, until the year 774 and after, but the estate at length came into the church at Worcester, and was part of the endowment of the bishopric."—Tanner's Not. Men. Distance from Worcester, 2½ m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 106; in 1831, 279.

WHITTINGTON-GRANGE, a hamlet in the parish of Ratby, co. of Leicester. Distance from Leicester, 6 m. W. by N.

WHITTINGTON (GREAT), a township in the parish of Corbridge, eastern division of the ward of Tindale, co. of Northumberland. Here is a school, the school-room of which was built about 8 years ago by subscription, and in which 10 poor children receive free education from funds left by James Kinsop, Esq., and producing an annual income of £5. Distance from Hexham, 7 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 172; in 1831, 209.

WHITTINGTON (LITTLE), a township in the parish of Corbridge, eastern division of the ward of Tindale, co. of Northumberland. Distance from Hexham, 6½ m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 20; in 1831, 11.

WHITTLE, a township in the parish of Glossop, hundred of High-Peak, co. of Derby. Distance from Chapel-en-le-Frith, 6 m. N.W. Pop., in 1831, 2266.

WHITTLE, a township in the parish of Shilbottle, eastern division of the ward of Coquetdale, co. of Northumberland. Distance from Alnwick, 5 m. S. Pop., in 1801, 64; in 1831, 58.

WHITTLE, a township in the parish of Ovingham, eastern division of the ward of Tindale, co. of Northumberland. Distance from Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 11 m. W. Pop., in 1801, 81; in 1831, 29.

WHITTLE (WELCH), a township in the parish of Standish, hundred of Leyland, co-palatine of Lancaster. Distance from Chorley, 3 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 127; in 1831, 147. A. P., £1,339.

WHITTLE-LE-WOODS, a township in the parish and hundred of Leyland, co-palatine of Lancaster. Here is a school, the school-room of which was erected in 1769 by subscription, and endowed in the following year with a sum of £220, which, under judicious management, now produces about £200 annual income, which is appropriated to the education of about 20 children. Under the authority of recent acts of parliament, commissioners have commenced building a church. A lead mine was formerly wrought here to considerable advantage, but has been given up for some time. Stones, excellently adapted for the making of mill stones, are cut in a quarry in the vicinity and sent to the neighbouring parishes. Distance from Chorley, 3½ m. N. by E. Pop., in 1801, 1325; in 1831, 2015. A. P., £6,291.

WHITTLEBURY, a parish in the hundred of Greens-Norton, co. of Northampton. Living, a perpetual curacy, annexed with that of Silverstone to the rectory of Greens-Norton, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, not in charge. The patronage is with the rectory of Greens-Norton. Church ded. to St Mary. Here is a small charity endowed with a small property called the Slapton estate, the rents of which partly support a school conducted on the national system, the deficiency being annually made up by means of subscriptions. In this school upwards of 80 are instructed on the week-days, and about 150 on Sundays. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Towcester, 4 m. S. by W. Pop., in 1801, 533; in 1831, 670. A. P., £1,902.

WHITTLESEY, or WHITTLESEA, a village, formerly a market-town, in the northern division of the hundred of Witchford, isle of Ely, co. of Cambridge. It contains the two parishes of St Andrew and St Mary. Branches of the river Nene bound it on the north and south. Whittlesey is mentioned in the Norman survey of the kingdom under the name of Witeste, and is generally supposed to have been anciently a Roman station, traces of a military way being clearly discernible in the vicinity, and many antiquities having been discovered. The living of St Andrew's is a discharged vicarage in the peculiar jurisdiction of the bishop of Ely, being exempt from visitation, rated at £4 13s. 4d., and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church is a structure with considerable claims to elegance of design, with a lofty turretted tower. The living of St Mary's is also a discharged vicarage under the same jurisdiction, rated at £19 13s. 9d., returned at £122 8s., and, in 1829, in patronage of E. C. and H. Waldegrave, Esqs. The church is a handsome structure, with a tower surmounted by a light and elegant spire. In the village the Calvinistic and Independent Methodists, Independents and Baptists, have places of worship. Although the market, which was formerly held on Friday, has now fallen into disuse, the village is still a large and populous town, as may be judged on reference to the returns of population and property. Courts leet and baron are held biennially in the principal inn, also a court of requests for the recovery of small debts under £2, which is held on the third Friday in every month. A library and newsroom have been recently established, and are well supported by subscriptions. Here are two endowed schools, one of which owes its existence to Adam Kelfuld, who founded and endowed it about 100 years ago, and the other to John Sudbury, who endowed it in 1815. Large quantities of fish are caught in a large sheet of water called Whittlesey-Mere, or sometimes the White sea; these fish are sent principally to the metropolis. This piece of water, although adjacent to Whittlesey, as its name imports, is in the neighbouring county 'of Huntingdon. Distance from Peterborough, 6 m. E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 3841; in 1831, 6019. A. P., £30,681.

WHITTLESFORD, a hundred in the co. of Cambridge, near its southern extremity, containing 5 parishes, and, in 1831, 2980 inhabitants.

WHITTLESFORD, a parish in the hundred of Whittlesford, co. of Cambridge. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Ely, rated at £10, returned at £150, and in patronage of the master and fellows of Jesus' college, Cambridge. Church ded. to St Mary and St Andrew. Here is a charity endowed with about £50 annual income, arising from lands and houses left by William Westley in 1723: the annual income is appropriated to the education of poor children. Here were formerly held a fair and market, both of which are, however, now discontinued. "Here was an hospital near the bridge as early as the time of King Edward I., which seems to have been founded by one William Colvill. It was dedicated to St John the Baptist, and the master-ship of it was in the gift of the bishop of Ely." — Tanner's Not. Mon. Some remains of this building are still in existence. Distance from Linton, 6 m. W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 416; in 1831, 524. A. P., £2,976.

WHITTON, a township in the parish of Grindon, north-eastern division of the ward of Stockton, co-palatine of Durham. Distance from Stockton-upon-Tees, 5 m. N.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 38; in 1831, 75. A. P., £699.

WHITTON, a joint township with Tripton, in the parish of Leintwardine, hundred of Wigmore, co. of Hereford. Distance from Ludlow, 9 m. W.S.W. Pop. with Trippleton, in 1831, 63.

WHITTON, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of Manley, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged rectory with the vicarage of Aukborough, united in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £6 10s., returned at £75, and in the alternate patronage of the bishop of Lincoln and T. Goulton, Esq. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. Distance from Barton-upon-Humber, 11 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 207; in 1831, 245. A. P., £1,328.

WHITTON, a hamlet in the parish of Islesworth, co. of Middlesex. Distance from St Paul's cathedral, London, 13½ m. W.S.W.

WHITTON, a township in the parish of Rothbury, western division of the ward of Coquetdale, co. of Northumberland. Here is an observatory erected by the late Dr Sharp, near the ancient castle, which is still in a state of considerable preservation, being occupied by the rector of the parish. Of this castle the following account is given by Grose in his Antiquities of England:—"Whitton castle stands on the south side of the river Wear, at its confluence with the Lynburn. This was the baronial castle of the Lords de Eures, a family of ancient note and eminence in the county, descended from the lords of Claening and Warkworth, and by the female line from the Vesicles and Altons. They were famous for their warlike exploits against the Scots, as a reward for which King Edward I. bestowed upon them Ketness, a town in Scotland. It was built about the year 1410, as is evident from the license for its construction, preserved in the archives of the see of Durham, among the rolls of Bishop Langley, marked A., No. 32. That deed recites, that this building was begun before; but as no license had been previously obtained, it is probable that the bishop, by his authority, put a stop to its progress. This circumstance serves to show that the family was then in great estimation, as none but such as supported themselves almost above the law would have neglected this precaution. It also further appears from that bishop not only pardoning this transgression, but also granting his license for the erection of the castle, after so flagrant a contempt of his authority. In the reign of Henry VIII., Sir Ralph Eure was lord-warden of the marches, and did so many valiant exploits against the Scots at Tiviotdale, that the king gave him a grant of all the lands he could win from them; wherefore he invaded Scotland, but engaging with the earl of Arran at Hallidown field, was then slain, together with the Lord Ogle, and many other persons of note. William Eure, brother of the second Ralph Lord Eure, was a colonel in the army of Charles I., and was killed at the battle of Marston-moor in Yorkshire, A. D. 1645. The last Lord Eure, who was living in 1674, leaving no issue-male, that family became extinct. At the time of the civil war, this castle was in the hands of Sir William Darcy. He being a royalist, it was besieged and taken by Sir Arthur Haselrig, governor of Auckland castle, who sequestered the goods, but did not destroy the building, which was afterwards demolished. James, Lord Darcy, of Howan in Ireland, about the year 1689, who took away the lead, timber, and chimney-pieces to Saddington, in this county, with design to build another house there, but the greatest part of these materials were afterwards sold by auction, for much less than the sum paid for their pulling down and removal from Whitton." Distance from Rothbury, ¼ m. S. Pop., in 1801, 84; in 1831, 104.

WHITTON, a parish in the hundred of Cefn-Llys, co. of Radnor, South Wales. The river Lug flows past the parish. Living, a discharged rectory in the dio. of St David's, rated at £4 7s. 11d., returned at £125 11s. 1d., and in patronage of the bishop of St David's. Here is a free school, endowed by Lady Child, for the joint use of this parish and Pithlith. The parish contains about 1000 imperial acres of land. Distance from Presteign, 4 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 109; in 1831, 131. A. P., £784.

WHITTON, a township in the parish of Burford, hundred of Overs, co. of Salop. Distance from Tenbury, 3¼ m. N.W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 62; in 1831, 76. A. P., £1,094.

WHITTON, a parish within the liberties of the borough of Ipswich, co. of Suffolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £6 11s. 5½d., and in patronage of the bishop of Ely. Church ded. to St Mary. The parish is intersected by the Stow-market and Ipswich navigation canal. Distance from Ipswich, 2¼ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 210; in 1831, 346. A. P., £2,117. These returns include the parish of Thurleston.

WHITTON-DEAN, a hamlet in the parish of Islesworth, co. of Middlesex. Distance from St Paul's cathedral, London, 13½ m. W.S.W.

WHITTONSTALL, a chapelry in the parish of Bywell-St-Peter, eastern division of the ward of Tindale, co. of Northumberland. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham, not in charge, returned at £45, subordinate to the vicarage of Bywell-St-Peter, and in patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham. Chapel ded. to St Philip and St James. A number of poor children are educated here on £15 annual income, allowed for that purpose by the governors of Greenwich hospital. The ancient Roman military road, commonly called Watling-street, intersects the parish. Distance from Hexham, 10 m. S.E. by E. Pop., including the township of Newlands, in 1801, 258; in 1831, 336. A. P., £3,081.

WHITWELL, a parish in the hundred of Scarsdale, co. of Derby. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £20 3s. 4d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the duke of Portland. Church ded. to St Laurence. It has a Norman tower. Here are two schools conducted on the national system, one for boys and another for girls; the former supported by the duke of Portland, and the latter by the dutchess. The opening of the Chesterfield canal has proved prejudicial to this as well as some other of the neighbouring villages. The only branch of manufacture now carried on to any extent, is that of frame-stocking knitting. Here was formerly held an annual fair for hiring servants on the 1st Nov., but it has long since fallen into disuse. The ancient hall is now used as a farm-house. At Steetley, which was formerly a separate parish, is a church now desecrated, which exhibits some very choice specimens of the early English and Norman styles of architecture. This ruin is carefully preserved. Distance from Chesterfield, 11 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 782; in 1831, 1007. A. P., £2,976.

WHITWELL, a parish in the hundred of Eynesford, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to the rectory of Lyng, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich. The patronage is with the rectory of Lyng. Church ded. to St Michael. Distance from Reepham, 1 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 313; in 1831, 483.

WHITWELL, a parish in the hundred of Alstoe, co. of Rutland. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £5, returned at £150, and in patronage of Sir G. Noel, Bart. Church ded. to St Michael. Here is a cave supposed to have been sometimes used as a retreat by the famous outlaw, Robin Hood, and still known by his name. Distance from Oakham, 4½ m. E. Pop., in 1801, 80; in 1831, 124. A. P., £886.

WHITWELL, a parish in the south-eastern half hundred of Medina liberty, Isle of Wight division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a perpetual curacy subordinate to the vicarage of Godshill, in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, not in charge. The patronage is with the vicarage of Godshill. Church ded. to St Radagund. Distance from Newport, 8 m. S. by E. Pop., in 1801, 405; in 1831, 556. A. P., £2,512.

WHITWELL, a township in the parish of Kirkby in Kendal, ward of Kendal, co. of Westmoreland. This township was inclosed under the authority of an inclosure bill passed in 1825, previous to which it was an extensive common. Distance from Kendal, 4 m. N. by E. Pop. returned with the chapelry of Selside.

WHITWELL, or WHITWELL-ON-THE-HILL, a township in the parish of Crambe, wapentake of Bulmer, N. R., co. of York. Distance from New Malton, 6 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 166; in 1831, 227. A. P., £2,656.

WHITWELL, a chapelry in the parish of Catterick, eastern division of the wapentake of Gilling, N. R., co. of York. Distance from Catterick, 3 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 77; in 1831, 86. A. P., £1,027.

Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Durham, not in charge, and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham. The chapel was formerly subordinate to the vicarage of Merrington. The burial ground contains several ancient monuments, on one of which are the effigies of two ladies, and a knight in armour. Distance from Bishop-Auckland, 4 m. N.E. by N. Total pop. in 1831, 337. Pop. of the township of Whitworth, in 1801, 112; in 1831, 100. A. P., £1,442. The remainder of the pop. of parish is given under Tudhoe.

WHITWORTH, a chapelry in the parish of Rochdale, hundred of Salford, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester, rated at £6 6s. 8d., returned at £96 12s., and, in 1829, in patronage of Mr Starkey and others. Chapel ded. to St Bartholomew. Here is a charity producing annually about £14 10s., which is appropriated to the instruction of 12 poor children in reading; the income arises from the rent of some cottages given by James Starkey in 1724. Distance from Rochdale, 3 m. N. by W. The population and assessed property are included in the returns made from Rochdale.

WHIXHALL, a chapelry in the parish of Prees, Whitchurch division of the hundred of Bradford, co. of Salop. Living, a perpetual curacy, subordinate to the vicarage of Prees, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the prebendary of Prees, in the cathedral church of Lichfield, in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £12 5s., returned at £92, and in patronage of the bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. Chapel ded. to St Mary. It has recently received a grant of £150 from the incorporated society for the enlargement of churches and chapels, in consequence of which an addition of 143 free sittings has been made.

A few poor children are here taught on an endowment of £2 per annum, bequeathed in 1737 by William Higgins. Distance from Wem, 4 m. N. by E. Pop., in 1831, 957.

WHORLTON, a parish in the western division of the liberty of Langbaugh, N. R., co. of York. It includes the townships of Fuceby, Potto, and Whorlton. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York, rated at £13 10s., returned at £62 9s., and, in 1831, in patronage of the marquess of Aylesbury. The church is ded. to the Holy Cross, and contains in the interior a curious ivy tree which clusters around the columns and other parts of the building. Here is a school with a small annual income arising from the benefactions of William and Isabel Harker, the former of whom also bequeathed a cottage to be used as a school-house. Here was formerly a cell of Augustines, subordinate to the religious house at Gisburn, which was founded by Stephen Meinil. Here are a few remains of an ancient castle, which formerly belonged to the Barons Meinil. Leland says, "this was the principal house of the Lord Menell, which since came to Master Strangways in partition." Within the church, on the north side of the chancel in an arch of the wall, is an ancient monument to Sir Nicholas de Meinil. At what time the castle fell into decay is not known; in the time of Camden it was old and ruinous. Nicholas de Meinil held the manor of Whorlton, &c., of the archbishop of Canterbury, by serving the said archbishop on the day of his consecration, with the cup out of which the archbishop was to drink that day.

It appears to have come first into the family of Bruce, ancestors of the present possessor the marquess of Aylesbury, in the reign of Charles I. Distance from Stokesley, 5½ m. S.W. by S. Total pop. in 1831, 915. Pop. of the township of Whorlton, in 1801, 544; in 1831, 585. A. P., £3,757.

WICKERSLACK, a hamlet in the parish of Crosby-Ravensworth, co. of Northumberland. Distance from Orton, 6 m. N.

WICKERSLEY, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, W. R., co. of York. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of York, rated at £8 0s. 2½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of H. Kater, Esq. The church—ded. to St Alban—has a tower with north and south aisles, and is in substance the original church, erected about a century after the conquest. In the east window are some remains of painted glass, which appear to be of the age of Henry VII. Half a century ago enough remained to show the whole design. It was the crucifixion with the Virgin, and St John standing beneath the cross. Below, a lady was introduced kneeling, with a book before her. From her mouth proceeded a scroll, on which was written,—'Dominus miserere mei.' There are still remaining two shields of arms, neither of which are those of Wickersley, the only family from whom such an act of piety at this place is to be expected. They are, ar., a chevron; sa., between; 3 butterflies proper; and gw., a fess or, between 3 lions rampant ar. The next object of curiosity is the grave stone of one of the family of Wickersley, the only memorial of them remaining. It is in the north chancel. In the centre is the sacred monogram, and at each corner the arms of Wickersley. The inscription is remarkable, on account of its being in English, and the use of the old plural form of an obsolete verb. Both the verb and the form of it may still be heard in this part of England:—"Here ligger Roger Wykersley and Margaret his wife. He dyed the xxiiiij day of May, anno Dni MCCCCLXXII., and The time of the wife's death is concealed by the pewing. This place is famous for a bed of fine stone, peculiarly adapted for the making of grindstones, some thousands of which are annually sent to Sheffield. Distance from Rotherham, 3½ m. E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 270; in 1831, 527. A. P., £1,917.

WICKFORD, a parish in the hundred of Barstable, co. of Essex. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London, rated at £14, and in patronage of R. B. de Beauvoir, Esq., in 1829. The Independent Methodists have a place of worship here. "Belonging to this parish are two Geldables. They are joined in the taxes with Wickford, and bear a third part in the king's tax, which they pay to the collectors of this parish. One-third part of the constable's rate is also paid to them, and they have nothing further to do with this parish. The geldables extend into the neighbouring parishes of Rawreth, Runwell, and South Honington. The word Geldable signifies liable to pay tax or tribute, and is thought to be that land or lordship which is under the distress of the sheriff's court. What quantity of land these geldables contain, I find nowhere specified; but Rawreth hamlet is rated to the land tax at £134, and Runwell geldable at £98."—Morant's Essex. Distance from Billericay, 6 m. E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 263; in 1831, 402. A. P., £2,426.

WICKHAM, a parish in the hundred of Titchfield, Portdown division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £8 2s. 8½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of P. Raskleigh, Esq. Church ded. to St Nicholas. A few poor children receive education from funds arising from £100, invested in the three per cent. consolidated annuities, which sum was bequeathed for the above purpose by John Swann, in 1778. The village lies on the high road from London to Gosport. Here is an annual fair for the sale of cattle on the 20th of May. Here are also held courts leet and baron annually. The place is worthy of mention as the birth-place of the celebrated churchman, William Wykeham, who was born here in the year 1324. Dr Joseph Warton, the poet, chose this as his place of residence in the latter part of his life, and died here in 1800. Distance from Bishop's-Waltham, 4 m. S. by E. Pop., in 1801, 901; in 1831, 1106. A. P., £4,578.

WICKHAM (EAST), a parish in the hundred of Lessness, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, co. of Kent. Living, a perpetual curacy subordinate to the vicarage of Plumstead, in the archd. and dio. of Rochester, not in charge. Patronage with the vicarage of Plumstead. The church is ded. to St Michael, and consists of a nave and chancel, with a turret at the western extremity; it is an ancient building, built of stone and flint. Sir John Hawkins, the celebrated naval officer in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, founded the hospital at Chatham for indigent seamen, and granted towards its support part of the land and tithes in this parish, which it still possesses. Thirty-three boys and 19 girls receive education on an endowment of £68 annual income, bequeathed by William Forster in 1727 for that purpose. Distance from Crayford, $3\frac{1}{2}$ m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 237; in 1831, 399. A. P., £1,995.

WICKHAM-MARKET, a parish, formerly a market-town, in the hundred of Wilford, co. of Suffolk. It is situated on a rising ground near the river Deben. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £6 16s. 8d., and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church—which was ded. to St Andrew—has long since fallen into decay, and on its site has been erected a large and spacious edifice with a tower, which is ded. to All Saints. Fifty churches are visible from the eminence on which the church is built. This was formerly a place of considerable importance,—a market and two fairs having been granted in 1440 by Henry VI.; these have, however, long fallen into disuse. The general quarter sessions were formerly held here in the shire-hall, which was taken down not long ago by the lord of the manor. The ecclesiastical courts for the archdeaconry of Suffolk are still held here. Distance from Ipswich, $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 896; in 1831, 1202. A. P., £3,014.

Living, a rectory in the dio. of London, and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the dean and chapter of St Paul's, London, rated at £9. Church ded. to All Saints. Distance from Castle-Hedingham, $3\frac{1}{2}$ m. E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 316; in 1831, 368. A. P., £1,340.

WICKHAM-SKEYTH, a parish in the hundred of Hartismere, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Sud-bury and dio. of Norwich, rated at £5 8s. 1½d., returned at £130, and, in 1829, in patronage of J. Wodehouse, Esq. Church ded. to St Andrew. "This manor was given, in the reign of King Stephen, to the abbey of St John at Colchester, by a knight of great note in those days, named Robert de Salco Villa, who at last turned monk, upon condition that four monks of that house should be settled here to pray for his soul; but in the next reign his son Jordan consented that the religious should be withdrawn from hence, and removed to Colchester, where the convent was to be increased with four religious above their old number. However, this manor and church continued in the abbey till the general dissolution." —Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Mendlesham, $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. N. Pop., in 1801, 442; in 1831, 556. A. P., £2,293.

WICKHAM (WEST), a parish in the hundred of Chifford, co. of Cambridge. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Ely, not in charge, and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Montford. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Linton, $4\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 332; in 1831, 529. A. P., £3,193.

WICKHAM (WEST), a parish in the hundred of Ruxby, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, co. of Kent. It was formerly a market-town, but the market has long since fallen into disuse. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Rochester, rated at £11 10s. 10d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of Sir Charles Farnaby. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. It is an ancient building, the present edifice having been built in the reign of Henry VII.; it contains some beautiful stained glass. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Here is a school conducted on the national system, in which about 80 children are educated. A fair is held on Easter Monday for the sale of cattle. The manor is an ancient castellated building of the same date as the church. The learned Gilbert West, the author of the dissertation on St Paul's conversion, resided here for some years previous to his death. Distance from Bromley, $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 436; in 1831, 614. A. P., £3,957.

WICKHAMFORD, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of Blackenhurst, co. of Worcester. Living, a discharged perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Worcester, rated at £2 4s. 4½d., returned at £65, and in patronage of the dean and canons of Christ-church, Oxford. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. The parish affords limestone in considerable quantities. Distance from Evesham, 2 m. S.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 125; in 1831, 136. A. P., £1,711.

WICKWAR, a parish and market-town in the upper division of the hundred of Grumbald's-Ash, co. of Gloucester. The town is situated on two small streams, over one of which is a stone bridge. The trade of the place is now very inconsiderable, that in cloth having deserted it in a great degree. A new road has been recently constructed to Wotton-under-Edge, by which the distance has been shortened about three miles; this, it is thought, will probably bring back the ancient prosperity of the place. Coal is found in the vicinity. Monday is market-day, and fairs are held on the 5th of April and 2d of July for horses and horned cattle. The corporation consists of a mayor and a number of aldermen, all those who have been elected mayor being entitled to continue aldermen for life. A court manor is held in October. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £18, and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. Thomas Cork. The church is ded. to the Holy Trinity, and has a lofty tower at the west end. The Wesleyan Methodists and Independents have places of worship here. Here is a free school, in which there is a master with a salary of £28 per annum for classical literature, and another with a salary of £10 for writing; these are appointed by the trustees, consisting of the corporation and a few gentlemen of the vicinity. The school was founded by Alexander Hosea, a native of this place, who in 1683 bequeathed property for its support, which now produces about £100 per annum. The boys educated on the foundation are not numerous in the classical school, seldom exceeding 3 or 4, but about 25 boys are instructed in writing. Here are several small endowments for the benefit of the poor. Distance from London, 111 m. W.; from Gloucester, $\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 764; in 1831, 972. A. P., £4,347.

WIDCOMBE, a joint-parish with Lyncomb, in the hundred of Bath-Forum, co. of Somerset. Living, a perpetual curacy subordinate to the rectory of St Peter and St Paul, Bath, in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells, not in charge; patronage with the rectory of St Peter and St Paul, Bath. Church ded. to St Thomas à Becket. The incorporated society for the enlarging of churches and chapels having lately granted £500 for the purpose of assisting in the enlargement of the church, 680 sittings have been added, of which number 370 are free. Here is held an annual fair on the 14th of May. Here was formerly a small chapel ded. to St Mary Magdalene, built in the 15th century by John Cantlew, prior of Bath; near this was an hospital for lunatics, which was rebuilt about 70 years ago. Distance from Bath, $\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.E. by E. Pop., with Lyncomb, in 1801, 2790; in 1831, 8704. A. P., £18,546.

WIDDECOMBE-IN-THE-MOOR, a parish in the hundred of Haytor, although detached from it and being locally within that of Lifton, co. of Devon. The river forms its boundary for a short distance, and here receives three tributary streams which intersect the parish. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter, rated at £25 13s. 9d., and in patronage of the bishop of Exeter. The church suffered severely from lightning on October 21st, 1638, part of the roof having then fallen. This happened during the performance of divine service. Here are four schools, each with small endowments, and which are partly supported by subscription. In this parish, which contains some valleys of considerable length, is sometimes found tin. Distance from Ashburton, 6 m. N.W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 1043; in 1831, 959. A. P., £5,243.

WIDDINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Uttlesford, co. of Essex. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London, rated at £25, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the commissary of Essex and Herts, concurrently with the consistorial court of the bishop of London, and, in 1829, in patronage of Lady Vincent. WIDFORD, a parish in the hundred of Chelmsford, co. of Essex. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London, rated at £8, and, in 1829, in patronage of W. Harding, Esq. The church—ded. to St Mary—is in a mixed style of English architecture; it is on the west side of the road leading from London to Chelmsford. Distance from Chelmsford, 1 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 113; in 1831, 157. A. P., £1,252.

WIDFORD, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Slaughter, co. of Gloucester. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £3 14s. 2d., and, in 1829, in patronage of T. H. H. Gwynne, Esq. Church ded. to St Oswald. Distance from Burford, 1½ m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 40; in 1831, 51. A. P., £642.

WIDFORD, a parish in the hundred of Braughin, co. of Hertford. It is intersected by the river Ash. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, rated at £12 13s. 4d., and, in 1829, in patronage of S. Partridge, Esq. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. It is situated on an eminence, and has a square embattled tower surmounted by a spire. An annual sum of £5, arising from the gift of an unknown benefactor, is appropriated towards the education of three poor boys. Distance from Ware, 4 m. E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 361; in 1831, 506. A. P., £1,434.

WIDHILL, a tything in the parish of St Sampson Cricklade, hundred of Highworth, Cricklade, and Staple, co. of Wilts. Distance from Cricklade, 3 m. S.E. Pop., &c., included in the parish returns.

WIDIALL, or WITHERALL, a parish in the hundred of Edwinstree, co. of Hertford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, rated at £16, and, in 1829, in patronage of John Heaton, Esq. Church ded. to St Giles. It is an ancient building, containing a chapel, with some fine painted glass; this chapel is of the reign of Henry VIII.; it contains several monuments of brass. Distance from Buntingford, 2 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 181; in 1831, 243. A. P., £1,761.

WIDKIRK, formerly WODECHURCH, or KIRKWODE, a hamlet in the parish of West Ardesley, lower division of the wapentake of Agbrigg, W. R., co. of York. "William, earl of Warren, Ralph L'Isle, and William his son, having given the church of St Mary here to the priory of Nostell, in the reign of Henry I., some Black canons from thence were placed here. The yearly revenues of this cell were worth, at the suppression, £47 Os. 4d. as Speed; £17 Os. 4d. as Dugdale: and, as parcel of Nostell, were granted, 7th Edward VI., to George Talbot and Richard Savill."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Wakefield, 5½ m. N.W.

WIDLEY, a parish in the hundred and division of Portadown, co. of Southampton. Living, a rectory, to which is annexed the vicarage of Wymering, in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £14 11s. 10½d., and alternately in the patronage of R. Thistlethwaite, Esq., and of the warden and fellows of Winchester college. The church, which has recently been enlarged, is ded. to St Mary Magdalene. Of the new sittings 99 are free, towards defraying the expense of which, £100 was granted by the incorporated society for the enlargement of churches and chapels. Here is a school, in which some poor children receive gratuitous instruction on an endowment of £2 per annum, given in 1771 by the Rev. John Taylor. Distance from Fareham, 5½ m. E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 277; in 1831, 512. A. P., £2,347.

WIDMER, a hamlet in the parish of Great Marlow, hundred of Desborough, co. of Buckingham. Here is a very ancient manor-house. The chapel, which has been converted into a brewhouse, is still entire. Several houses in the borough of Marlow are in the jurisdiction of this manor.

WIDMER-POOLE, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of Rushcliffe, co. of Nottingham. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, rated at £14 16s. 0½d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of F. Robinson, Esq. The western side of the parish is bounded by the old Fosseway. Distance from Nottingham, 9 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 206; in 1831, 180. A. P., £2,123.

WIDNESS, a joint township with Appleton, in the parish of Prescot, hundred of West Derby, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Pop., in 1801, 1063; in 1831, 1986. A. P., £4,942.

WIDNEY, a hamlet in the parish of Donyatt, co. of Somerset.

WIDRINGTON, a parochial chapelry in the eastern division of the ward of Morpeth, co. of Northumberland. Living, a perpetual curacy subordinate to the vicarage of Woodhorn, in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham, not in charge, returned at £56, and, in 1829, in patronage of R. B. W. Bulkeley, Esq. The church is an ancient structure, and seems to have been once more extensive than it now is. Here is a Presbyterian church, erected in 1765. Widrington was formerly included in the parish of Woodhorn, but in 1768 was admitted into the enjoyment of separate and distinct parochial privileges. The lady of the manor pays an annual salary of £25 to a master, in consideration of which, the poor children of the place receive education. The school is kept in a room for that purpose, with a house and garden for the master attached. Near the village is a colliery. The ancient family of Widrington formerly made this their place of residence, the head of which family, after having distinguished himself for his attachment to the royal cause in the time of the civil wars, and being raised to the peerage by Charles I., retired to the continent, and, having returned to the assistance of Charles II., was slain at the battle of Wign. His son and successor William, second Lord Widrington, having joined the insurgents in 1715, was attainted, and his estates confiscated to the value of £100,000. The castle belonging to these ancient barons fell into ruins about 50 years ago, and the present building is in very bad repair, and totally uninhabited. It formerly was surrounded by a park of 600 acres. Adjacent to Morpeth. Pop., in 1801, 446; in 1831, 395. A. P., £5,181.

WIDWORTHY, a parish in the hundred of Colyton, co. of Devon. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter, rated at £11 16s. 0d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of J. T. B. Marwood, Esq. The church is ded. to St Cuthbert, and contains an ancient effigy of a knight in armour, besides a monument to the memory of James Marwood, Esq., a great benefactor to the parish. A few poor children receive free education from funds arising from £100, bequeathed in 1743 by Benedictus Marwood, Esq., and £50 by the Rev. Joseph Somaster, in 1770. A fair is held at Wilmington within the parish, on the morrow of the festival of St Matthew. Here are some military remains, particularly part of an old earth-work, and a few vestiges of an ancient entrenchment in the north-eastern part of the parish. Distance from Honiton, 3½ m. E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 245; in 1831, 278. A. P., £2643.

WIELD, a parish in the hundred of Fawley, Fawley division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, not in charge, endowed with £400, and in patronage of the earl of Portsmouth. Church ded. to St James. It is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney court, held every Thursday at Winchester, before which debts to any amount can be recovered. Distance from Alton, 6 m. W. Pop., in 1801, 208; in 1831, 248. A. P., £1,601.

WIGAN, a parish, containing the market-town and borough of the same name—which possesses separate and independent jurisdiction—the chapelrys of Chapel-End Billinge, Hindley, and Upholland, and the townships of Abram, Higher-End Billinge, Dalton, Haigh, Ince, Orrell, Pemberton, Winstanley, and Aspull; all of which are in the hundred of West Derby, except the last named township, which is in the hundred of Salford, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Camden supposes this place to have been originally called Wibiggin. Before and during the Saxon heptarchy, many sanguinary battles took place here under King Arthur and other princes; in corroboration of this statement it may be mentioned, that near the town large quantities of human bones and horses' shoes, &c., have been discovered. During the parliamentary wars it was again made the scene of a struggle between the royalist forces, commanded by the earl of Derby, on the one hand, and Sir John Smeaton, in the parliamentary interest, on the other; the earl of Derby was entirely defeated, and the conqueror, on account of the devotion of the inhabitants of Wigan to the king, caused the fortifications to be entirely demolished. With the exception of some slight excitation caused by the Protector pursuing the Scottish army under the duke of Hamilton, through Wigan, it remained perfectly quiet, until 1651, when the earl of Derby, having been summoned from his hereditary kingdom of Man by Charles II., was again defeated by Colonel Lilburne, commanding a greatly superior force. A pillar is erected at the northern end of the town to the memory of Sir Thomas Tildesley, who was killed in the action. In the course of the rebellion of 1745, Prince Charles Edward Stuart marched through this town on his way from Preston to Manchester. The town is bounded on the west by the river Douglas, which rises near this. It is a paved town, and has long been so, having obtained a patent for the purpose of having it done, being dated in the 7th of Edward III.; it is described by Leland in his Itinerary, as "a paved town as big as Warrington, but better builded." Many of the houses are old and ill-built, but two new streets have been recently formed, in which the houses are better. It is supplied with gas and water by joint stock companies, the act of parliament for the gas company having been obtained in 1823, and that for the water company in 1761. An act of parliament was obtained in 1720, under the authority of which the Douglas was made navigable to its junction with the Ribbles. Ample canal communication is supplied by means of the Liverpool and Leeds canal, along which goods are sent not only to these two places, but also by means of their branches to most parts of England. The principal manufactures are those of calicoes, fustians, and other cotton goods, linens, checks, &c., besides the spinning of cotton yarn to a great extent. There are also manufactories of edge-tools, brassen articles, spades, and other agricultural implements. In these many steam engines are employed, the total power of which is about equal to 600 horses. Coal is found to a considerable extent in the vicinity, and is sent along the canal to Manchester and other places. Here are two weekly markets; that held on Friday is the principal, the other being held on Monday. Fairs are held on Holy Thursday, June 27th, and October 28th. On these days the clothiers are allowed the use of the commercial hall, which is a building erected in the market-place in 1816. The town has had various charters of incorporation granted by different monarchs, the most ancient being one of Hen. III.; but that under which the town is now governed, was granted by Charles II. By the regulations contained in it, the government of the borough is vested in a mayor, who is a justice of the peace during his mayoralty, and for one year after, and two bailiffs, with the necessary subordinate officers. These are all elected annually. The charter of incorporation allows the corporation to hold a court, before which all civil actions can be tried, besides a quarterly court of session for the trial of all felonies, with the exception of those which are punishable by death. The petty sessions for the Warrington division of the hundred are held here. The town-hall was erected in 1720, by the earl of Barrymore and Sir Roger Bradaigh, who represented the borough in parliament at that time. Here is a gaol, which is, however, only used for temporary confinement, all prisoners being removed to the county-gaol. This borough sent members to the parliament of the 23d of Edward I., and again in the 36th of the same reign. After this, no members were returned till the 1st of Edward VI. Before the passing of the reform act, the number of voters was about 230, the right of election was vested in the free burgesses, the mayor and bailiffs being the officers who returned the writs. The corporation enjoyed the right of admitting additional burgesses without any qualification being required, by which means the preponderating influence was usually in their possession. Under the provision of the reform act, Wigan continues to return two members, the number of voters being now about 700. The mayor is returning officer.

Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester, rated at £80 13s. 4d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Bradford and others. The church is ded. to All Saints, and is a handsome building of considerable antiquity. In addition to this living there is another which is a chapel-of-ease to All Saints, being a perpetual curacy not in charge, returned at £36, and alternately in the patronage of the rector of All Saints, and the possessors of pews in the church. The church is dedicated to St George, and was erected in 1781. The curacies of Billinge, Hindley, and Upholland, are in the patronage of the rector of All Saints. The Presbyterians and Wesleyan Methodists have each one, and the Independents, Baptists, and Roman Catholics, each two places of worship here. Here is a free grammar school, the date of the original foundation of which is not known, but it is supposed to be about the beginning of the reign of James I. In 1619, Mr James Leigh left a donation producing £6 12s. 4d. per annum, which is the earliest benefaction of which there is any account. Since then the institution has received numerous additional donations and bequests, and, in 1812, an act of parliament was procured, by which 15 members of the corporation were appointed trustees. These have the appointment of the master and usher; the former receives a salary of £130 per annum, and is allowed to receive boarders. The number of scholars is limited to 80. Here was formerly a blue coat school, which was founded in 1773, but this was united to another school, and both are now held together in a school house, towards the erection of which the national school society of London contributed £350. Here is a school of industry erected in 1823. In the town are numerous Sunday schools connected with the various Dissenting places of worship, at which about 2500 children receive instruction. The dispensary has existed in active operation for nearly forty years, and had a building erected for its reception in 1801. Besides these, there are several small benefactions for the use of the poor. A clothing society was formed in 1817; a savings bank established in 1821; a Bible society and a mechanics' institution, with a library, in 1826. In the vicinity is a mineral spring, which formerly possessed some celebrity for its medicinal qualities, and some houses were built for the accommodation of visitors. It is, however, deserted, the quality of the water having been thought to have deteriorated; in consequence, it is generally supposed, of its having become mixed, to a certain extent, with the produce of the coal-mines. Distance from London, 200 m. N.W. by N.; from Manchester, 18 m. W.N.W. Pop. of the whole parish, in 1831, 44,486: of the borough, in 1801, 10,989; in 1831, 20,774. A. P., £33,320. The pop., &c., of the other divisions of the parish will be found under their several heads.

WIGBOROUGH, a hamlet in the parish of South Petherton, co. of Somerset.

WIGBOROUGH (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of Winstree, co. of Essex. The parish is bounded by a creek of the Blackwater river called Verley, on the north. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London, rated at £18 17s. 6d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Henry Bowes, Esq. The church is ded. to St Stephen, and is situated on the summit of a lofty eminence. This place is not of so much importance as it formerly was, which is proved from the existence of several green lanes which, in reference to what they formerly were, still retain the names of streets. A number of ancient coins were discovered here about forty years ago. Salt works were formerly in operation in the vicinity, but they are now entirely given up. From this circumstance, the name of the parish has sometimes the word Saleot prefixed. Distance from Colchester, 7 m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 285; in 1831, 434. A. P., £3,340.

WIGBOROUGH (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of Winstree, co. of Essex, bounded on the east by the Mersea channel, and on the south by the Verley, both of which creeks are branches of the Blackwater. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £6, and in patronage of the dean and chapter of Norwich. Distance from Lynn-Regis, 4 m. S.W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 448; in 1831, 562. A. P., £2,433.

WIGGENHALL-ST-MARY, a parish in the Marshland division of the hundred of Freebridge, co. of Norfolk. The river Ouse is on the east of the parish. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £12 10s., returned at £60, and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church is a remarkably handsome building, with an oaken screen at the eastern extremity, richly carved, and separating a building formerly used as a chapel from the rest of the edifice. The clerestory windows possess some beautiful stained glass. Here is a monument on which are effigies of a knight, a lady, and two children; on the tomb are sculptured the arms of Kerville and Plowden. Distance from Lynn-Regis, 5 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 221; in 1831, 206. A. P., £4,265.

WIGGENHALL (ST MARY MAGDALENE), a parish in the Marshland division of the hundred of Freebridge, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £5 15s. 10d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Mrs Garforth. The church is ded. to St Mary Magdalene, and is an ancient structure with a square tower, and a chapel at the terminations of the north and south aisles. The arms of the families of Kerville, Scales, Berney, and other families of distinction, are sculptured in various parts of the building. "In an old hermitage ded. to St John the Evangelist, on the south part of the parish of Wigenhale St Mary Magdalene, was a nunnery of St Austin, founded with the consent of William de Lisewis, chief lord of the soil, by Roger Prior, and the convent of Reynham, about A. D. 1181. It was by Godfrey, son of William de Lisewis, given and made subordinate to Castle-acre; there were in it a priory and six or seven nuns, but their revenues were returned, 26th Henry VIII. at no more than £24 19s. 6d. as Dugdale, and £31 16s. 7d. as Speed. This house was granted, 1^o Mary, to Sir John Gage."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Lynn-Regis, 5½ m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 368; in 1831, 676. A. P., £5,896.

WIGGENHALL (ST PETER), a parish in the Marshland division of the hundred of Freebridge, co. of Norfolk. The parish lies on the river Ouse. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £6, returned at £130, and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church is near the river and contains a font on which are sculptured two cross keys, being an emblem of the patron saint. Distance from Lynn-Regis, 5 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 53; in 1831, 114. A. P., £1,409.

WIGGENHOLT, a parish in the hundred of West Easwirth, rape of Arundel co. of Sussex. It is situated on the east bank of the river Arun. Living, a rectory with that of Greatham, in the archd. and dio. of Chichester, rated at £7 4s. 4½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. R. Turner. The church is a small edifice and contains a font cut in the Norman style. Many Roman coins have been found here, as also pottery of a reddish colour, the production of the same people. Distance from Arundel, 7½ m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 42; in 1831, 37. A. P., £733.

WIGGESLEY, a hamlet in the parish of Thorney, northern division of the wapentake of Newark, co. of Nottingham. Distance from Tuxford, 8 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 62; in 1831, 86. A. P. returned with the parish of Thorney.

WIGGEY, a hamlet in the tything of Linfield, parish of Reigate, co. of Surrey. Distance from Reigate, 2½ m. E, by N.

WIGGINTHORPE, a joint township with Terrington, in the parish of Terrington, co. of York. Distance from New Malton, 9 m. W. Pop., &c., returned with Terrington.

WIGGINTON, a parish in the hundred of Dacorum, co. of Hertford. Living, a perpetual curacy with that of Tring, in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, not in charge, and returned at £16 10s. Church ded. to St Bartholomew. Distance from Tring, 1½ m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 330; in 1831, 536. A. P., £1,110.

WIGGONBY, a township in the parish of Aikton, ward and co. of Cumberland. Here is a school endowed with land, the annual rental of which at present amounts to £175, bequeathed in 1792 by Margaret Hodgson. In the neighbourhood are remains of an ancient encampment, the site of which is now planted with fir. Distance from Wigton, 5 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 127; in 1831, 175.

WIGHILL, a parish in the upper division of the ainsey of the city of York, co. of York. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York, rated at £5 3s. 6½d., returned at £130, and, in 1829, in patronage of Arthur Maister, Esq. The church is ded. to All Saints, and is situated on the summit of a hill, from which is one of the most extensive and beautiful prospects in the ainsey. It consists of a nave and north aisle, a chancel and small chapel on the north side, and a low tower at the west end. The tower has several windows, disposed in three stories; those in the upper one are pointed and filled with weather-boarding. The whole is finished with battlements, and crocketed pinnacles at the angles. The south side of the nave has three square headed windows and a porch, in the roof of which are two shields of arms, one charged with a lion rampant, the other with three combs. The entrance door is curious, but in a sad state of dilapidation. It consists of four mouldings; the first is a plain circular one resting on attached columns, with square capitals; the second is more curious, having various subjects,—a man killing a pig, another carrying it, box and goose, &c.; these rest on cylindrical pillars with carved capitals; the third is composed of heads of birds resting on larger cylinders, the capitals of which display scriptural or historical subjects; the last is a bold chevron moulding. The windows in the chancel are similar to those in the nave. The east window is pointed of three lights, with perpendicular tracery in the sweep of the arch. The interior of the church is plain, the aisle being separated from the body by four circular arches, resting on columns formed by a union of four massy cylinders, with octagonal capitals. The tower is open to the nave by a pointed arch, and the roof throughout is waggon-head ceiling. In the north window of the chancel is a shield of arms, ar.; three lozenges, gw.; and in the east window of the chapel is a shield of arms, or.; a maunch, gw. In the chapel is a handsome table monument of alabaster, in tolerably perfect preservation. On the front are four Ionic columns of dark marble, and in the west intercolumniation are three female figures kneeling, and in the easternmost three boys in a similar attitude, all dressed in the costume of the period. In the centre is a long Latin inscription to Robert Stapylton, Esq., lord of Wighill, who died in London, March 11th, 1634, aged 33. It was erected by Catherine, daughter of Viscount Fairfax, to his memory. On the table is his full length effigy in plate armour; on his left side is a sword; his hands are joined in the attitude of prayer, and beneath is a mat rolled up at the head for a pillow; the features of this figure bear a considerable resemblance to those of Charles I. In the same chapel on the floor are numerous slabs to the memory of the Stapleton family during the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. This family was, for a long period of time, in the possession of this estate. Sir Robert Stapleton, who was sheriff of this county in the twenty-third year of the reign of Elizabeth, met the judges with seven score men in suitable liveries. He was descended of Sir Miles Stapleton, one of the original knights of the order of the garter, and sheriff for five years, from the 29th year of the reign of Edward III. Sir John Harrington, in his book addressed to Prince Henry, gives him the character of being a man "with scarce an equal, and no superior in England except Sir Philip Sidney." The manor and extensive estate of this family were sold a few years ago to Richard Fountayne Wilson, Esq., M. P. The village is small, but neat; it contains a place of worship, erected by the Wesleyan Methodists in 1828. Distance from Tadcaster, 3 m. N. by W. Pop., in 1801, 216; in 1831, 276. A. P., £3,410.

WIGHT (ISLE OF), co. of Southampton. See SOUTHAMPTON.

WIGHTON, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of Greenhoe, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £11 11s. 1d., returned at £190, and in patronage of the dean and chapter of Norwich. Church ded. to All Saints. Distance from Little Walsingham, 2½ m. N. by E. Pop., in 1801, 446; in 1831, 542. A. P., £2,299.

WIGHTWICK, a hamlet in the parish of Tottenhall, co. of Stafford. Distance from Wolverhampton, 3 m. W.

WIGLAND, a township in the parish of Malpas, higher division of the hundred of Broxton, co.-palatine of Chester. Here are salt works at which salt is manufactured from brine springs in the vicinity. These works suffered considerable damage during the civil wars. Distance from Malpas, 2 m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 160; in 1831, 265. A. P., £740.

WIGLEY, a hamlet in the parish of Eling, co. of Southampton. Distance from Romsey, 2 m. S.W.

WIGMORE, a hundred in the co. of Hereford; it includes the north-western division of the county, containing a part of the town of Presteign with 18 parishes, and, in 1831, 5,723 inhabitants.

WIGMORE, a parish in the hundred of the same name, co. of Hereford. It contains the township of Limebrook. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford, rated at £8, returned at £80, and in patronage of the bishop of Hereford. Church ded. to St James. In the neighbourhood, to the west of the village, stand the remains of the ancient castle of Wigmore, consisting of the keep entirely dilapidated, but which formerly occupied the summit of an artificial mound; and the outer works, which are in a tolerable state of preservation. This castle existed in the time of the Saxons, and although the founder is unknown, it is recorded that Edward the Elder caused it to be repaired. At the time of the Norman conquest it was in the possession of Edric, earl of Shrewsbury, and from him passed into the hands of Ranulph de Mortimer, a Norman baron, who came over with the duke of Normandy. Traces of a Danish camp are found in the neighbourhood. "A small college of three prebendaries, founded in the parochial church here, A. D. 1100, by Ralph de Mortimer, which dropped upon the founding of the abbey. This owed its foundation originally to the directions which the said Ralph left upon his deathbed, with his son and heir, Sir Hugh de Mortimer; pursuant thereto Sir Oliver de Merlimound, their steward, began a religious house at Scobbedon or Shobdene, in the reign of Henry I., and having made some small endowments, procured a prior and two canons from St Victor at Paris, to come hither. The want of water and other inconveniences made them remove to Eye near Aylmyster, upon the river Lugg. Hence they went to Wigmore, then to Beodune, and back again to Shobdon, but were finally settled, A. D. 1179, in a noble monastery—about a mile beyond Wigmore town and castle, in the marsh ground towards Shrewsbury—built, and so amply endowed as to be made an abbey, at the sole expense of the said Hugh Mortimer. It was of the order of St Austin, commended to the patronage of St James, and rated, in the 26th of Henry VIII., at £267 2s. 10d. ob. per ann. Dugdale, £302 12s. 3d. ob. Speed. The site was granted, 2d Edward VI., to Sir Thomas Palmer; 3d and 4th Philip and Mary, to Philip Cockeram.—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Leominster, 10 m. N.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 285; in 1831, 476. A. P., £2,184.

WIGSTHORPE, a hamlet in the parish of Lillford, co. of Northampton. There was formerly a chapel in this hamlet. Distance from Oundle, 4½ m. S. by E. Pop., &c., returned with Lillford.

WIGSTON (MAGNA), a parish in the hundred of Guthlaxton, co. of Leicester. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £9 8s. 9d., and alternately in patronage of the master and wardens of the Haberdashers' company, and the governors of Christ's hospital, London. Church ded. to All Saints. Here was formerly another church, from which circumstance the parish was sometimes called Wigston-two-Steeles; the building is, however, now very much dilapidated, and is used as a school-room, in which several poor children of the parish receive free instruction at the expense of the parishioners. The Independents have a place of worship here. The village is situated on the road from Leicester and Welford. Here are almshouses for the accommodation of six poor widows and the same number of widowers, endowed by Miss Clarke; also a lunatic asylum. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of stockings. It enjoys excellent inland navigation by means of the Leicester canal, which intersects the parish. During the civil wars, a temporary prison was erected at a place still called Gaol-close; the royalist army lay near this for some days. Distance from Leicester, 3½ m. S. S. E. Pop., in 1801, 1658; in 1831, 2174. A. P., £6,123.

WIGSTON (PARVA), a chapelry in the parish of Claybrooke, hundred of Guthlaxton, co. of Leicester. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, not in charge; patronage with the vicarage of Claybrooke. Chapel ded. to St Mary. "Little Wigston is a copyhold of the manor of Rowington in Warwickshire. It pays an annual quit-rent at £7 3s. 4d., and each tenant pays a common fine of 1s. a year. There are a few cottages belonging to this lordship in Smockington-Hollow, on the right hand side of the road to Hinckley."—Macaulay's Hist. of Claybrooke. Distance from Lutterworth, 6½ m. N.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 59; in 1831, 62. A. P., £678.

WIGTOFT, a parish in the wapentake of Kilton, parts of Holland, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged vicarage with that of Quedring, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £11 5s., and in patronage of the bishop of Lincoln. Church ded. to St Peter and St Paul. Here is a charity called Cowley's and Bliabury's charity, the funds of which are appropriated towards the support of a free school. Distance from Swineshead, 3 m. S. E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 536; in 1831, 607. A. P., £4,699.

WIGTON, a parish in the ward and co. of Cumberland. It contains the market-town of the same name, the townships of Oulton, High and Low Waverton, and Woodside-Quarter. Of the early history of this place there are few traces. Before the conquest the barony was granted to Waldeof, lord of Allderale, by William de Meschines, and by him was given to Odoard, who, on the Norman invasion, accommodated himself to the taste of his new rulers, by assuming the name of De Wigton. In an invasion of the Scottish borderers in 1322, the town was burnt, at the same time that the abbey of Holme-Cultram was plundered. Part of the duke of Hamilton's army was quartered here during the civil war in 1648. The town contains several well-built houses, and consists principally of two streets, the smaller one being placed transversely at the extremity of the other. It is paved with pebbles, and is tolerably well supplied with water, principally from wells, the private property of individuals, besides one common to all. Here are two excellent libraries,—one supported by subscription, the other a circulating library. Races were formerly held here, but they have been entirely given up of late years. Some cotton goods are manufactured here, principally gingham, muslins, and other fine fabrics. Calico-printing and dyeing are also carried on to some extent. Coal in considerable quantities, and copper-ore to a small extent, are found within a few miles of the town. Tuesday and Friday are market-days, the former being for corn, which is sold in large quantities. The fairs are—one very large one for horses on the 20th of February; for horned cattle on the 5th of April; and one for cattle, butcher's meat, apples, and honey, on the 21st of December; this last is sometimes called the wallet fair. Besides these there are statute fairs at Whitsuntide and Martinmas. A petty-session is held monthly by the magistrates of the county; and the lord of the manor holds an annual court-leet and baron in September, at which constables are appointed.—Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle, rated at £17 19s. 0½d., and in patronage of the bishop of Carlisle, Church ded. to St Mary. The date of the erection of this ancient building is said to have been about the time of the conquest, being supposed to have been built by Odoard, already mentioned, with materials brought from the

Roman station, now called Old Carlisle. It subsequently came into the possession of the abbey of Holme-Cultram. Having become unfit for further use, it was taken down in 1788, and the present edifice—a building of elegant exterior—built in its place. Under the same roof is a library, given by Dr Bray for the use of the clergy. The society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics, have places of worship here. Here is a free grammar school at Market-hill, situated not far from the entrance into the town. This school was erected by some of the inhabitants in 1730; each of the subscribers paid their subscriptions on a graduated scale, depending on the value of their houses, in consideration of which, the present holders of the same houses are still allowed to send their children free to the school; all others attending the school pay one guinea per quarter to the master. The present income amounts to above £70 per annum, arising partly from £1000 three per cent. stock, bequeathed in 1787 by John Allison, for the purpose of affording education to four boys belonging to the parish, but not otherwise entitled to instruction; and partly from £385 bequeathed by Thomas Tomlinson, Esq., in 1798. The master is provided with a free house, and is elected, as well as the usher, by the votes of those inhabitants who live in the houses entitled, from the original plan, to the freedom of the school. At present about 35 receive instruction at this school, 15 of whom study the classics under the superintendence of the master, and the rest are variously engaged in writing, mathematics, arithmetic, &c. Here was educated the Rev. John Brown, D.D., author of Barbarossa, a tragedy. Near the town at Brookfield, is a school supported by members of the Society of Friends, founded in 1825; about 60 boys receive education here. About 450 children attend the Sunday school, which is held in a building erected in 1820. Besides these there are several Sunday schools supported by the various dissenting congregations. Here is an hospital for the benefit of six widows of beneficed clergymen or curates of at least two years' standing, confined to clergymen within the county of Cumberland, that part of the dio. of Carlisle which is in the co. of Westmoreland, or of Rothbury in the county of Northumberland; the widows require to be above 46 years of age. The inmates receive an annual allowance of £9, and the eldest, who acts as governess, receives £9 10s.; they have each 3 apartments in the hospital. The whole is superintended by the bishop of Carlisle who acts as visitor, and by the chancellor of the diocese, the rectors of Aikton and Caldbeck, and the vicars of Wigton and Bromfield, who officiate as governors. This hospital was founded by the Rev. John Tomlinson, in 1725, and was endowed by him with an annual income of £45 12s.; this has been since considerably increased by subsequent benefactions. A sum of £100 was left by Thomas Tomlinson, Esq., for the establishment of a library. Old Carlisle, a Roman station, is situated about a mile south of the town, on an eminence; here have been discovered many Roman antiquities, from some of which it is supposed that the Ala Augusta was stationed here in the reign of the Emperor Gordian. Ewan Clarke, a poet who has become celebrated for his poems principally connected with his native county; Joseph Rooke, a person who attained to considerable perfection in different branches of science, although almost entirely without education; R. Smirke, R.A. the painter; and Mr George Barnes, a professor of mathematics, were born here. Here was "an hospital or free chapel dedicated to St Leonard, valued at 40s. per annum. It was granted 3d Henry VI., to Thomas Dalston, Esq., and William Denton, Gent."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from London, 303 m. N.N.W.; from Carlisle, 11 m. S.W. by W. Pop. of the whole parish, in 1831, 6501: of the town in 1801, 2450; in 1831, 4885. A. P., £8,745.

WIGTON, a township in the parish of Harewood, upper division of the wapentake of Skyrack, W. R., co. of York. Distance from Leeds, 5½ m. N. by E. Pop., in 1801, 134; in 1831, 168. A. P., £1,114.

WIKE, a township in the parish of Birstall, wapentake of Morley, W. R., co. of York. At Birkenshaw, in this parish, a new church is being built by the commissioners. It will have a tower and spire, the contract amounts to £2,929 5s. 6d.; it will contain upwards of 700 people. The Independents have a place of worship here. Distance from Bradford, 3½ m. S. by W. Pop., in 1801, 986; in 1831, 1918. A. P., £1,675.

WIKE, a township in the parish of Harewood, upper division of the wapentake of Skyrack, W. R., co. of York. Distance from Leeds, 6½ m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 39; in 1831, 142. A. P., £1,016.

WILBARSTON, a parish in the hundred of Cerby, co. of Northampton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £7 17s. 1d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Sondes. Church ded. to All Saints. The Independents have a place of worship here. Distance from Market-Harborough, 6 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 755; in 1831, 681. A. P., £3,029.

WILBERFOSS, a parish in the Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, E. R., co. of York. It contains the townships of Newton-upon-Derwent and Wilberfores. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of the E. R. and dio. of York, rated at £12, returned at £42, and, in 1829, in patronage of W. Wilberforce, Esq. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. It consists of a nave and south aisle chancel, and neat embattled tower at the west end. The south side of the nave has a brick porch, and some square headed windows; the north side of the entire building, with the exception of the tower, is of brick and modern. The interior is neatly fitted up; the nave is divided from the aisles by three pointed arches, resting on octagonal columns. At the west end is a gallery, and beneath it a small wooden font. On the floor of the nave are the engraved effigies of a knight in armour, and his lady. By the inscription, which is partly defaced, it appears to be to Sir Robert Haton, Knt., who died in 1447. In the village are two places of worship, one belonging to the Wesleyan and the other to the Primitive Methodists. Here was the ancient seat of the family of Wilberfores, which is said to have lived here ever since the Norman Conquest. The late Wm. Wilberforce, Esq., sometime member of parliament for the county, was a member of this family. This distinguished man was born at Hull in 1759; was returned for that borough when only just of age, and in 1784, for the county of York, which he represented in many successive parliaments. He distinguished himself during the course of his long and useful life, by his exertions in the cause of the negro, and, after being repulsed several times, succeeded in procuring the abolition of the slave-trade. He died 29th July, 1833, having lived to see the principles for which he fought, completely triumphant; the Slavery Abolition Bill being at that time in rapid progress through the House of Commons, and having become law in about a month after his decease. His body was interred in Westminster-abbey. The present lord of the manor of Wilberfores is the earl of Egremont. "Before the year 1153, a Benedictine nunnery was founded here, as it is said, by Alan fil Hellae de Catton, to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary. About the time of the dissolution it had a prioress and 12 nuns, whose yearly revenues were valued at £21 16s. 10d. as Dugdale, and £28 8s. 8d. as Speed. The site was granted to George Gale, 7^o Edward VI."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Pocklington, 5½ m. W.N.W. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 282; in 1831, 352. A. P., £1,424. WILBERTON, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of Witchford, Isle of Ely, co. of Cambridge. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Ely, not in charge, returned at £50, and in patronage of the archdeacon of Ely. The church is a handsome structure, ded. to St Peter. The house now used as a parsonage house was formerly occupied by the archdeacons of Ely as their principal residence. Here Henry VII. and his son, afterwards Henry VIII., were entertained when they visited the shrine of St Etheldreda at Ely. The Baptists have a place of worship here. Distance from Ely, 6½ m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 301; in 1831, 471. A. P., £3,310.

WILBRAHAM, or WILBURGHAM (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of Staines, co. of Cambridge. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Ely, rated at £11 18s. 4d., returned at £150, and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. James Hicks. The church is ded. to St Nicholas, and is an ancient cruciform building; it has a tower at the west end and had formerly a tower in the centre. "The church here, like that of Wendy in this county, was originally given to the monks at Ely, residing at Danny cell, but they, upon some considerations, made it over to the Knights Templars, who having here two messuages, 120 acres of land, and other lands and rents on the gift of William Loveday, Peter de Malo Alneto, and others, fixed a habitation here for some of their order. But this, with their other estates, came into the possession of the knights of St John of Jerusalem."—Tanner's Not. Mon. The building used by the knights templars is still in existence, and is commonly called the Temple. Distance from Cambridge, 7 m. E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 354; in 1831, 510. A. P., £2,880.

Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £7 10s., returned at £120, and in patronage of the trustees of the late Dr Busby, who nominate a Westminster student of Christ-church, Oxford. The living was endowed with the great tithes by Dr Busby, sometime headmaster of Westminster school, who also built the church ded. to St Mary Magdalene, in 1680. Dr Busby also left funds for the purpose of having 22 lectures annually on the Catechism. Distance from Newport-Pagnell, 2 m. S. Pop., in 1801, 97; in 1831, 98. A. P., £823.

WILLENHALL, a chapelry in the parish of Wolverhampton, southern division of the hundred of Ollow, co. of Stafford. Living, a curacy with that of Wolverhampton, in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, in the jurisdiction of the court of the royal peculiar of Wolverhampton, rated at £10, and, in 1829, in patronage of the lord of the manor. The church was built in 1748, and is ded. to St Giles. The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. Coal and ironstone are raised here to a considerable extent, which are sent along the Wyrley and Easington canal, which passes through this place. This place is mentioned in the Norman survey of the kingdom under the name of Winehala, which is derived from a Saxon word signifying victory, referring, probably, to a great battle fought here in 911. The village was in a flourishing condition in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, at which time iron was manufactured here. This manufacture has now arrived to a remarkable degree of perfection. Annual courts leet and baron are held, also a court of requests on three Mondays in every alternate month, before which debts not exceeding £5 can be recovered. In the vicinity the maternal ancestors of the present marquess of Stafford formerly resided, the remains of the old hall are still in existence. Distance from Wolverhampton, 3 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 3143; in 1831, 5834. A. P., £5,508.

WILLENHALL, or WINNALL, a hamlet in the parish of the Holy Trinity, city of Coventry, Kirkby division of the hundred of Knightlow, co. of Warwick. Distance from Coventry, 2½ m. S.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 126; in 1831, 120. A. P., £1,513.

WILLERBY, a parish in the wapentake of Dickering, E. R., co. of York. It contains the townships of Binnington, Staxton, and Willerby. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of the E. R. and dio. of York, rated at £9 0s. 7½d., returned at £120, and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Peter. Distance from Scarborough, 6 m. S. by W. Total pop. in 1831, 366. A. P., £3,098. Pop. of the township of Willerby, in 1801, 29; in 1831, 38. The other returns are given under the several townships.

WILLERBY, a township partly in the parish of Kirk-Ella, county of the town of Kingston-upon-Hull, and partly in the parish of Cottingham, Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, E. R., co. of York. Distance from Kingston-upon-Hull, 5½ m. W.N.W. Pop. of that part of the township within the town of Kingston-upon-Hull, in 1801, 138; in 1831, 189. A. P., £1,829. The other part is included in the parish of Cottingham in the parliamentary returns.

WILLERSEY, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of Kiftgate, co. of Gloucester. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £13 2s. 6d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Wm. Proody, Esq. The church—which is ded. to St Peter—appears to have been built at different periods. It is a cruciform structure, with a tower crowned with pinnacles rising at the intersection of the limbs of the cross. Distance from Chip-ping-Campden, 3 m. W. Pop., in 1801, 273; in 1831, 327. A. P., £1,843.

WILLERSLEY, a parish in the hundred of Huntingdon, co. of Hereford. It lies on the south bank of the river Wya. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford, rated at £3 6s. 8d., returned at £33, and, in 1829, in patronage of the representatives of the late John Freeman, Esq. Church ded. to St Mary Magdalene. Distance from Hay, 7 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1831, 13.

WILLESBOROUGH, a parish in the hundred of Chart and Longridge, lathe of Scray, co. of Kent. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, rated at £6 16s. 8d., returned at £128 18s. 10d., and in patronage of the dean and chapter of Canterbury. The church is ded. to St Mary, and is principally in the decorated style of English architecture. Distance from Ashford, 2 m. S.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 442; in 1831, 472. A. P., £2,358.

WILLESDEN, or WILSDON, a parish in the Kensington division of the hundred of Ossington, co. of Middlesex. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of West Twyford, in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the dean and chapter of St Paul's, London, rated at £14. Church ded. to St Mary. It is principally in the later style of English architecture. It contains the hamlets of Holsdon-green, Neasdon, and East Twyford. Distance from St Paul's cathedral, London, 8 m. N.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 1751; in 1831, 1876. A. P., in 1815, £15,462; in 1828, £16,290.

WILLESLEY, a parish which, along with the two other parishes of Measham and Stratton-en-le-Fields, forms a detached portion of the hundred of Repton and Gresley, co. of Derby. It is locally within the hundred of Goscote, co. of Leicester. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £12, returned at £55 12s., and, in 1829, in patronage of Charles Hastings, Esq. Church ded. to St Thomas. A railroad passes from this parish to Ashby-de-la-Zouch, and the canal which takes its name from that town bounds the parish on the south-west. This parish is within the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and consequently within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held every third Tuesday at Tutbury for the recovery of debts under 40s. Distance from Ashby-de-la-Zouch, 2½ m. S.W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 62; in 1831, 63. A. P., £1,199.

WILLEY, a hundred in the co. of Bedford. It comprises the north-western portion of the county, bounded by Buckinghamshire and Northamptonshire, and intersected by the river Ouse, containing 18 parishes, and, in 1831, 8,627 inhabitants.

WILLEY, a township in the parish of Presteigne, hundred of Wigmore, co. of Hereford. Distance from Presteigne, 3 m. N. Pop., in 1801, 102; in 1831, 147. A. P., £1,312.

WILLEY, a parish in the hundred of Wenlock, co. of Salop. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford, rated at £5 6s. 8d., and, in 1829, in patrance of Lord Forester. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. Distance from Bridgenorth, 5 m. N.W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 163; in 1831, 159. A. P., £1,639.

WILLEY, a parish in the Kirby division of the hundred of Knightlow, co. of Warwick. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £8 6s. 0^d., and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Leonard. Distance from Rugby, 7 m. N. by W. Pop., in 1801, 111; in 1831, 96. A. P., £1,029.

WILLHALL, a hamlet in the parish of Alton, co. of Southampton.

WILLIAMSCOTT, or WILLESCOT, a hamlet in the parish of Cropredy, hundred of Banbury, co. of Oxford. Here is a charity, the income of which is appropriated to the education of poor children; it is endowed with £13, arising from rents bequeathed for its support by Walter Calcot in 1575, and with an annuity of £2, bequeathed by John Ditchfield in 1708. Distance from Banbury, 4 m. N. N. E. The pop. of this hamlet is returned along with the chapelry of Wardington.

WILLINGALE-DOE, or WILLINGALE-DE-OU, a parish in the hundred of Dunmow, co. of Essex. Living, a rectory, consolidated with that of Shellow-Bowels, in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the commissary of Essex and Herts, concurrently with the consistorial court of the bishop of the diocese, returned at £16, and, in 1829, in patronage of T. B. Bramston, Esq. The church is ded. to St Christopher, and is in the same churchyard as that of Willingale-Spain. These two parishes, although perfectly distinct in every thing concerning their ecclesiastical concerns and parochial assessments, are much intermixed. Here is a school at which six poor children belonging to the parish receive free instruction on an annuity of £6, given by Robert Cole in 1733; the Rev. Mr Walker also left a small sum for the purchase of books. "In this parish are distinct constables: one for the township; one for Torralls-Hall hamlet; a third for the hamlet of Birds-Green, part of which is in Roding-Beauchamp."—Morant's Essex. Distance from Chipping-Ongar, 4½ m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 335; in 1831, 466. A. P., £2,371.

Church ded. to All Saints. It is in the same churchyard as that of Willingale-Doe, which see. Distance from Chipping-Ongar, 4½ m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 146; in 1831, 239. A. P., £1,389.

WILLINGDON, a parish in the hundred of Willington, rape of Pevensey, co. of Sussex. Living, a discharged vicarage united to that of Arlington, in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester, rated at £12, and in patronage of the dean and chapter of Chichester. The church is a building of considerable antiquity, principally in the early English style of architecture. Distance from East Bourne, 2½ m. N. by W. Pop., in 1801, 347; in 1831, 603. A. P., £4,812.

WILLINGHAM, or WIVELINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of Papworth, co. of Cambridge. Living, a rectory exempt from visitation, being in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the bishop of Ely, rated at £18 8s. 1½d. Church ded. to St Mary and All Saints. On the north side of the chancel is a chapel in the decorated style of English architecture, the roof of which is constructed of stone in a very curious manner. The Baptists have a place of worship here. Here is a charity school, the foundation of which is dated so far back as 1593, when a subscription was raised for its support, and the money collected expended in the purchase of an estate, the annual rent of which amounts at present to about £20; in addition to this, Dr Saywell, master of Jesus' college, Cambridge, bequeathed £10 annual income for its support. The number of children who receive the benefit of this institution, is limited to 30. Here are almshouses for 4 poor widows, endowed with £12 per annum by William Smith, provost of King's college, Cambridge, who founded them in 1616. Large quantities of cheese are made here, the quality principally made takes its name from the neighbouring parish of Cottenham; about 1200 milch cows are kept for the purpose. Distance from St Ives, 6½ m. E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 795; in 1831, 1403. A. P., £3,069.

WILLINGHAM, a chapelry in the parish of Carlton, co. of Cambridge. Living, a curacy, subordinate to the rectory of Carlton, in the archd. and dio. of Ely, not in charge, within the peculiar jurisdiction of the bishop of Ely. Patronage with the rectory of Carlton. Chapel ded. to St Matthew. Distance from Newmarket, 5½ m. S. by E. Pop., &c., are included in the returns made from the parish of Carlton.

WILLINGHAM, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of Wells, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a rectory in WILLINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Wixamtree, co. of Bedford. It lies on the southern bank of the river Ouse, which is here navigable. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £7 17s., and, in 1829, in patronage of the duke of Bedford. The church, which is ded. to St Lawrence, contains some monuments erected to the memory of different members of the Goetwicke family; it is principally in the debased style of English architecture. Distance from Bedford, 4 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 229; in 1831, 332. A. P., £1,993.

WILLINGTON, a township in that portion of the parish of Whalley which is in the second division of the hundred of Eddisbury, co.-palatine of Chester. This township formerly belonged to the abbey of Whalley, which is the reason of its being accounted part of that parish; the inhabitants, however, resort to the church of St Oswald, Chester, for the performance of ecclesiastical rites: they pay a portion of the great tithes to the rectors of Wem and Tarvin. The Unitarians have a place of worship in this township. Distance from Tarporley, 3 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 84; in 1831, 115. A. P., £1,228.

WILLINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, co. of Derby. It lies on both sides of the river Trent. Living, a discharged vicarage with the curacy of Repton, in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £4 17s. 3d., returned at £60, and in patronage of the corporation of Etwell and Repton. Church ded. to St Michael. The poor children of this parish are entitled to free education at Findern school, in the parish of Mickleover. The Grand Trunk canal intersects the parish. Distance from Burton-upon-Trent, 5 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 305; in 1831, 402. A. P., £1,715.

WILLINGTON, a township in the parish of Brancepath, north-western division of the ward of Darlington, co.-palatine of Durham. The river Wear flows on the south side of the township. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Bishop-Auckland, 4 m. N. Pop., in 1801, 169; in 1831, 216. A. P., £1,449.

WILLINGTON, a township in the parish of Hanmer, hundred of Maeslor, co. of Flint, North Wales. Distance from Ellesmere, 5 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 304; in 1831, 388. A. P., £2,636.

WILLINGTON, or WELLINGTON, a township in the parish of Wallsend, eastern division of the ward of Castle, co. of Northumberland. It lies on the river Tyne. Coal is raised to a great extent within the township. Here are also a quarry, several coal stalks, a patent ropery, and a steam corn-mill. Distance from North Shields, 3 m. W. by N. Pop., &c., included in the returns made from the parish of Wallsend.

WILLINGTON, a township in the parish of Barcheston, co. of Warwick. Distance from Ship-ton-upon-Stour, $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.S.E. Pop., &c., included in the returns made from the parish of Barcheston.

WILLISHAM, a parish in the hundred of Boamere and Claydon, co. of Suffolk. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, not in charge, returned at £29, and, in 1829, in patronage of A. Upcher, Esq. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Needham, 3 m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 154; in 1831, 224. A. P., £1,049.

WILLITOF, a joint township with Gribthorpe, in the parish of Bubwith, Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, E. R., co. of York. Distance from Howden, 5 m. N. Pop., &c., included in the returns made from Gribthorpe.

WILLITON, a chapelry in the parish of St Decuman, hundred of Williton and Free-manners, co. of Somerset. Living, a perpetual curacy in the dio. of Bath and Wells, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the vicar of St Decuman, rated at £4, returned at £80. Chapel ded. to St Peter. The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. Distance from Dunster, 6 m. E.S.E. Pop., &c., included in the returns made from the parish of St Decuman.

WILLITON AND FREEMANNERS, a hundred in the co. of Somerset. It is near the centre of the western branch of the county, containing 31 parishes, and, in 1831, 14,717 inhabitants.

WILLMINGHAM, a hamlet, partly in the parish of Shalfleet, and partly in that of Freshwater, Isle of Wight, co. of Southampton. Distance from Newport, $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. S. by E.

WILLOUGHBY, a parish in the Wold division of the hundred of Calceworth, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £39 10s. 2d., returned at £105 6s., and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Gwydir and Lady Willoughby. Church ded. to St Helen. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Here is a school endowed with about £25 annual income, arising from the rent of land bequeathed in 1728 by Anthony Barnes; the sum is appropriated to the instruction and clothing of poor children. Distance from Alford, $3\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 395; in 1831, 537. A. P., £4,893.

WILLOUGHBY, a hamlet in the parish of Norwell, co. of Nottingham. Distance from Newark, 6 m. N. by W.

WILLOUGHBY, a parish in the Rugby division of the hundred of Knightlow, co. of Warwick. This place is mentioned in the Norman survey of the kingdom under the name of Wilbere and Wilebei, between which and the present name a resemblance can easily be traced. In the reign of Henry I. we find it a royal demesne, and was by that monarch granted to one of his servants called Wigan, by one of whose descendants it was granted to the hospital of St John, founded by Henry III. without the east gate of Oxford. This monastic institution having been dissolved in the reign of Henry VI., the manor of Willoughby was obtained by William de Wainfleet, at that time bishop of Winchester, for the purpose of endowing with it Magdalene college, Oxford, then recently founded; it accordingly still forms part of the endowment of that institution. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., part of the parliamentary army having passed through the village, made preparations for pulling down the ancient market-cross, from which they were fortunately deterred by the remonstrances of the vicar. Willoughby was formerly a place of much greater importance than it now is, having enjoyed the advantage of a fair and market, which have now, however, fallen entirely into disuse. It is conjectured, from the existence of a place still called 'Pie-court,' that a court of pie-powder was attached to the fair. Near the church appears to have been formerly a gaol, remains of which have been recently discovered. The village extends nearly three quarters of a mile along the road from London to Holyhead; it consists principally of thatched houses, but a few have been built recently of a better description. The land in the vicinity is rich, and possesses much interesting scenery. Willoughby has derived great advantage from the recent discovery of some saline and sulphureous springs, the properties of which are similar to those at Harrowgate. Establishments for the accommodation of visitors have in consequence been formed, and the village is rapidly rising from obscurity. The waters are principally used for scrofulous and other similar complaints. Its situation on the high road gives it the advantage of easy and direct communication with the metropolis, from which it is about 80 miles distant.

Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £9 4s. 4d., and in patronage of the president and fellows of Magdalene college, Oxford. The church is ded. to St Nicholas, and is a structure of a plain and neat exterior, principally in the later style of English architecture, with a low square embattled tower, with buttresses at the corners. The western window possesses considerable beauty in the details. The north and south porches are handsome, and relieve the general plainness of the edifice. The interior consists of a chancel, nave, and aisles, the first of which is separated from the rest of the building by an obtusely pointed arch. The aisles are separated from the nave by rows of clustered columns, and from the interior of the tower by a lofty arch. The font is placed in the south aisle, and is a large cylindrical vessel of stone, on a square pedestal of stone, and is slightly ornamented. The church contains some ancient monuments, among others an altar-tomb of the family of Clerke. The Primitive Methodists have a place of worship here. In this parish various liberal benefactions have been given or bequeathed for charitable purposes; the annual amount is now about £500. The trustees of these charities erected a school-house in 1816, at an expense of £430, adjoining to which is accommodation for a schoolmaster and mistress. Each of these receive £40 per annum. The children educated here receive instruction in reading, writing, &c.; and the girls in needlework, from the mistress. The rest of the money, after paying the expenses of the school, is devoted to keeping the church and roads in repair, to the apprenticing of children, and to the support of the poor. Many Roman antiquities have been discovered in the vicinity. Distance from Dunchurch, 3 m. S. by E. Pop., in 1801, 319; in 1831, 376. A. P., £3,399.

WILLOUGHBY (SCOTT), a parish in the wapentake of Aveland, parts of Kesteven, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £7 1s. 3d., returned at £110, and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Gwydir. Church ded. to St Andrew. Distance from Falkingham, 4 m. N.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 9; in 1831, 24.

WILLOUGHBY (SILK), a parish in the wapentake of Aswardhurn, parts of Kesteven, co. of Lincoln. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £14 8s. 1d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Huntington. The church is ded. to St Denis, and is a structure in various styles of English architecture, the general appearance of which is handsome. The body is in the decorated style, and the chancel is evidently of more recent erection; the latter contains three beautiful stalls, with a wooden screen, exhibiting some elegant specimens of carving. There are some remains of stained glass in the east window. The font is of Norman architecture, and of a circular form. Distance from Sleaford, $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 225; in 1831, 193. A. P., £2,400.

WILLOUGHBY-WATERLESS, or WATER-LEYS, a parish in the hundred of Guthlaxton, co. of Leicester. Living, a rectory with the vicarage of Peatling-Magna, in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £11 11s. 3d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. John Miles. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Lutterworth, $5\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 272; in 1831, 327. A. P., £2,009.

WILLOUGHBY-UPON-THE-WOLDS, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of Rushcliffe, co. of Nottingham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, rated at £6 18s. 6d., returned at £84, and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. George Davys. Church ded. to St Mary and All Saints. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. In the centre of the village is a cross fifteen feet in height, resting on four steps. A battle, commonly called the battle of Willoughby field, was fought here during the civil war between the royalist and parliamentary parties. The Fosse-road intersected the parish, and the existence of extensive ruins proves the existence of a town, which, from its size, must have been of some importance; antiquaries are, however, at variance as to its name, whether it was Vernometum, or Maryidunum. According to Horley it was the former, but Stukeley inclines in favour of the latter. The field, where the remains are found, is called the Black field. Distance from Loughborough, $7\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 355; in 1831, 465. A. P., £2,691.

WILLONCHES, or WILCHES, in the co. of Leicester. See RAGDALE.

WILLOUGHTON, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of Aslaoce, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged vicarage in medietyes, in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £7 4s. 2d., returned at £143 12s. 3d., and alternately in patronage of Lord Scarborough, and the provost and fellows of King's college, Cambridge. Church ded. to St Andrew. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. "Here is said to have been an alien priory. Maude the empress did indeed give the church or a moiety of it, to the abbey of St Nicholas, by Angiers; and that abbey had a pension out of it. And a manor in Willoughton, lately belonging to that abbey, was granted by Henry VI. to King's college, Cambridge. But it is certain that there was a priory of monks here. Roger de Baslei and Simon de Canel, in the reign of King Stephen, gave the moiety of the church here and the greater part of the town to the Knights Templars, from whom it came afterwards to the hospitallers, and here was a preceptory of that order, valued in the 26th year of the reign of Henry VIII. at £174 11s. 1d. ob. per annum as Dugdale; and at £209 19s. 8d., as Le Neve's MSS. Valor, which was granted 37^o Hen. VIII. to John Cock and John Thurgood."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Gainsborough, $8\frac{1}{2}$ m. E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 320; in 1831, 477. A. P., £3,313.

WILLSBOROUGH, an extra-parochial liberty in the hundred of Sparkenboe, co. of Leicester. Distance from Market-Bosworth, $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. W. by S. Pop., &c., returned with Temple-hall.

WILL'S-PASTURES, an extra-parochial district in the Southam division of the hundred of Knightlow, co. of Warwick. Pop., in 1801, 4; in 1831, 7. A. P., £176.

WILLSWORTHY, a hamlet in the parish of St Peter Tavy, hundred of Lifton, co. of Devon. Distance from Tavistock, 6 m. N.E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 70.

WILLYBROOK, a hundred in the co. of Northampton. It is at the north-eastern end of the county, having Rutlandshire on the north-west; containing 14 parishes, and, in 1831, 5790 inhabitants.

WILMECOTE (LITTLE), a hamlet, formerly a chapelry, in the parish of Old Stratford, Stratford division of the hundred of Barlichway, co. of Warwick. The chapel was ded. to St Mary Magdalene, and is now demolished. Distance from Stratford-upon-Avon, 3 m. N.W. Pop., &c., returned with the parish of Old Stratford.

WILMINGTON, a hamlet in the parish of Offwell, co. of Devon. Distance from Honiton, $3\frac{1}{2}$ m. E. by S.

WILMINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Axton, Dartford, and Wilmington, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, co. of Kent. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Rochester, rated at £6 17s. 6d., and in patronage of the dean and chapter of Rochester. The church is ded. to St Michael, and has a handsome steeple. The hill on which it stands commands an extensive view of the neighbouring country. The great earl of Warwick resided for some time at the manor house, which is beautifully situated. Distance from Dartford, 1 m. S. Pop., in 1801, 520; in 1831, 724. A. P., £3,229.

WILMINGTON, a hamlet in the parish of Boughton-Aluph, co. of Kent.

WILMINGTON, a hamlet in the parish and hundred of Chirbury, co. of Salop. Distance from Bishop's-Castle, $7\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.

WILMINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Longridge, rape of Peversey, co. of Sussex. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester, rated at £8, returned at £96, and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord George Cavendish. Church ded. to St Mary. It is principally in the Norman or Saxon style of architecture. "Robert, earl of Moreton, in the time of William Rufus, bestowed this manor on the abbey of Grestein in Normandy, to which it became an alien priory. The monks were of the Benedictine order. Upon the wars with France it was often seized into the king's hands, till Henry IV. gave license to the dean and chapter of Chichester, to buy this priory with the manor, &c., then valued at 240 marks per annum, which they did, and had the same confirmed to them by parliament, 2d Henry V., toward the founding of a chantry of two priests in the said cathedral. This estate being surrendered up by the said dean and chapter, was granted, 7th Elizabeth, to Sir Richard Sackville."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Wilmington gives the inferior title of baron to the marquess of Northampton. Distance from Hailsham, 4½ m. S. W. Pop., in 1801, 236; in 1831, 328. A. P., £1,499.

WILMOTSHAM, a hamlet in the parish of Stoke-Pere, co. of Somerset.

WILMSLOW, a parish in the hundred of Macclesfield, co.-palatine of Chester. It contains the townships of Bollen-Fee, Chorley, Fulshaw, and Pownal-Fee. The parish lies on both sides of the small river Bollin. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester, rated at £32 15s., and, in 1829, in patronage of John Clowes. The church is ded. to St Bartholomew, and exhibits a mixture of the decorated and more debased styles of English architecture. It contains several ancient monuments, principally to different members of the Dunham, Trafford, Newton, and Leigh families. The town owes its origin to a branch of the last mentioned family. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. Ten poor children receive education at a school founded by the Rev. Henry Hough, and possessing a small endowment. Here is a workhouse, established about 1780, upon Lindan common, and endowed with the rental of lands now producing about £200 per annum. Within the parish are several mills for the manufacture of cotton and silk fabrics, which are principally moved by water power on the small river Bollin. Courts leet and baron are held within the parish; the former by the earl of Stamford and Warrington, and the latter at the township of Pownal-Fee by Mr Trafford. Not far from the church are the ruins of a chapel, supposed to have belonged to the lords of the manor. Distance from Macclesfield, 7 m. N.W. by N. Total pop., in 1831, 4296. The returns are given separately under the different townships.

WILNE (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, co. of Derby. It contains the township of Shardlow, and a large poor-house common to the townships of several different parishes. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the prebendal court of Sawley, not in charge, endowed with £1600, and in patronage of the perpetual curate of Sawley. Church ded. to St Chad. Distance from Derby, 8 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 580; in 1831, 1091. A. P., £3,215.

WILNE (LITTLE), a chapelry in the parish of Sawley, hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, co. of Derby. Living, a curacy subordinate to that of Sawley, in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, not in charge; patronage with the perpetual curacy of Sawley. Chapel ded. to St Chad. Distance from Derby, 8 m. E.S.E. Pop., &c., returned with the liberty of Draycotte.

WILNECOTE, a chapelry in the parish of Tamworth, Tamworth division of the hundred of Hemlingford, co. of Warwick. It contains the hamlet of Dostill. Living, a perpetual curacy with that of Tamworth, in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, not in charge, returned at £40; patronage with the curacy of Tamworth. The chapel is ded. to the Holy Trinity; and having lately obtained a grant from the society for the enlargement of churches and chapels, amounting to £300, it has in consequence received an addition of 482 sittings, of which number 450 are free. Establishments for the raising of coal and burning of lime and bricks, have existed here for some years. Distance from Tamworth, 3 m. S.E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 475; in 1831, 688. A. P., £2,394.

WILPHIRE, a township in the parish and lower division of the hundred of Blackburn, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Distance from Blackburn, 4 m. N. by E. Pop., in 1801, 275; in 1831, 337. A. P., £1,294.

WILSDEN, a township in the parish of Bradford, wapentake of Morley, W. R., co. of York. Here is a chapel, which was finished at an expense of £7,710 13s. 6d., arising from a grant obtained from parliament. In 1828 it was constituted a district church, and the patronage was vested in the vicar of Bradford. The Wesleyan Methodists and Independents have places of worship here. Here are manufactories for the spinning and weaving of worsted, cotton, and linen. Distance from Keighley, 4 m. S.E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 913; in 1831, 2252. A. P., £2,927.

WILSFORD, or WIVELSFORD, a parish in the wapentake of Winnibriggs and Threo, parts of Kesteven, co. of Lincoln. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £10, and in patronage of Viscount Melbourne. The church is ded. to St Mary, and exhibits a mixture of the early and decorated styles of English architecture. It has a tower and spire, and in the interior is an octagonal font, seemingly of a later date than the rest of the church. "Hugo de Evernure, or Wake, gave this manor to the abbey of Bec in Normandy, in the reign of King Stephen, whereupon a priory of Benedictine monks from thence were fixed here. It being seized into the king's hands during the wars with France, it was at length, by the favour of Thomas Holland, earl of Kent, settled upon the abbey of Bourn in this county; and as parcel thereof, granted, 30th Henry VIII., to Charles, duke of Suffolk."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Sleaford, $\frac{1}{2}$ m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 251; in 1831, 393. A. P., £2,473.

WILSFORD, a parish in the hundred of Underditch, co. of Wilts. Living, a vicarage consolidated with that of Woodford, in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the prebendary of Wilsford and Woodford, in the cathedral church of Salisbury, not in charge; patronage with the vicarage of Woodford. Church ded. to St Michael. The parish lies on the western bank of the river Avon, and contains the tything of Lake. The manor-house of Lake is a handsome building, in the style of architecture prevalent in the reign of Elizabeth. Distance from Amesbury, 2 m. S.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 99; in 1831, 119. A. P., £1,012.

WILSFORD-DAUNTSEY, a parish in the hundred of Swanborough, co. of Wilts. It contains the tything of Manningford-Bohune. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £8 17s. 11d., and in patronage of the master of the hospital of St Nicholas, Salisbury. Church ded. to St Nicholas. Distance from Pewsey, $\frac{1}{2}$ m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 224; in 1831, 270. A. P., £1,778, not including the tything of Manningford-Bohune.

tance from Ashby-de-la-Zouch, $6\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.E. by N.

WILTON, a parish in the hundred of Grimsboe, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged vicarage with that of Hockwold, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £6 7s. 6d., and in patronage of Caius college, Cambridge. The church—which is ded. to St James—is an ancient structure, principally built of flint and boulder-stone, with a massive embattled tower and spire. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Brandon-Ferry, $\frac{1}{2}$ m. W. The pop. and A. P. are returned with Hockwold.

WILTON, a tything in the parish of Midsummer-Norton, hundred of Chewton, co. of Somerset. Distance from Bath, $8\frac{1}{2}$ m. S. W. Pop., &c., returned with the parish.

WILTON, a parish in the hundred of Taunton and Taunton-Dean, co. of Somerset. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £6 13s. 4d., returned at £95, and, in 1829, in patronage of Webb Stow, Esq. The church is ded. to St George, and was formerly a chapel-of-ease to the vicarage of St Mary Magdalene in Taunton. The parish contains the hamlets of Ganton and Therford, and is an extensive suburb to the town of Taunton. A hospital was formerly founded here by the bishops of Winchester. Distance from Taunton, 1 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 331; in 1831, 795. A. P., £2,697.

WILTON,

A borough, formerly a market-town, and parish, locally within the hundred of Branch and Dole, co. of Wilts, but exercising separate jurisdiction within itself. It contains also the tythings of Bulbridge and Ditchampton. The name of the place is derived from its situation on the river Wilty. It is a place of great antiquity, and was anciently of considerable importance, having been the Caer-Guilon, or capital of the British Prince Carollus, and in the time of the heptarchy the principal seat of the kings of Wessex. Its importance many centuries before the Norman conquest, may be estimated from the fact of its giving name to the county, and from the circumstance of there being a mint here. Camden and many other antiquaries state it to have been the place where a battle was fought between Egbert, king of Wessex, and Beorwulf, king of Mercia, which was decided in favour of the former. This battle, it is certainly known, was fought at a place called Ellandene within the county; but it seems uncertain whether this or another place of that name is referred to in the older accounts; the evidence, it is now considered, is rather against Wilton having been the site. King Alfred, in 871, was victorious over an army of Danes, having compelled them to sue for peace on disadvantageous terms. About this time was commenced the monastery, of which a particular account will be found under the proper head. In the beginning of the tenth century, Wilton became the seat of the diocese of Wiltshire, and continued during the lives of 11 successive bishops, until the two bishoprics having been united, the see was removed to Sherborne, and ultimately to Old Sarum. For a considerable time after the Norman conquest, Wilton continued to be a place of considerable importance until the time of King Stephen, in which reign it became the scene of some military operations between that monarch and the Empress Maude, and was burnt by the latter. It again recovered in a great degree, but was materially injured by the growing consequence of Salisbury, and the change in direction of the great western road, which formerly passed through it. It was visited by Queen Elizabeth in 1579, and was made the residence of the court for a short time in 1603.

The town is situated in a valley near the confluence of the rivers Madder and Willy, is partially paved, and consists principally of one long street. The town owes great part of its present affluence to the manufacture of the kind of carpets which are called after its name, and which was introduced from France by a former earl of Pembroke, he having brought workmen to England for the purpose of instructing the inhabitants in the art. Three hundred and fifty persons are now employed in two manufactories; and although the trade is not so extensive as it formerly was, it is now evidently on the increase. The markets were formerly held on Wednesday and Saturday, but they have both now fallen into disuse. On the 4th of May is held a fair for cattle and sheep, and on the 12th of September a very large one for sheep, upwards of 100,000 being sold. Wilton is a borough by prescription, but its privileges have been confirmed and increased by the charters of different monarchs from the time of Henry I. to that of Henry VI. The corporation as it at present stands, consists of a mayor, recorder, high steward, five aldermen, besides an unlimited number of burgesses, the corporation having the privilege of increasing them at will; besides these there are a town-clerk, two sergeants-at-mace, four constables, and other inferior officers. The mayor is chosen on the first Thursday after Michaelmas day, by the corporation at large, from three persons nominated by such members of the corporation as have served the office of mayor. The lord holds an annual court on the 13th of October, at the town-hall, which is an ancient building recently repaired; at this court the mayor and other office-bearers are sworn in. The jurisdiction of the borough is in the hands of the mayor and recorder who possess exclusive jurisdiction, and are justices of the peace ex officio. This borough first sent members to the parliament held in the 23d of Edward I., and has continued to do so till the present time. Under the late corrupt system of election, the members were generally returned under the influence of the earl of Pembroke, the right of voting having been exercised by all members of the corporation, in number only about 45. Under the provision of the Reform act it has been deprived of one member. The number of voters is now above 300, and the mayor is returning officer. Living, a rectory with that of Ditchampton and the vicarage of Bulbridge united, rated at £12 16s. 3d., in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, and, in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Pembroke. The church is ancient, and is ded. to St Mary. The Methodists and Independents have places of worship here. Here is a free school, founded in 1706 by Walter Dyer, and endowed by him with £600, by William Upton with about £2,100, and by Robert Sumpton with part of the interest of £4,200. The master is paid £40 per annum, and receives a free house. Twenty boys receive education, and a sum of £8 10s. as an apprentice fee on leaving school. The remainder of Mr Sumpton's bequest is appropriated partly to the providing of small marriage portions to deserving young women, and is partly given in annual sums of £6 each, to five poor men and as many women either born, or resident for seven years, in the parish. James Swayne also bequeathed a sum of £2 annually, to each of the same individuals. Thomas Mease bequeathed £4000 in the public funds in 1816, directing the interest to accumulate for years, and afterwards to be appropriated to various charitable purposes. "This monastery owes its original to Weoxstan or Wulstan, the famous earl or duke of Wiltshire, who about the year 773, repaired an old church of St Mary here (which had been almost quite demolished by the Danes) and placed therein a college or chantry of secular priests; but after his death, A. D. 800, his relict S. Alburga, sister to King Egbert, got leave of her brother to make it a nunnery for twelve religious virgins besides the prioress. This king encouraged this project, and is thereupon said to be the first founder of this monastery. King Ælfred (having routed the Danes not far from this town A. D. 871,) on the persuasion of his wife Egwine, built a new nunnery on the site of the royal palace here for an abbess and twelve religious, and caused the nuns from St Mary to come to this new house, which consisted of twenty-six nuns, and was dedicated to St Mary and St Bartholomew. King Edward senior, and King Edgar were great benefactors to this monastery, the latter for the sake of his natural daughter St Edith a nun, and, as some say, abbess here, who was afterwards canonized, and became the patron saint of this abbey, which was of the Benedictine order, and had yearly revenues about the time of the dissolution valued at £601 1s. 1d. q. as Dugd.; and £652 11s. 5d. q. as Speed. It was granted, 35th Henry VIII., to Sir William Herbert.—Some have imagined that there was a collegiate church here; but quære, whether the prebendaries here were not some few secular clergymen provided for out of the lands and churches belonging to the abbey.—Near, or without the gate of this town, was an hospital of a master or prior and poor brethren, dedicated to St John, as early as A. D. 1217. About the time of the dissolution there were but four poor persons in it, and the revenues of it, with the chapels of Burcomb, were valued at £16 18s. 4d. per annum in the whole, and £14 13s. 10d. ob. clear. It is yet in being for a master or prior (who is a clergyman nominated by the dean of Sarum,) two poor men and two poor women, who are nominated by the master, and have each of them yearly £4 10s. 6d. for their maintenance and firing, and are clothed every other year.—There was an house of Black friars in this town, which was granted to Sir William Herbert, 1^o Edward VI.—Tanner's Not. Mon. On the site of this ancient nunnery is the princely residence of the earls of Pembroke, designed by Inigo Jones and Holbein; here Sir Philip Sidney composed his Arcadia, his sister Sarah being the wife of the earl of Pembroke. Distance from Salisbury, 3 m. W. by N.; from London, 84 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 2144; in 1831, 1997. A. P., £3,422.

WILTON, a township and chapelry in the parish of Kirk-Leatham, eastern division of the liberty of Langbaugh, N. R., co. of York. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York, rated at £19 9s. 6d., returned at £114 10s., and, in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Lonsdale. Chapel ded. to St Cuthbert. The castle here belonged to the ancient family of the Bulmers, and in which it continued till Sir John Bulmer, Knt., the last possessor of that family, engaging in the northern insurrection called the Pilgrimage of Grace, was attainted for high treason, when this and his other estates were forfeited to the crown. Till within a few years there were some remains of its former grandeur, but the tower being in a very ruinous state, it was taken down, and a new edifice, in the same style of building, erected on its site by the present proprietor. Near the centre of the village are the remains of St Ellen's chapel, founded, according to Torr, by Sir William Bulmer, in the 23d of Henry VIII., for two priests, endowed with some lands, out of the revenue of which four poor men and as many women received a weekly dole. Distance from Gullsbrough, 3½ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 328; in 1831, 411. A. P., £5,836.

WILTON, a township in the parish of Ellerburn, eastern division of the wapentake of Pickering-Lythe, N. R., co. of York. Distance from Pickering, 3½ m. E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 186; in 1831, 192. A. P., £1,858.

WILTON (BISHOP), a parish partly within the liberty of St Peter of York, and partly in the Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, E. R., co. of York. It contains the townships of Bishop-Wilton with Belthorpe, Bolton, and Yowlthorpe with Gowthorpe. Living, a discharged vicarage in the peculiar jurisdiction of the court of the dean of York, rated at £7 3s. 6½d., and, in 1831, in patronage of Sir Tatton Sykes, Bart. The church is ded. to St Edith, and consists of a nave and side aisles, a chapel on the north side, a chancel and tower at the west end. The latter is comprised in the plan and is finished with a battlement and pinnacles. The spire is octagonal and of considerable altitude. The south side has a brick porch and several square-headed windows of three lights. The chancel is evidently the most ancient part of the church, probably of the early part of the thirteenth century; it has three circular-headed windows. The window in the east end of the chancel is pointed, of three lights. The interior is in a bad state of repair; it is spacious; the nave is divided from the aisles by four pointed arches resting on octagonal columns. The village is small and has a brook running through the principal street. The scenery in the vicinity is highly romantic, embracing valleys of considerable length, with hanging wood and several small streams. On the summit of the adjoining wold, on the east side of Bishop-Wilton, is the beacon which gave name to this part of the wapentake. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here, erected in 1810, and the Primitive Methodists another, built in 1818. A few poor children receive education from an annual sum bequeathed by Elizabeth Barnett, in 1763. Here is the moat of an episcopal palace which formerly existed here, having been built in the reign of Edward IV. by Bishop Neville. Distance from Pocklington, 4½ m. N. Pop. of the joint-townships of Bishop-Wilton with Belthorpe, in 1801, 413; in 1831, 622. A. P., £3,149. Total pop. of the parish, in 1831, 831.

WILTSHIRE,

An inland county of England, having Gloucestershire on the north, Berkshire and Hampshire on the east, Dorsetshire on the south, and Somersetshire and Gloucestershire on the west. The boundaries of the county are very irregular, not following the course of any river. It extends from 50° 55' to 51° 42' north latitude, and 1° 30' to 2° 22' west longitude. The area of the county is equal to about 1379 square miles, or 882,560 statute acres.

History.—When Cæsar wrote his Commentaries, Wiltshire was occupied by the Belgæ throughout the greater part of its extent; the rest was possessed by the Hedui and Carvili, the former inhabiting the north-western parts of it; the Cangi are said to have held some territory in the northern division. In the reign of the Emperor Claudius, the Romans having again invaded Britain in the year 44, found the greater part in the possession of the Belgæ, who appear to have subdued the Hedui and Carvili, after the time of Julius Cæsar; the rude barrier called the Wansdike, preserved the Cangi from their dominion. The Romans having conquered Britain, included Wiltshire under their new province of Britannia Prima. About the beginning of the sixth century, Cerdic—afterwards founder of the Saxon kingdom of Wessex—having landed on the coast of Hampshire, succeeded in gaining a footing, and after a continued warfare of nearly 20 years, penetrated this length, but was, however, completely routed by the Britons under Arthur. This defeat prevented the return of

WILTSHIRE.

Another battle was fought afterwards at 'Beranbrig' or Bar-near Marlborough, which decided the Britons in Wiltshire, they being sted and obliged to yield to the Saxons. In consequence, was immediately in-with the kingdom of Wessex, of which d part till the end of the heptarchy. dowing reign, Ceola raised an insur-against his uncle Ceawlin, at that time d having procured the aid of some of ish tribes, succeeded in defeating him /ednesbury, on the Wensdyke, and the crown. In the succeeding reigns anty was often made the scene of mili-perations between the kings of Wessex, one hand, and those of Mercia on the Here was fought a sanguinary contest eat Bedwin, between Wulphere, king of sa, and Eswin, general of the West Saxon s, in which, although Wulphere was oblig- retreat with great loss, Eswin was totally le to pursue him. An indecisive action : place at Wednesbury, between Ina, king Wessex, and Ceolread, king of Mercia. In year 823, Egbert, afterwards sole king of igland, defeated the Mercian army, which d invaded his dominions, under Beornwulf. 'iltshire suffered much from the Danes in is reign as well as afterwards, the Great Al- ed having been defeated at Wilton in 871. About six years afterwards they gained posses- sion of the whole country, and established hemselves at Chippingham, having compelled Alfred to retire to the isle of Athelney in Somerset. From this retreat, however, he soon returned, and succeeded in extirpating the Danes, after a series of splendid victories, which must be known to the most superficial reader of English history. Crushed, but not subdued, the Danes returned under their King Sweyn, in 1003, and having ravaged many of the southern counties, succeeded in destroying the town of Wilton and Sarum. Wiltshire was again visited by invading armies of the same nation in 1006 and 1011, on which last occasion Canute imposed severe burdens on the inhabitants, but was shortly afterwards compelled to retreat by Edmund Ironside. Immediately after the conquest, William held a court at Sarum, at which the inhabitants did homage for their lands. During the civil wars which raged between the empress Maude and Stephen, the latter seized the castles of Salisbury, Devizes, and Malmesbury. He was defeated with great slaughter in the course of this war at Wilton, having on that occasion narrowly escaped being taken prisoner. During the servile war which took place in 1450, under Cade and others, the bishop of Salisbury was barbarously murdered by his tenants. During the great civil war in 1643, Wardour castle was besieged by Sir Thomas Hungerford, in the interest of the parliament, who succeeded in taking it. Sir William also took the town of Malmesbury in the same year, but did not long retain possession of it. Shortly after the battle of Lansdown, the parliamentary army was defeated on Roundaway-hill, and suffered great loss in their stores, &c. Devizes was taken by Oliver Cromwell in 1646, and Malmesbury by Col. Massie in the same year. Here took place the insurrection, which was intended to be general, in 1665, but which only broke out at Salisbury; it was totally unsuccessful, the leaders being all taken and executed. Salisbury was for some time the head-quarters of King James II. when his affairs were rendered desperate by the landing of the prince of Orange in 1688.

Ecclesiastical and Civil Divisions, &c.—The whole of this county is within the dio. of Salisbury, with the exception of the parish of Kingswood, which is in the dio. of Gloucester, and that of Whitebury, in the dio. of Winchester, and province of Canterbury. It forms the two archdeaconries of Sarum and Wilts,—the former comprising the deaneries of Amesbury, Chalk, Potterne, Salisbury, Wilton, and Wily; the latter those of Avebury, Cricklade, Malmesbury, and Marlborough. It contains 295 parishes; viz. 143 rectories, 104 vicarages, and 48 perpetual curacies.—The county is divided, for the purposes of civil government, into 28 hundreds, which are as follows: Alderbury; Amesbury; Bradford; Branch and Dole; Calne; Cawden and Cadworth; Chalk; Chippenham; Damerham (North and South); Downton; Dunthorpe; Elstub and Everley; Frustfield; Heytesbury; Highworth, Cricklade, and Staple; Kingsbridge; Kinwardstone; Malmesbury; Melksham; Mere; Potterne and Cannings; Ramsbury; Selkley; Swanborough; Underditch; Warminster; Westbury; and Whorwelsdown. It contains the city of New Sarum, commonly called Salisbury; the borough and market-towns of Calne, Chippenham, Cricklade, Devizes, Malmesbury, Marlborough, and Westbury; the borough of Wilton; and the market-towns of Amesbury, Great Bradford, Market-Lavington, Melksham, Mere, Swindon, Trowbridge, Warminster, Hindon, and Wootton-Basset. These two last named towns, with Great Bedwin, Downton, Heytesbury, Ludgershall, and the well-known Old Sarum, returned members to parliament until the passing of the reform act. Till then the county returned two members, but since that time it has returned four, namely, two for the northern, and two for the southern division. The number of registered voters was, in 1832, in the northern division, 3614; in the southern, 2540. Wiltshire is within the western circuit, the assizes being held at Salisbury, and the quarterly sessions of the Wiltshire magistrates at Devizes in the winter, at Salisbury in the spring, at Warminster in the summer, and at Marlborough in the autumn. There are upwards of 100 acting justices of the peace. The county gaol is at Fisherton-Anger, the county house of correction at Devizes, and one bridewell at Devizes and another at Marlborough. The parochial rates raised in this county for the year ending March 25th, 1827, amounted to £192,914 17s., and the expenditure to £190,043 2s.; of which £165,443 2s. was expended on account of the poor. In the year ending Easter, 1832, the money raised was £199,000, or about 16s. from every individual inhabitant.—This county, although now in the diocese of Salisbury, was anciently in the time of the West Saxons included in that of Winchester; in the reign of King Ina it was included in that of Sherborne, and remained so till the beginning of the tenth century, when a diocese was formed co-extensive with the county, the seat of which was for some time at Ramsbury, and afterwards at Wilton. This last was united to the dio. of Sherborne during the bishopric of Hermannus, at the time of the Norman conquest. This bishop removed to Old Sarum, and finally, about the beginning of the thirteenth, to Salisbury, at which time the present cathedral was erected.

Soil, Face of the Country, &c.—The form of the county is somewhat that of an ellipse. There are two small portions detached, viz., the parish of Kingwood, which is a little beyond its north-western border in Gloucestershire, and another in Berkshire, near Oakingham, being nearly 30 miles removed. A small part of the county of Gloucester containing the greater part of the parish of Minety, is situated locally within this county. Wiltshire may be said to be naturally divided into two portions, by an irregular range of hills, which extends transversely through the greater part of the county, in a direction inclining from the north-east to the south-west. These districts are usually denominated South and North Wiltshire, and differ very materially from each other, not only in appearance, but in almost every distinguishing quality. South Wiltshire, which claims priority of notice, on account of its superior extent, forms the western division of a vast track of chalk hills, comprising a considerable part of Hampshire, and having for its boundaries the rich lands of Berkshire, and the extreme verge of the Marlborough hills on the north; the broken ground of Somersetshire on the west; the New Forest of Hampshire on the south; and the heaths of Surrey and Sussex, together with the West Downs of the latter county, on the east. This portion of Wiltshire presents to the eye, when surveyed from a distance, the appearance of a large elevated plain. On a nearer inspection, however, it appears to be indented by numerous and frequently extensive valleys, and to display an almost continual series of gentle eminences, with now and then a bolder height rising above the others, but never to a mountainous elevation. In some parts the hills assume the form of rotund knolls, and are separated by smoothly sided hollows, which vary considerably both in depth and extent. At other places they range along, for a short distance, in connected ridges, showing on one side of the range rather a rapid declivity, from the top of which, on the other side, the hills sink in irregular gradation, till at length they frequently shelve into a perfect flat. The whole of this district, generally speaking, is separated into two divisions, the one called Marlborough Downs, and the other Salisbury Downs, or Plain. Both these portions, however, are characterised by precisely the same generic features, excepting, perhaps, that the eminences in the former are more abrupt and elevated than in the latter. Around Stonehenge the greatest level prevails, and the face of the country here flows in the most gentle manner, and exhibits a tamer aspect than even the high wolds of Yorkshire. Throughout this whole extent the surface is usually smooth and naked, but nevertheless beautiful. Many of the scenes are grand; and at particular seasons, or under the influence of peculiar effects of sky, cannot fail to delight the artist. The principal valleys in this division of the county lie along the banks of the rivers, the most remarkable of which diverge like irregular radii from the country around Salisbury and Wilton. These display rich meadow and corn lands, interspersed with seats and villages, and finely covered, at intervals, with plantations of wood.—North Wiltshire differs completely from the southern division of the county in its general appearance. Instead of a constant series of 'chalky waves,' the aspect of this district, which extends from the verge of the Downs to the hills of Gloucestershire, is nearly that of a perfect flat, the few deviations from the ordinary level being for the most part so gradual as scarcely to be perceptible on a cursory view. The country here, moreover, is so extremely close and well wooded, that when viewed from any of the surrounding hills, it appears like one vast plantation of trees. If examined in detail, however, it is found also to contain many extensive tracts of rich pasture land, situated on the banks of the lower Avon and the Thames, and of such smaller streams as flow into the one or the other of these rivers. It likewise comprises a number of corn-fields, exhibits some very fine scenery of the milder kind, and is abundantly supplied with towns and villages. The soil of this county is various, both in the southern and in the northern districts. In the former, however, a much greater uniformity of disposition is observable than in the latter. All the higher land on the sides of the hills, from which the flints have been washed off, exhibits very commonly a chalky loam, or rather a dissolved chalk. A flinty loam chiefly forms the soil of the lower grounds of these summits; and in the centre of the valleys, which are watered by rivulets, the soil is usually composed of a deep black earth, covering a bed of broken flints; but in some of the more extensive vales there are veins of peat, formed by black earth, without any mixture of flints. The white land prevails most near the sources of the rivulets, where the hills are steepest; and the flinty loams near the junction of the rivulets, where the country is flattest. On those hills, the sides of which are much washed, the soil is of course extremely thin and weak; and, on the contrary, the level tops, which have been little, if at all washed, frequently possess a very strong and deep soil. Some stiff clays and clayey loams are discovered in different spots on the skirts of this district; and its interior is intersected by several stripes of a sandy soil, following the course of the veins of sandstone already mentioned. One stripe, which is very narrow but very fertile, entering the county in the vicinity of Mere, runs by Maiden-Bradley, Warminster, Westbury, and Lavington, towards Devizes, where it meets and unites with a wider and still more fertile track of similar soil, which stretches through the vale of Pewsey, and terminates at Burbage. From Shaftesbury, in Dorsetshire, another stripe proceeds by Donhead, Austy, Swallowcliffe, and Fovant, till it is stopped by the high ground in Burcomb field. This vein is likewise met at or near Fovant, by the range of sand hills coming from West Knoyle, by Step-Beacon and Ridge. In North Wiltshire, the soil covering the extensive tracts of corn-grate, under strata, is chiefly a calcareous loam of a reddish colour, and contains a considerable mixture of irregular flat stones. This loam differs much in quality, according to its comparative distance from the rock, and to the absence or presence of an intervening layer of cold blue clay; which, particularly when situated near the surface, renders the soil much less fertile than when it lies upon the pure warm stone, as is the case with all the land extending from Chippenham southward through Melksham and Trowbridge, except where the veins of gravel above-mentioned interrupt the course of the rock. In that event, however, the soil is not deteriorated; but, on the contrary, is much improved. Of the sand veins in this district, one runs from Rodburn, by Seagry, Draycot, and Sutton-Benger, to Langley-Barrel, near Chippenham; and another from Charlcot, through Bremhill, to Branham. Detached masses of the same soil are likewise seen at Bowde and Seend; and there is a third very narrow stripe of it stretching also from Charlcot towards Swindon. Another soil in North Wiltshire, which seems to demand particular notice, is that extending over the greater part of Bradon-Forest: it is a cold iron clay, of the very worst quality; so that the ground here was never so well applied as when in its original state of woodland. The climate of this county is not characterised by any very peculiar quality, except that the air in South Wiltshire, as on all open downs, is generally cold and sharp. Hence that district, though highly favourable to the health both of men and beasts, is not very congenial to agricultural purposes. In North Wiltshire the climate is much milder than in the south parts, but is nevertheless likewise cold; at least winter lingers here longer than might be supposed; a consequence most probably of the chilly retentive nature of the under soil throughout the greater part of it.

Agriculture.—With regard to agriculture, the southern district may almost be regarded as one vast sheep farm; the greater part of its extensive downs, and many portions of the vales, being devoted to the rearing and feeding of that useful animal. The summer stock of sheep kept in this division alone was formerly estimated at somewhat more than 600,000 head, including lambs, of which at least 150,000 were bred annually. In the south-west portion of Wiltshire, adjoining to Dorsetshire, a considerable number of cows are kept for the purpose of making butter, in order to assist, with the contiguous parts of the latter county and Somersetshire, in the supply of the cities of Bath and Salisbury, and some towns of the northern district, which lie immediately in the neighbourhood of the great cheese dairies, where whey butter only is made. With respect to the arable cultivation of this district, it possesses no very peculiar features. Fallowing is in very general use; and the chief manure is the produce of the sheep-fold. The most general crops on the high white lands are wheat and barley, and on the grounds in the valleys, green crops for the winter maintenance of the sheep and cattle. Potatoes are likewise planted in considerable quantities on the sandy veins which run through the county in this division. On the meadow lands, irrigation is practised perhaps more extensively here than in any county of England, and with signal advantages. Indeed, water meadows are indispensable appendages to a South Wiltshire farm; as without them it would be almost impossible to pursue the present system of sheep breeding, which is certainly more profitable to the farmer, to his landlord, and to the country at large, than any other mode of agriculture that could be substituted in its stead. The distinguishing feature of the agriculture of North Wiltshire is the pasturage or grazing system; which is conducted principally with a view to the supply of the dairy with milk for the manufacture of cheese. Great numbers of cows are therefore kept in that district, and a considerable part of them is likewise reared in it. The cheese of North Wiltshire has long been deservedly famed; though for some time after it became the staple commodity here, it was sold in the London market as the manufacture of Gloucestershire. Now, however, much of it is well known under the appellation of the 'North Wiltshire,' and is very generally esteemed superior to the cheese of the adjoining county, being equally rich as the best sort of the vale of Berkeley, and free from that degree of pungency or sharpness which is so offensive to some palates. In all things relative to the dairy, indeed, the inhabitants of this district probably excel those of any part in England, and evince that the quality of its produce depends fully as much on proper management as on any peculiarity of situation, soil, or climate; as it is well known that few tracts of country vary more, in these circumstances, than the different portions of North Wiltshire; and yet the cheese is almost equally good throughout its whole extent. But though the principal part of the pasture lands in this district is devoted to the purposes of the dairy, a considerable portion of them is also appropriated to grazing cattle for sale. Pigs are also reared in vast numbers in different parts of the county, and particularly constitute essential appendages to the dairy farms of its northern division. Many of these animals are sold alive to the butchers, for the supply of the neighbouring towns with pork; but the far greater proportion of them are killed by the farmers themselves, and cured as bacon. The last article of Wiltshire produce is no less celebrated than its cheese, at least when the pig has been principally bred on the whey and offal of the dairy, and has received a mixture of barley-meal as fattening food.

Woods.—Wiltshire, like the greater number of the English counties, had formerly abundance of wood, but the forests have now in a great measure disappeared. A little to the south-east of Marlborough is still an extensive forest, being about 16 miles in circumference. It belongs to the earl of Aylesbury, contains many majestic oaks, and is well stocked with deer.—Cranborne-chase occupied formerly a long tract in the most southern part of the county, and contained six lodges. Lord Rivers was lord of the chase, and appointed a ranger, who took charge of the whole.—Vernditch-chase is now almost entirely cultivated. It belongs to Lord Pembroke, to whom also belongs Groveley-Forest, which occupies some high ground between the valleys of the Nadder and the Wilf. Near Salisbury are the grounds now called Clarendon park and woods, but formerly called Penchett, or Pousett-Forest; it belongs to Sir F. H. Bathurst. In the valleys, particularly in the north-western part of the county, small coppices are common. In the western part of the county oaks are common and grow well, the cold soil being favourable to them. Ash is grown principally in the sandy soils, which prevail in the south; and elms in the gravelly valleys, which are distributed through different parts of the county. There are few wastes, and these are principally marshy. Owing to the scarcity of coal, the supply of which is in a great measure derived from the coal fields of Somersetshire, fuel is scarce, and the inhabitants are obliged in many cases to have recourse to the inferior substitute of wood.

The Mineral Productions are of little importance. "Chalk undoubtedly forms the chief part of the substructure of all that extensive assemblage of hills which constitute the Downs. This substance in some places is extremely hard, though it more usually is of a soft marly texture. The under strata, composing the lower grounds of this district, are clays, flints, and sandstone. The two first are likewise frequently interspersed with the chalk in different parts of the hills. Of the last there are several very singular veins running in various directions, both through South and North Wiltshire. In the latter division of the county, however, the substructure is in other respects entirely opposite to that in the southern. Here the chief under stratum consists of a loose irregular mass of flat broken stones, called corne-grate, which lie in horizontal beds, mixed with earth. Under the sand strata at Swindon is found a very singular rock, more regularly stratified than the corne-grate, and of a most excellent quality. This stone likewise serves, with equal advantage, all the purposes of the other sort. Neither coal, nor any of the metallic ores, are at present among the natural productions of Wiltshire. On the western side of the county, bordering on Somersetshire, are many freestone quarries, where vast quantities of fine stone are obtained. The quarries at Box, near Bath, are as famous as any in the vicinity of that city. The stone at Swindon is in much request for paving, for cisterns, tombs, &c. In the quarries at this town is also found a great variety of fossilized sea-shells, and other marine exuvie."

The Manufactures of this county are of considerable importance. Woollens were formerly made to a great extent; at Salisbury the manufacture has greatly fallen off within these 20 years, and very little is now made. Salisbury likewise carries on a considerable manufacture of cutlery and steel goods, which are considered equal in workmanship to any made in the kingdom. Carpets of an excellent quality, kerseymere and linsey are made at Wilton. Broad cloths and other descriptions of woollen goods are made at Bradford, Heytesbury, Chippenham, Westbury, Trowbridge, and all the adjacent towns and villages. Linen is manufactured at Mero; fustians and thicksets at Aldbourn. Linen and silk are made to a considerable extent at Stourton and Maiden-Bradley. The ale called 'Wiltshire' and 'Kennet,' is in great estimation, being principally sent to London. The principal export of the county consists of its agricultural produce; and, besides supplying its own extensive manufactures, it sends a large proportion of its wool out of the county. The imports consist chiefly of what is required for domestic consumption, such as coal, &c.

Rivers.—Wiltshire abounds with rivers and streams, most of which take their rise within itself. None of them are, however, navigable within the county. The Isis, afterwards called the Thames, rises in the Catwold hills in Gloucestershire, enters the county near Ewan, forms its northern boundary for a short distance before it reaches Cricklade, and having again become the boundary, leaves the county at its north-eastern extremity. It receives the small streams of the Swillbrook, the Rey, the Ray, and the Churn, from the northern part of Wiltshire. The Lower Avon rises on the borders of Gloucestershire, proceeds towards Malmesbury, Great Somerford and Dauntsey, and reaches Chippenham, from whence it proceeds in a winding direction to a point, near the borders of Somersetshire, by Bradford and Melksham, and finally turning northwards, enters the last named county a little to the south of Winsley. The Kennet rises near Marlborough, and flows in a direction at first south-west, and afterwards south, to the West Kennet, and passing Ramsbury and Chilton, reaches Hungerford in Berkshire. Trout and eels are found here, and are famous for their size and quality. Several small streams uniting in the vale of Pewsey, form the river called the Wiltshire and Hampshire Avon, which, passing Amesbury, Old and New Sarum, enters Hampshire near Downton. It receives several streams and small rivers, of which the principal are the Willy, which rises at the foot of the Clay-hills, and after passing Warminster, Heytesbury, and Wilton, joins the Nadder, and discharges itself into the Avon by two channels: the Nadder, which rises near Shaftesbury in Dorsetshire, and after passing Wardour castle and the village of Hatch, joins the Willy near Wilton; and the Bourne, which rises near Easton, enters Hampshire, but again emerges from it near Cholderton, and finally passing Newton-Toney and the three Winterbournes, joins the Avon not far from the city of Salisbury. The bed of this last named river is always dry in summer.

Canals.—The Thames and Severn canal, which commences at Stroud in Gloucestershire, and terminates near Lechlade in the same county, only passes through a very small portion of the northern boundary of Wiltshire. "The Kennet and Avon canal, which connects the navigation of these two rivers. The Thames and Avon was first projected in 1794, and after many difficulties and obstacles, and a great expense, was opened for boats in 1809. The present line of this canal, from Bath, crosses the whole of the county of Wilts from west to east, entering it near Winsley, to the north of which it crosses the river Avon, and again at Bradford; it then passes on the south side of Trowbridge, and runs along by Polshott to Devizes. On the north-west of this town it ascends a long and steep hill, by means of several locks. It next proceeds in a valley for several miles, and passes through the parishes of Bishop's Cannings, All-Cannings, Stanton-Barnard, Alton-Barns, Wilcot, and Wootton-Rivers, where it is conveyed through a hill by a tunnel, and is afterwards conducted by the side of a river through Great Bedwin to Hungerford, where it enters Berkshire, and continues along the banks of the Kennet, which it crosses at Newbery, till its junction with that river near Reading. The Wiltshire and Berkshire canal strikes off from the Kennet and Avon canal at Semington, and running in a direction almost due north, passes by Melksham towards Chippenham, with which town, as well as with that of Calne, it is connected by small collateral branches, from whence it proceeds to Foxham. Soon after, it turns almost directly to the east, flowing by Wootton-Basset, Chadderton, and Swindon, to within a mile of Highworth, near which town it leaves this county, and passes into Berkshire, on its way to join the Thames, at a short distance below Abingdon." The Salisbury and Southampton canal was intended to commence at Salisbury, and from thence proceed to Hampshire; but the design was abandoned on meeting with an extensive quicksand.

Roads.—The roads in Wiltshire are both numerous and good; indeed few counties are so well provided in this respect. The great western road which leads from London to the most western part of Cornwall, enters Wiltshire at two points, about a mile distant from one another; the one branch is from Andover, and the other from Stockbridge; they join about a mile after entering the county, and pass through Salisbury to Blandford. The London road to Bath by Chippenham passes through Hungerford in Berkshire, and immediately after enters Wiltshire, and passes through Marlborough, Calne, and Chippenham, to Bath. A branch leaves this road at Beckhampton, and passes through Devizes and Melksham to Bath. Another road to Bath by Sandy-Lane, branches off near Beckhampton, and passes by Laycock, Corsham and Box to Bath-Easton in Somersetshire. Another road from London to Bath by Andover enters the county from that town in Hampshire, and passing through Ludgershall, reaches Devizes, where it joins the road to Bath, which passes through that town. Two branches are given off from the first mentioned road from London to Bath by Chippenham, one branching off at that town, and leading to Bristol, and the other at Beckhampton, through Devizes and Trowbridge to Wells in Somersetshire. The London road to Barnstaple enters from Andover in Hampshire, and passing through Amesbury, Willy and Chicklade, reaches Bruton in Somersetshire. This road gives off a branch a little west from Amesbury, which, passing through Heytesbury and Warminster, reaches Frome in Somersetshire; and this again gives off another branch at Warminster, which passes through Maiden-Bradley to Bruton. The London road to Bruton by Salisbury leaves the great western road to Salisbury at that city, and afterwards passes through Wilton and Hindon. The Romans having had numerous stations in this county, there are, in consequence, numerous roads connecting them. These stations, it may be here remarked, were Sorbiodunum, now called Old Sarum; Verlucio near Heddington; and Curretio near the town of Marlborough, besides many other smaller settlements, particularly at Easton-Grey, Wanborough, near Heytesbury and Littlecot. A continuation of the Roman road called the Julia Strata entered from Bath, and proceeding by Medley and Spyepark, reached the station of Verlucio, and continued in the same direction till it left the county. The Fosse-way left the above mentioned road at Bath-Ford, and passing Banner-Down, Eastern-Grey, crossed the road between Tetbury and Malmesbury, and from thence proceeded to Cirencester in Gloucestershire; another road entered the county from Cirencester, and passing in a south-easterly direction to Wanborough by Cricklade, at which point it divided into two branches, one of which proceeded towards Speen in Berkshire through Baydon, and the other towards Winchester by Ogbourne, Mildenhall, Manton, and Chute-park. Three roads connected Sorbiodunum with other stations; one towards Silchester in Hampshire, by Porton and Idmiston; another towards Winchester by Ford, Winterslow, Buckhold-Farm, and Bosington, and the third towards Dorchester by Bemerton, Stratford-St-Anthony, and Wood-yates-Inn. Another Roman road is mentioned by Whitaker, as running in a north-easterly direction from Avebury to the county of Berks.

Antiquities.—The county of Wilts abounds in great works undertaken by the different nations who have at various times inhabited it. Of these the first in importance and in interest is Stonehenge, of which the following account is given by Grose in Antiquities of England. "It was long a dispute among the learned, by what nation, and for what purpose, these enormous stones were assembled and arranged. Geoffrey of Monmouth relates, that they were erected by the ancient Britons at the command of Aurelius Ambrosius, the last British king, by the advice of the sage Merlin, in memory of 460 Britons murdered by Hengist the Saxon. Polydore Virgil likewise says, the Britons erected it; but, according to him, as a sepulchral monument for Ambrosius himself; and others say, it was intended for Queen Boadicea. Inigo Jones supposed it a Roman temple, and Mr Charlton attributed it to the Danes, who were two years masters of Wiltshire: a tin tablet, on which were some unknown characters, supposed to be Punic, was dug up near it in the reign of Hen. VIII. but is lost; probably, that might have given some information respecting its founders. Its common name, Stonehenge, is Saxon, and signifies a stone gallows, to which those stones, having transverse imposts, bear some resemblance. It is also called in Welch, Choir Gour, or the Giants' Dance.

"Doctor Stukely has at length, by a number of irrefragable arguments, clearly proved this to be a British temple, in which their priests, called Druids, officiated. He supposes it, on account of its superior magnitude, to have been the metropolitan temple of Great Britain, and translates the words choir gour, the great choir or temple. The doctor says, the measure used in the constructing of this edifice was the Hebrew cubit, equal to 20 inches four-fifths English: that alone, measuring all its parts without fractions. This venerable structure stands upon Salisbury plain, in the lordship of Little Ambresbury, the property of his grace the duke of Queensberry, about 3 m. W. from the town of Ambresbury; it is situated near the summit of a hill, and enclosed by a circular ditch near 30 feet broad, and upwards of 100 feet from the outward surface; the vallum is placed inwards, and forms a circular terrace; over this ditch are three entrances, the most considerable of which fronts the N.E.: at each entrance, on the outside of the trench, there appear to have been two huge stones, set up in the manner of a gate; and parallel to these on the inside, two other stones of a smaller size.

"This temple was composed of 140 stones—including those of the entrances—of different sizes, forming two circles and two ovals; of these, all but one, supposed to have been the altar, are of the same sort as those called the grey wethers, near Marlborough, distant about 16 miles; these are found lying above ground. It is pretended, that Druidical temples were never built with stones dugged from quarries. One of the largest of these stones is supposed to weigh upwards of 40 tons, and to require above 140 oxen to move it. The altar is of blue marble, like that sort found in Derbyshire. The outer circle is nearly 108 feet in diameter, and, when entire, consisted of 60 stones, 30 uprights, and 30 imposts; of which there are 17 uprights still standing, and 7 more lying on the ground, either whole or in pieces: the upright stones are from 18 to 20 feet high, from 6 to 7 broad, and about 3 thick, and being placed at the distances of $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet from one another, were joined at the top by imposts, or stones laid across: the upright stones are made to diminish a little every way, by which means the imposts project no less than 2 feet 7 inches, which is considerable in a height of 18 feet. On the top of each of the upright stones is a tenon, resembling half an egg; they are 10 inches and a half in diameter, and exactly fit the mortices made in the imposts: there are still 6 of these imposts standing, each of which is 7 feet long, and about 3 and a half thick: on the outside, the imposts are rounded a little to humour the circle, but within, they are straight, and originally made a polygon of 30 sides. It is observed, that all the uprights are fixed in a kind of socket, dug in the chalk, having a bed of small flints.

"Somewhat more than eight feet from the inside of this exterior circle is another of 40 smaller stones, which never had any imposts: these are, in general, only half the height, half the breadth, and half the thickness of the outer ones, and consequently measure only one-eighth of their solid contents. Of the 40 original stones, there are only 19 remaining, and of these no more than 11 standing, five in one group, three in another, and two in another. Having passed the second circle, you come to one of the ovals which Doctor Stukely styles the Adytum, or Sanctum Sanctorum, which is composed of certain compages of stones, which he names trillithons, formed by two upright stones, having one impost covering them both. They are all remaining, five in number; not a bit is lost but what has been knocked off with hammers, to see whether, according to the vulgar notion, the stone is factitious.

"The stones of which these trillithons are formed are really stupendous; their height, breadth and thickness being so enormous as to strike the beholder with amazement: each trillithon stands by itself, independent of those that are next to it, and not linked together like the uprights and imposts of the outer circle; the breadth of the stones at the bottom is 7 feet and a half, and there is a cubit of 20 inches four-fifths between them, making on the whole near 17 feet; the upright stones diminish considerably towards the top, deriving great stability from their pyramidal form: these rise in height, from the lower end of each side next the entrance to the upper end; that is, the two first trillithons on the right and left are exceeded in height by the two next in order, and these by the trillithon directly behind the altar; their heights are 13, 14, and 15 cubits, but the imposts are all of the same size, 10 cubits being their medium length. On the inside of this oval is a lesser of 19 stones, of a form tending to the pyramid; these are 2 feet 6 inches in breadth, 1 foot and a half thick, and on a medium 8 feet high, increasing in height as they approach the upper end of the enclosure. Of these, there are only 6 stones remaining upright. Near the upper extremity of this oval is the altar, which, as has been before observed, is of coarse blue marble; it lies flat on the ground, or rather somewhat pressed into it; it measures about 16 feet in length, 4 in breadth, and 26 inches in thickness. It is remarked, that the insides of most of these stones are smoother than their outsides, the best side being placed towards the heliost of the temple.

"At a small distance from this pile is a huge stone lying on another, but so exactly poised as to be moveable with a very trifling force. The vulgar story is, that the devil threw this stone at a monk who had somehow provoked him, and just touched his heel, the mark of which is shown in the stone, which by a miracle was then rendered as soft as dough. Another vulgar tradition is, that no one has ever been able to number the stones so as to make two reckonings agree. These magnificent remains have suffered much from the ill-judged curiosity and avarice of different persons, who have digged in and about them in search of curiosities and hidden treasure. The former have found heads and bones of animals usually sacrificed, but the latter are not said to have been so successful.

"Doctor Stukeley has written a very curious account of this temple, from which the foregoing has been in part extracted. A perusal of the whole is necessary to understand thoroughly all the beauties and contrivance of its construction."

In the year 1797, three of the stones which formed part of the oval in the centre, fell to the earth; and this appears to have been the only instance on record of any alteration having taken place in these remains of antiquity. For whatever purpose it was erected, or whoever may have been the architects, the immense labour necessarily employed in bringing together the materials, and the amazing mechanical power that must have been used to raise the stones, some of which weigh upwards of 70 tons, to their proper situations, show, that it could have been only constructed for some great national purpose, connected either with religion or the government of the state. The vast earth work commonly called the Wansdyke, is generally supposed to have formed the northern boundary of the Belgæ, and to have crossed the whole county from the northern part of Hampshire to the north of Somerset. Few remains of this work are now in existence, but it can be traced in a few detached spots, and not far from Marlborough it is tolerably perfect for about 10 or 12 miles. The sepulchral remains are very numerous, the hills near Stonehenge being nearly covered with them, 50 having been counted from one station. Some of these have been opened and found to contain dead bodies, arms, and other antiquities. "There are in this county great numbers of Roman, Saxon, Danish, or British encampments, viz. at Fripsborough, near Salisbury; at West Kingston, at Burywood, near Chippenham; at Oldborough Hill, near Calne; upon Roundway Hill, near Devizes; at Heddington, at Casterly, near Lavington; on Martinshill Hill, near Marlborough; at Bratton Castle, near Westbury; on Suthbury Hill, near Ludgershall: at Merden, near Devizes; near Old Sarum; at Ogbury Ring, near Vespasian's Camp; at Great Dornford; at Claybury Ring, near Downton; at Old Castle, near Mere; at Chiselbury Ring, on Salisbury Plain; at Grovely Castle, and Bradbury, near Landford; at Clorus's Camp, near Winterborne; at Chisbury Hill; the castle near Ludgershall; at Blunsden Castle Hill, near Highworth; at Yarnbury Castle, near Deptford; on Salisbury Plain; at Laddington Castle, on Beacon Hill, near Chiseldon; at Martenshill Castle, near Watton; at Knook Castle, near Shrewton; at Haydon-hill Castle, near Chute, and one near Westbury."—Grose's Antiquities. The most considerable of these are the fortifications of Old Sarum, which cover a space of 30 acres; the traces of the walls are still visible. Chisbury Camp, near Tidworth, covers 17 acres; and Vespasian's camp, incloses an area of 39 acres. The religious houses in this county amounted, before the reformation, in the reign of Henry VIII., to 57. There still remain some traces of the abbies of Kingswood, Laycock, and Malmesbury, of the priory of Bradenstoke, and the nunnery of Kington-St-Michael. In this county are many splendid specimens of architectural grandeur, including the cathedral of Salisbury. "The antiquities worthy of observation in this county, are Alton Priory, near Stanton-Barnard; Banbury-Castle, near Marlborough; Bedwin Church; Bradbury Castle, Church, and Priory; Bradenstoke Priory, near Chippenham; Chisenbury Priory, near Endford; Clarendon House, on Salisbury plain; Convent, near Mere; Chapel, at Chippenham; Devil's Colts, near Kennet; Devizes Castle; Druidical Temple, on Marlborough Downs; Haresbury Hospital; Hungerford Church; King John's House, in Clarendon Park; Laycock's Nunnery, near Chippenham; Langford Castle, near Salisbury; Ludgershall Castle; Malmesbury Abbey and Castle; Marlborough Castle; Nine Caves, near Bodmington; Old Sarum Castle; Salisbury Cathedral; Stonehenge, on Salisbury Plain; Wansdyke, which crosses the county; Wardour Castle; Wolf Hall, near Great Bedwin." Among the seats belonging to noblemen and gentlemen in this county, are Bowood, the residence of the marquess of Lansdown; Charlton House, of the earl of Suffolk; Stowerhead, of Sir Richard Colt Hoare, Bart; Longleat, of the marquess of Bath; Tottenham Park, of the earl of Aylesbury; Wilton House, of the earl of Pembroke; Longford Castle, of the earl of Radnor; and Corsham House, of Paul Methuen, Esq. Here are a few mineral springs, some of which are supposed to possess medicinal qualities, particularly a chalybeate spring near Melksham, and several of other qualities at Heywood, Holt, and Middle Hill-Spa, near Box. The marquis derives his inferior title from this county. Pop., in 1801, 185,107; in 1811, 193,828; in 1821, 222,527; in 1831, 240,200. A. P., £1,155,459.

WILY, a parish in the hundred of Branch and Dole, co. of Wilts. It contains the tything of Deptford. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £21 14s. 2d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Pembroke. Church ded. to St Mary. Near the village is an encampment occupying more than 17 acres, called Badbury-Rings or Wily Camp, apparently of British origin. Distance from Hindon, 7 m. E.N.E. The population of this parish, in 1801, was 352; in 1831, 476. Assessed property, £3,767.

WIMBUSH, or WIMBISH, a parish in the hundred of Uttlesford, co. of Essex. Livings, a sinecure rectory, rated at £12, and in patronage of the Rev. John Dolignon; and a vicarage, united since 1425, with that of Thunderley, rated at £8, and in patronage of the rector; it is in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London. Church ded. to All Saints. Here is a school with a small endowment of £4 per annum, bequeathed in 1774 by Sarah Barnard. Distance from Saffron-Walden, 4½ m. E.S.E. Including Thunderley, the population was, in 1801, 709; in 1831, 921. Assessed property, £5,058.

WIMBLEDON, a parish in the western division of the hundred of Brixton, co. of Surrey. It was formerly called Wymbandune, Wymbaldon, and Wymbeldon. A battle was fought here in 568 between the kings of Wessex and Kent, and near the supposed site is an encampment of a circular form, inclosing an area of seven acres, and surrounded with a single ditch very well preserved. The most remarkable feature in this parish is the immense park, which is surrounded by seats belonging to many noblemen and gentlemen. Here are the works belonging to the English copper company, also some manufactories of calicoes, an establishment for the making of Japan ware, and a corn-mill. Near Wimbleton is a well, the water of which has never been known to freeze. The village consists of one street, and in the vicinity are many handsome houses. Living, a rectory in the peculiar jurisdiction of the archbishop of Canterbury, rated at £35 2s. 11d., returned at £150, and in patronage of the dean and chapter of Worcester. The church was erected in 1787, in room of an older one which had fallen to decay. It stands near the entrance to the village. It is an edifice in the Grecian style of architecture. The east window contains some remains of painted glass, representing the arms of several noble families. In the church-yard are several handsome monuments; it is watched by a society formed for that purpose about ten years ago. The Wesleyan Methodists and Independents have places of worship here. A school-house, with a house and garden for the use of the master, was given by John, Earl Spencer, in 1773, and a school, conducted on the national system, is now held here, at which 120 boys and 50 girls receive instruction, the school being supported by subscription. Dorothy Cecil, daughter of Edward, Lord Wimbledon, bequeathed land, producing an annual sum of £22 2s. 6d., which is appropriated to teaching poor children, and keeping her father's tomb in repair. Distance from London, 9 m. S.W. The population of this parish, in 1801, was 1591; in 1831, 2195. Assessed property, £16,802.

WIMBLEHILL, a hamlet in the parish of Ashill, co. of Somerset.

WIMBLINGTON, a hamlet in the parish of Doddington, northern division of the hundred of Witchford, isle of Ely, co. of Cambridge. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. About the year 1714, Thomas Eaton bequeathed property for the purpose of providing education for 40 children. The property having, however, become involved in a chancery suit; it has not yet been established. Distance from March, 4 m. S. Pop., in 1801, 557; in 1831, 965. A. P., £9,761.

WIMBOLDSHEY, or WILMSLOW, co. of Chester. See WILMSLOW.

WIMBOLDSLEY, a township in the parish of Middlewich, hundred of Northwich, co. palatine of Chester. The celebrated physician, Dr Fothergill, resided here for some years at Lea-hall. Distance from Middlewich, 2½ m. S.W. The population of this parish, in 1801, was 106; in 1831, 102. Assessed property, £1,322.

WIMBORNE-ALL-SAINTS, or ALL-HALLS, or UPWINBORN-CARENTHAM, a parish in the hundred of Wimborne-St-Giles, Shaston division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a rectory united since 1732 with that of Wimborne-St-Giles, in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £9 4s. 4½d., and in patronage of the rector of Shaftesbury. The church was pulled down in 1733. Distance from Cranborne, 3 m. S. The population is included in the returns made from Wimborne-St-Giles.

WIMBORNE-ST-GILES, a hundred in the Shaston division of the co. of Dorset, containing the parish of the same name.

WIMBORNE-ST-GILES, or UPWINBORN-MALMAYNES, a parish in the hundred of Wimborne-St-Giles, Shaston division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a rectory with that of Wimborne-All-Saints, united, since 1732, in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £12 13s. 4d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Shaftesbury. Church ded. to St Mary. It was built in 1732 on the occasion of the union of the two parishes. In it is the burial place of the earls of Shaftesbury, this family having a seat in the parish. Sir Anthony Ashley founded, in 1624, almshouses for eleven poor people, and endowed them with a large farm at Gussage-All-Saints. Distance from Cranborne, 2½ m. S.W. by W. The population of this parish, including Wimborne-All-Saints, in 1801, was 350; in 1831, 384. Assessed property, £2,166.

WIMBORNE-MINSTER, a parish in the hundred of Badbury, Shaston division of the co. of Dorset. It contains the market-town of the same name, and the tythings of Abbotstreet, Barnesley, Cowgrove, Leigh, Petersham, Stone, Thornhill, and Wimborne-Borough. This was a Roman station, subordinate to the camp at Badbury, and known by the name of Windogladia or Ventageladia. The present name is derived from its Saxon appellation Vinburnan, which expresses its situation between or in the vicinity of two rivers, to which the epithet of Minster has been added more recently to distinguish it from other places of the same original name. It has been supposed that this is the place designated in the Saxon Chronicle under the name of Wicganbeorche, as the scene of a great battle fought in 851, between the Danes and the king of Devon; but Bishop Gibson refers the scene of the encounter to Wenbury, in the county of Devon. In the beginning of the 10th century, Ethelwald, son of Ethelbert, in opposing Edward the Elder, fortified this place, but was driven from it after a short resistance. In the time of Leland this was a respectable town. That author mentions it in the following terms:—"The town is yet meatly good, and reasonably well inhabited. It hath been a very large thing, and was in price in the time of the West Saxon kings. Ther be in and about it divers chapelles, that in tymes paste were, as I have lernid, parochie chirches of the very town of Wimburne. The soil about Wimburne-Minstre self is very good for corn, grasse, and woodde." The town stands in a fertile valley near the confluence of the rivers Stour and Allen, and consists chiefly of irregular and ill constructed streets. Here are two bridges over the Allen, and the main road from London to Poole passes through the town. Here was formerly a town-hall, which has long since fallen into decay. "The borough contains the north part of the town, and consists of two streets, called East and West Borough streets. Though styled a borough it was never a corporation. It is governed by two bailiffs, chosen yearly about Michaelmas, who collect half yearly 2s. of each tradesman to defray the expenses of the steward's entertainment, and is an acknowledgment for the market's being removed hence, into the heart of the town. The manor of the deanery is situated to the south of the former, and includes all the rest of the town that is not in the borough, and composes the tything of Wimborne-Minster, and is governed by a constable. A manor, called Evans manor, makes a part of it." Hutchins' Dorset. The internal affairs of the town are managed by constables, appointed annually at a manorial court, held at Michaelmas. The magistrates of the county hold the petty-sessions for the Wimborne division here. Friday is market-day; and fairs for bullocks, cheese, and horses, are held on the Friday and Saturday before Good Friday, and on the 14th and 15th of September.

The living is a rectory, a royal peculiar, not in charge, and in patronage of the governors of the free school, who are an incorporated body. The living is divided into three portions, held by portionists or vicars, who officiate alternately. The king appoints the official and registrar of the peculiar court, and a visitation court is held annually. The church, or minster, is a spacious cruciform structure, ded. to St Cuthberga, whose tomb, as well as that of King Ethelred, is in the chancel. At the intersection of the transept rises a quadrangular tower, which was formerly surmounted by a spire, said to have been as high as that of the cathedral of Salisbury, and which was blown down in a great storm in the beginning of the 17th century. At the west end is also a quadrangular tower. The style of the architecture consists chiefly of a very early Norman, by some called Saxon, with an admixture of early English, of which last the east window presents a good specimen. In the chancel, which is raised several steps above the level of the nave, are 16 stalls, surmounted by canopies of carved oak. Under the chancel is a beautiful but small crypt, to which the name of the Dungeon is given, and which appears to have been used as one of the numerous chantries of this establishment. The roof of this is supported by pointed arches and circular groins. Besides the tombs named above, this church contains an altar tomb with the effigies of the duke and dutchess of Somerset, grandfather and grandmother to Henry VII.; also one to Gertrude, mother of the last earl of Devonshire; and one to Sir Edmund Uvedale, whose effigy, in complete armour, reclines on the tomb. A figure of a soldier, holding two hammers, strikes the hours on the great bell. The Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists, have places of worship here. "Before A. D. 705, St Kertlurga, daughter to Kenred, king of the West Saxons, and sister to King Ina, founded here an abbey of holy virgins, to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, wherein several of the Saxon kings were buried. This nunnery being destroyed by the Danes, one of the Edwards, kings of England, put in secular canons, so that it became a royal free chapel, and collegiate, consisting of a dean, four prebendaries, three vicars, four deacons or secondaries, and five singing men; and since the suppression, there is a sort of choir preserved, and some maintenance still allowed to three vicars, four singing men, six boys, and an organist. This college, which was valued 26th Henry VIII., at £131 14s., with most of the lands belonging to the same, was granted, 1st Edward VI., to Edward, duke of Somerset; 3d Edward VI., to Giles Keylway, and William Leonard; and 5th Edward VI., to Edward, Lord Clinton." Tanner's Not. Mon. While the church was collegiate, the dean and prebendaries maintained four priests and four clerks, to serve in the collegiate church and in the chapels of St Peter, Kingston, and Holt. The possessions appear to have lapsed to the crown in the reign of Elizabeth, for we find her in her fifth year founding a free school for the gratuitous instruction of all applicants, which she endowed with the tithes of the church, the revenues of the college, and the possessions of a former school, founded in 1497, by Margaret, countess of Richmond, and placed under the direction of 12 governors, who are incorporated and have a common seal. The possessions having been surrendered to Charles I., he renewed the grant, and made it incumbent upon the governors to support both the school and the church. "Here was an old hospital, in time of Edward I., dedicated to St Margaret and St Anthony; the lords of the manor of Kingston-Lacy appear to have been founders and patrons: it had originally no endowment, but was supported by casual alms. In the chantry roll, 1st Edward VI., it was valued at £1 9s. 8d. Its revenues have since been increased, and it still subsists under the patronage of the lords of the manor." Tanner. At Pamphill is a school, founded in 1695 by Roger Gillingham, Esq.; the master has a salary of £20 per annum. Matthew Prior is supposed to have been born here; at least he was educated in this school. In the vicinity is the extensive encampment of Badbury. Distance from London, 100 m. S.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 3039; in 1831, 4009. A. P., £12,358.

WIMESBOTHAM, a parish in the hundred of Clackclose, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, with the vicarage of Stow-Bardolph, rated at £5 6s. 8d., and in 1829, in patronage of Mrs More. Church ded. to St Mary. It is $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.N.E. from Downham-Market. Pop., in 1801, 260; in 1831, 476. A. P., £1,993.

WIMESWOULD, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of Goscote, co. of Leicester. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £9, endowed with £400, and in patronage of the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. Church ded. to St Mary. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. The school has an endowment for the education of ten boys, founded in 1733, by Joseph Thomson. Distance from Loughborough, 5 m. N.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 788; in 1831, 1276. A. P., £4,559.

WIMPOLE, a parish in the hundred of Wetherley, co. of Cambridge. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Ely, rated at £18, and in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Hardwicke. The church is ded. to St Andrew, and contains many monuments to different members of the Hardwicke family. The earl of Hardwicke has a noble mansion here. The school is endowed for the education of 30 poor children. Distance from Caxton, 6 m. E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 324; in 1831, 583. A. P., £1,934.

WIMPSTON, a hamlet in the parish of Whitchurch, co. of Warwick.

WIMPWELL, formerly a village in the hundred of Happing, co. of Norfolk.

WINCANTON, or WINCANUTON, a market town and parish in the hundred of Norton-Ferriis, co. of Somerset. The name was originally spelt Wyndcaleton, and was derived from its situation on a turn of the river Cale. It is a place of high antiquity, and various relics of the Romans have been discovered here. It was the scene of many conflicts between the Britons and Saxons, as well as between the Saxons and Danes. It is stated by Bishop Burnet, that during the revolution of 1688 the first blood was shed here; the prince of Orange, soon after landing at Torbay, having attacked and put to the sword a party of the king's dragoons. A large portion of the town was consumed by fire in the year 1747, but it has since been rebuilt in a more regular form and modern style. It stands in a delightful situation on the western declivity of a well wooded hill, at the foot of which flows the river Cale. It commands towards the south a view of the beautiful vale of Blackmore, and the vicinity is an interesting and fertile country, containing many gentlemen's seats. The town consists of four streets pretty regularly built, and containing some very good houses. The parish contains the hamlets of Barrow-Common, Marchcourt, Stavordale, Sutton, the Tything, and Wincanton-Common. The town is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the county. It is divided into the borough, governed by two constables; and the tything, governed by a tything-man. These officers are appointed at the court of the lord of the manor. Here is held an annual court leet for the hundred. Wednesday is market day, and fairs are held on Easter Tuesday and September 29th. The inhabitants are partly employed in the manufacture of linen and bed-ticking, which were formerly much more important than now, also in a branch of the silk trade, but the chief source of profit consists in the trade in corn, cattle, butter, and cheese; much of the latter is sent to London. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £31, returned at £78. Patrons, in 1829, N. and G. Messiter, Esqrs., who are also impropiators of the rectorial tithes. The church is a spacious structure, ded. to St Peter and St Paul. The Independents have a place of worship here. At Stavordale in this parish are some traces of the conventual buildings of a small priory, built and endowed for Augustine canons by Sir William Zouch. It was annexed, 24th Henry VIII., to the priory of Taunton. Near the town are two mineral springs resembling those of Cheltenham. Distance from London, 108 m. W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 1772; in 1831, 2123. A. P., £9,105.

WINCEBY, a parish in the hundred of Hill, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £6 0s. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., returned at £120 9s. Patron, in 1829, the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Margaret. A battle was fought here in the parliamentary war, in which the royalists were beaten. It is 4 m. E. by S. from Horncastle. Pop., in 1801, 44; in 1831, 65. A. P., £650.

WINCH (EAST), a parish in the Lynn division of the hundred of Freebridge, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £8. Patron, in 1829, Edmund Kent, sen. Esq. The church, which is ded. to All Saints, contains the chapel of St Mary, the ancient burying place of the Howards, and on the east window of the church are painted the arms of that family and of the Veres. It is 6 m. S.E. by E. from Lynn. Pop., in 1801, 224; in 1831, 466. A. P., £2,132.

WINCH (WEST), a parish in the Lynn division of the hundred of Freebridge, co. of Norfolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £9 13s. 4d. Patron, the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Mary. It is 3 m. S. from Lynn. Pop., in 1801, 210; in 1831, 394. A. P., £2,100.

WINCHAM, or WINSHAM, a township in the parish of Great Budworth, eastern division of the hundred of Bucklow, co.-palatine of Chester. The Grand Trunk canal passes in the vicinity. It is 2 m. N.E. by E. from Northwich. Pop., in 1801, 367; in 1831, 589. A. P., £2,005.

WINCHCOMBE, or WINCHELCOMBE, a market-town and parish in the lower division of the hundred of Kistagata, co. of Gloucester. It comprises the chapelries of Great and Gretton, with the following hamlets:—Contes, Cockbury, Comdean, Langley with the Abbey demesnes, Naunton with Frampton, Postlip, and Sudley-Tenements. In the eighth century this appears to have been the residence of the kings, if not the metropolis of Mercia. Offa founded a nunnery in 787, and in 798 Cenulph founded the abbey. Bishop Tanner gives the following account of the latter:—"A. D. 798, King Cenulph laid the foundation of a stately abbey for 300 monks, and commended it to the patronage of the Blessed Virgin Mary; but in process of time it came into the possession of seculars, or otherwise was almost wholly decayed; when, A. D. 985, Oswald, bishop of Worcester, reformed the discipline, and recovered the lands of this religious house, which was dedicated to St Kemlar, (the martyred son of the founder,) and continued in the possession of Benedictine monks till the general dissolution, when it was rated at £759 11s. 9d. per annum, and granted, 1^o Edward VI., to Sir Thomas Seymour; 4^o Edward VI., to William, marquess of Northampton; and 1^o Mary, to Lord John Chandos." This was a mitred abbey, and possessed the parish of Winchcombe with 19 manors besides, but it was spoiled by the Conqueror, in revenge of the opposition made to him by the monks. In the church were buried the founder, Cenulph, and his son, Canelm, who was murdered at the instigation of his unnatural sister, Quendreda. Very few traces of this stately abbey now remain. The town appears to have been originally walled, and formed with a small surrounding district a county of itself, but under the reign of Canute it was annexed to that of Gloucester. Near the church was a castle, the ruins of which were standing in the time of Leland, and gave the name of Joy-castle to the place. Here was anciently an hospital, which had disappeared by the time when Leland wrote. The town is situated at the base of the Cotswold hills, on the northern side, and to the south-east of the river Isip, in a beautiful and sheltered valley. The chief streets are three in number, and run from east to west, being crossed by a few of smaller extent. The houses are in general old, and of rather an indifferent appearance. The inhabitants were formerly much employed in the culture and manufacture of tobacco, but this was put a stop to by an act of 12th Charles I. It is said that the first tobacco in England was planted here. Here are two large paper, and one silk mill, and a tanyard, which give employment to many of the inhabitants. Some are employed in agriculture, and there is some small manufacture of stockings and thread. Saturday is market day, and fairs for horses, sheep, and horned cattle, are held on the last Saturday in March, May 6th, and July 28th. The town was incorporated as a borough by a charter granted by Edward the Confessor, and had two bailiffs, who were appointed annually by the lord of the manor, and twelve burgesses. The bailiffs continue to be chosen, but have long since ceased to exercise jurisdiction, the town is therefore under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates. Living, a discharged vicarage, to which are annexed the curacies of Great and Gretton, in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £18, returned at £61 11s. 10d. Patron, in 1829, Lord Rivera. Church ded. to St Peter. It was founded in the reign of Henry VI. by William, abbot of Winchcombe, and completed at the joint expense of Ralph de Boteler, lord of Sudeby, who had a magnificent residence in the neighbourhood, and the parishioners. It is an elegant and spacious structure, consisting of a nave, aisles, and chancel, in the later style of English architecture. The south porch is very much admired as an elaborate specimen of the style. Between the church and nave is an ancient screen of carved oak, and the nave is separated from the aisles by octagonal pillars and compressed arches. At the end is a lofty quadrangular embattled tower crowned with pinnacles. The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. Here is a free grammar school, in which about 34 boys receive instruction on an endowment of £49 4s. 6d. It was founded with an endowment of £9 4s. 6d. by Henry VIII. in 1522, and united subsequently to a grammar school founded by Lady Frances Chandos, and endowed with £40 a year, arising from 20 acres of land. Here is also a school for teaching children to read, which was founded and endowed with £20 per annum by George Townsend, Esq. Here are several almshouses without endowment, founded by Lady Dorothea Chandos. Here are two mineral springs, saline and chalybeate. It is 99 m. W.N.W. from London. Pop., in 1801, 1256; in 1831, 2514. A. P., £1,344.

WINCHELSEA, a market-town and parish in the hundred of Guestling, rape of Hastings, co. of Sussex, but having separate jurisdiction. This is one of the cinque ports, and is said to have been a considerable place before the arrival of the Saxons in England. The site of the ancient town is now overflowed by the sea; a notice of this inundation is retained in the records of Rye in the following words:—"Be it remembered that in the year of our Lord 1287, in the even of St Agath, the Virgin, was the town of Winchelsea drowned and all the lands, climesden, and the vocbes of Hithe." After this tremendous event the inhabitants resolved to build a new town upon the top of a hill, about a mile and a half from the sea, three of the gates of which are now standing, viz. Newgate, Strandgate, and Landgate. The latter is a square building, with circular towers at each angle; the high and pointed arch, (forming the principal entrance to the town from Rye,) was enriched with bold and massive mouldings, parts of which are still to be seen. The ceiling above the gateway was groined, and had rich pendants at the intersection. A flat tablet, inclosed in a trefoil panel, is placed on one side of the gateway, probably to commemorate the date of its erection, but no trace of an inscription remains. The masonry is in good preservation. At the present time this gate is used as a granary, but there can be no doubt that it was formerly a place of confinement as well as of defence. The site of the present town was formerly called Higham, and was given by Edward I., who also contributed largely to the relief of the inhabitants. In the reign of Henry III. it was made a member of the port of Hastings, and contributed ten ships, each containing twenty-one men and a boy. The new town soon rose into importance, but has since suffered in its commerce by the retiring of the sea, whereby the port has been destroyed. It also suffered much from incursions of the French in the reign of Edward III., and of the Spaniards in that of Richard II. The town is about two miles in circumference, consisting of several streets running at right angles to one another, and said to have been built after the plan of the town which was swept away by the sea. It has fallen greatly into decay, so that there is now no trade or commerce of any kind, and even the market, which was held on Saturday, has nearly fallen into disuse. A fair for cattle and pedlery is held on the 14th of May. The town was made a borough in the 42d Edward III., and continued to return two members to parliament till the passing of the reform act, when it was disfranchised. The only electors were about 11 freemen, and those were under the influence of the marquess of Cleveland. The charter of incorporation is of great antiquity, and under it the town is governed by a mayor and twelve jurats, who are justices-of-the-peace, ex officio, within the ancient town and liberties. The town is entitled, with Hastings, to send canopy bearers to every third coronation. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester, rated at £6 13s. 4d., returned at £130. Patron, in 1829, Sir William Ashburnham. Here were formerly three churches, which were still in existence in 1575, and were ded. to St Giles, St Leonard, and St Thomas. The present church, which is ded. to St Thomas, is an elegant structure in a mixed style of English architecture, and has gone partly to decay, the chancel alone remaining of the ancient structure. It contains some monuments of remarkable splendour, among which are three adorned with figures of knights in armour, supposed to be those of Templars. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. The family of Finch has the title of earl from this town. Here are the ruins of Cambre castle, which is thus described by Grose. "Winchelsea, or Cambre castle, stands in the marshes, on a pinnacle, about 2 m. N.E. of the town, and half a mile west of the sea, near Cambre point. It was built by King Henry VIII., either in the year 1539 or 1540. This castle is thought to have been built on, or with the ruins of a more ancient fabric, and is said to have cost £23,000. Its main walls are pretty entire; many of them are of brick cased with squared stone. Its plan is similar to several others erected by this king about the same time; that is, one large round tower serving for the keep, surrounded by several small ones of the same figure, connected by short curtains. These buildings show the low state of military architecture in this country at that time, round towers being of all others the least capable of mutual defence. Round about the keep was a low battery, with chinks for firing out of; they are now below the surface of the ground, which proves that the earth must have been prodigiously raised. On the moulding which encompasses this tower are several arms and devices, particularly the cross and the rose at the first coup d'œil on entering the gate. This building strikes one with as idea of something Roman, and is not very unlike the mausoleum of Metella, called Capo di Bovi." "Here was a house of Black friars founded by King Edward II., which after the suppression was granted to Michael Wildbore and William Clifford."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Here was also a house of Grey friars, granted on the dissolution to the same, 36th Henry VIII. Distance from London, 64 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 627; in 1831, 772. A. P., £2,330.

WINCHANDON (NETHER), a parish in the hundred of Ashenden, co. of Buckingham. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £5 6s. 8d., returned at £80. Patron, in 1829, Sir W. B. Cave, Bart. Church ded. to St Nicholas. Distance from Aylesbury, 6 m. W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 244; in 1831, 294. A. P., £2,519.

WINCHANDON (UPPER), a parish in the hundred of Ashenden, co. of Buckingham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £7 17s., returned at £33 5s. Patron, in 1829, the duke of Marlborough. Church ded. to St Mary Magdalene. Distance from Aylesbury, 5 m. W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 206; in 1831, 223. A. P., £1,981

WINCHESTER,

A city, locally situated in the hundred of Badlesgate, Fawley division of the co. of Southampton, but having separate jurisdiction.

History.—By the ancient Britons this was made a principal settlement, and, prior to the Roman invasion, it was the chief town of a tribe of Belgæ, who had expelled the original

Celtic inhabitants. Under Vespasian, the Romans conquered this district of Britain, and, finding this a place of importance, took possession of it, and made it a station under the name of Venta Belgarum, under which name it appears in the itineraries of Ptolemy and Antoninus. It was fortified in the year 50, by Ostorius Scapula, along with all the other cities of the Belgæ between the Severn and the Southampton river. On Catherine hill, in the immediate vicinity, there was a smaller encampment, quadrangular in form, and strongly defended, which antiquaries suppose to have been the summer quarters. It communicated with the roads to the stations at Porchester, Silchester, and Old Sarum, and may still be traced. The Romans erected temples to Apollo and Concord in the city of Winchester, supposed to have been near the site of the present cathedral. There are traces of the ancient fortifications of the city, and many Roman coins, urns, and other relics, have been found here at various times. This station was made the headquarters of Carausius and Alectus, who assumed the imperial purple in Britain. Many of their coins are found here. The city appears, even under the dominion of the Romans, to have been partly under the control of native princes, one of whom, named Lucius, is supposed to have founded a monastery here in the second century. At all events, there was a monastic establishment here at a very early period, in which Constans, son of Constantine, entered the ecclesiastical order, but was subsequently induced by his father to take the command of an army in Spain, where he was killed. When, upon the departure of the Romans, Prince Vortigern took the command of the southern provinces of Britain, he made Winchester his chief city, in which respect his immediate successors followed his example. Cerdic, or Cerddic, who commanded the Saxon invaders in the sixth century, and defeated the Britons in the New-Forest, also made Winchester his chief residence, and the capital of the Saxon kingdom of Wessex. He likewise converted the cathedral, or church of the monastery, into a Pagan temple, and dispersed the religious. One hundred years after his death, when Cyne-gils, in conjunction with his son, Cwichelm, reigned over the West Saxons, St Birinus was sent hither by Pope Honorius, and was well received by the reigning monarch. The king suffered himself to be baptized at York, by the persuasion of Oswald, king of Northumberland, and his example was rapidly followed by his son and many of his subjects. He would have built a cathedral, and removed the bishopric held by Birinus hither from Dorchester, but died, and his second son, Cenwace, who soon succeeded his brother, relapsed with his people into paganism. In the course of a few years, however, he was converted, and in 648 completed the cathedral projected by his father, and dedicated it to St Peter, St Paul, and St Birinus. He also founded and endowed a monastery near it, and a few years after divided the see into the bishoprics of Winchester and Dorchester. In 827, Egbert, king of the West Saxons, was crowned in the cathedral here, as sole monarch of these countries which formerly were under the Saxon octarchy. Winchester now became the capital of the whole kingdom, a pre-eminence which it appears to have retained till the reign of Athelstan. It was from this city that Ethelwolf dated the celebrated charter, whereby he bestowed on the clergy the tithes which they have ever since received. This was the first place in which a commercial guild was established by royal decree, by nearly 100 years, and about this period it appears to have been in a very flourishing condition. The Danes now began to make inroads upon this part of the country, and in order to defend the cathedral and monastery, they were fortified by Ethelbald. This was scarcely done when the city was ravaged and plundered, but the defences of the cathedral proved sufficient, and it escaped. The Danes carried away from the city a vast quantity of plunder, which appears, however, to have encumbered them, so that when they were attacked on their retreat to the ships, they were routed with great slaughter. In 872 the incursion was renewed, but the monastery was less fortunate than before, for it was taken by storm, and the ecclesiastics were murdered. King Alfred having driven off the Danes, took up his residence here, and the city began to rise into its former flourishing condition. That monarch caused a general survey of the country to be made, which was deposited in the archives of the city, and called the Codex Wintoniensis. On the north side of the cathedral Alfred founded a monastery, with a place of interment for himself and his family, but dying before it was completed, he was buried in the cathedral, from which his remains were subsequently removed to the place originally destined for them. Here were six mints for coining the different kinds of money in the reign of Athelstan. In the reign of Edgar, the standard weights and measures of the kingdom were adjusted, and the patterns deposited here. From this circumstance, the weights and measures were called 'Winchester,' till lately, when they were superseded by the 'imperial' weights and measures: the original pattern of the bushel is still preserved in the guild-hall of the city. In the reign of Edgar, the cathedral was partly rebuilt, and a magnificent shrine was erected in it to St Swithin, whose name, on the reconsecration of the edifice, was included in the dedication. When the kingdom was divided between Edmund Ironside and Canute, the latter made Winchester the capital of that division which he retained under his own immediate jurisdiction, and fixed his residence here. Edward the Confessor was crowned here in 1041, and granted a new charter to the cathedral. After the Conquest, William I. resided chiefly at Winchester, where he built a castle, and caused the celebrated Winchester Roll, or Doomsday-book, to be compiled. In 1079, the rebuilding of the cathedral and monastery was commenced by Walkelyn, bishop of the see, and a relative of William's. It was completed and dedicated in 1093. On the death of this bishop, the see was seized by William Rufus, who, two years after, was buried in the cathedral. Henry I., his successor, was married here to Matilda, daughter of Malcolm III. of Scotland; and on the birth of a son, he conferred many additional privileges on the inhabitants. A dreadful fire, which occurred this year, destroyed the royal palace, the mints, and a large part of the city. Among other losses, the one most to be deplored was that of a large portion of the public records. A new coinage was soon after made; and to regulate lineal measures throughout the kingdom, Henry I. ordered a standard yard to be made, of the length of his own arm, and deposited it here. The palace was now rebuilt, and the city appears to have been at the most flourishing period of its history. It suffered much in the wars between Stephen and Matilda, and the castle was garrisoned for the latter, though the city declared itself in favour of Stephen. Before the conclusion of the war, the half of the city was destroyed, and the treaty between Stephen and Henry was finally ratified here. Henry II. and his queen, Margaret, were crowned here, and held here a parliament in 1172. Many additional privileges were granted to the city by this king. After the return of Richard Cœur de Lion from the crusades, he, though previously crowned at London, held the ceremony of his coronation here. King John held a parliament here in 1207, and in the same year his son, Henry, was born here. He likewise renewed the charter in consideration of a tribute paid by the city, and was subsequently absolved from excommunication in the cathedral here. Henry III. resided here during his minority, and after the battle of Evesham held several parliaments here, as also did Edward I., but the royal residence was now, for the most part, transferred to London. After the death of Edward II., a parliament was held here for the purpose of arraigning Edmund of Woodstock, earl of Kent, who was most iniquitously executed opposite to the castle gate. The city was made a staple for wool by Edward III., whereby its decayed trade was somewhat revived. In 1388, Richard II. visited Winchester, and four years after held his parliament here. Henry IV. was married in the cathedral in 1401; and here Henry V. gave audience to the ambassadors from France. Henry VI. held a parliament here in 1449, and benefited the city much, but its importance and prosperity were now on the decline. Henry VII., and his queen, resided here at the time of the birth of their son, Prince Arthur. In 1522, Henry VIII. entertained here his imperial guest, Charles V. On the dissolution, Winchester suffered severely, and has scarcely since recovered from the shock it then received. Mary was married to Philip of Spain in the cathedral, and restored to it a portion of its original estates. On the death of Queen Elizabeth, the first place in which James I. was proclaimed was Winchester; Sir Benjamin Tichbourne, high sheriff of the co. of Southampton, having taken it upon himself to do so, without orders from the privy-council. Sir Walter Raleigh, Lords Cobham and Grey de Wilton, were tried here on a charge of conspiracy in the first year of the same reign. In the beginning of the parliamentary war, the castle was held for the parliament by Sir William Waller, but was taken and garrisoned for the king in 1643, by Sir William Ogle. It was not given up till after the battle of Naseby, when Cromwell besieged it, and, after a week, took and destroyed it. The troops of the parliament did great damage to the cathedral, and carried away the valuable plate. After the restoration, Charles II. began the erection of a royal palace on the site of the castle, which was never finished. The following account of the castle is given in Grose's Antiquities of England, Vol. VIII. :— "This once strong and stately castle, vulgar tradition reports to have been built by King Arthur about the year 523; perhaps there may have been some ancient Saxon fortress on the spot, but it was greatly repaired, if not rebuilt, by the Normans. By a plan of it, drawn in 1630, it appears to have been quadrangular, with a tower at each angle; and a view of it in Speed, shows that the entrance from the west was over a bridge leading to a gateway, contiguous to the south-west angle of the building. According to the same authority, it had out-works flanked with towers on the south. It is said by the Winchester annalist, that the assizes for the county were held here as early as 1272; and he frequently remarks, that the royal family quitted their residence at this place in order to make room for the judges. The chapel—which alone escaped in the civil wars—was, and still is, a magnificent building, consisting of three aisles, and is 110 feet in length, and 45 in breadth: the roof is supported by elegant Gothic pillars of marble, of excellent workmanship. A chantry belonged to it, as appears by its dissolution at the reformation. Over the court of Nisi Prius, above the judges' seat, hangs what is commonly called King Arthur's round table, which is 18 feet in diameter. Round it, in the ancient character, are inscribed the names of several of King Arthur's knights, spoken of in old romances, as Sir Launcelot de Lake, Sir Tristram, Sir Pellus, Sir Gawain, Sir Gereth, &c. &c. Although this table is certainly not of the age pretended, it is nevertheless a piece of great antiquity, and was probably made and used for some great festival, wherein those fabulous knights were represented; a matter by no means uncommon on these occasions, one instance of which occurs in the entertainment of Queen Elizabeth at Kenilworth-Castle. Paulus Jovius, who wrote above 200 years ago, relates, that this table was shown to the Emperor Charles V., and at that time many marks of its antiquity had been destroyed, the names of the knights being then just written afresh, and the table, with its whole ornaments, newly repaired. This castle was not only a royal residence, but here also parliaments were assembled, and important cases tried. It was, besides, the scene of divers other remarkable events, of which the following are a few:—In this castle, about 1066, Archbishop Stigand, when degraded, was confined by William the Conqueror, where he remained during his life; and in 1072, in the chapel, was tried a famous cause concerning the superiority of the see of Canterbury over that of York, before Hubert, the pope's legate, and all the bishops and abbots of the kingdom. In the year 1075, Waltheof, earl of Northumberland, being accused and convicted of high-treason, was beheaded before the gate of this castle. In this castle Henry III. sat as judge, and himself tried many prisoners. Here, too, in the same reign, the citizens found refuge from the cruelties of the army of the barons, commanded by the earl of Leicester." The city was visited by Queen Anne and Prince George of Denmark.

Description.—The city of Winchester stands in a pleasant situation on the banks of the river Itchen, which is here navigable for barges to the sea at Southampton, and is crossed by a handsome stone bridge. It consists of one street of considerable length, spacious and regularly built, crossed at right angles by several streets of nearly equal length, but narrower and less regular. Its limits do not extend beyond those marked out by the ancient walls, which were constructed of flint. Of the four gates, the Westgate alone remains; the others were removed, according to act of parliament, in 1770. Small branches of the river intersect the town at different places. This was formerly a place of much greater importance than at present, as may be seen from the historical account given above. In the 12th century it was the seat of government, contained royal palaces and residences of the nobility, three royal monasteries, and upwards of 40 parish churches. The population greatly exceeded what it at present amounts to, and the suburbs extended a mile in every direction beyond their present limits. It had extensive manufactories, and its fairs were well attended. In the course of the reign of Henry VI., the inhabitants petitioned the king for assistance, and represented that 997 houses were deserted, and 17 parish churches closed; and in a charter which Sir Francis Walsingham obtained from Queen Elizabeth, it is described as having "fallen into great ruin, decay, and poverty." The houses are in many instances ancient, but substantial and well built; the supply of water is good, and the streets are partially paved and lighted. There is a well-supported subscription library, also a neat theatre. Concerts, balls, and assemblies, are frequently held in St John's rooms, and oratorios were formerly performed every third year in the cathedral, but the present dean refuses to permit the cathedral to be used for that purpose. Races are held in July. The unfinished palace of Charles II. has been converted into barracks, capable of accommodating 2000 men. In the centre of the High-street is the city cross, an elegant structure in the later style of Gothic architecture, 40 feet in height. It is of a pyramidal form and consists of three stages, ornamented in a very rich style with arches, niches, and figures. It was erected by the fraternity of the Holy Cross. Pop., in 1801, 3555; in 1831, 9212. A. P., £17,732.

Municipal Government.—The city of Winchester, though previously possessed of many prescriptive and other privileges, was first regularly incorporated by Henry II. in 1184. This charter was frequently confirmed and altered by different kings and finally remodelled by Queen Elizabeth. Under her charter, the government is vested in a mayor, recorder, two bailiffs, six aldermen, and 24 common-councilmen, with a high-steward, town-clerk, two coroners, sergeants-at-mace, and inferior officers. The mayor, recorder, and aldermen, have magistral jurisdiction, not extending to capital offences, within the city and liberties. They hold quarterly courts of session, and, on Wednesdays and Fridays, a court of record for the recovery of debts. The bishop of Winchester holds a court, whose jurisdiction extends over all places which have ever belonged to the see, or to the convent of St Swithin. It is held weekly in the close of the cathedral, by judges appointed by the bishop and a jury selected from the liberty of the city. It takes cognizance of actions and debts, and is called the Cheyney court, having been anciently held under an oak, the French name for which tree is Chêne. Here is a handsome town-hall in the Doric style of Grecian architecture, erected in 1713. Here are kept the records to the city, the original standards of the national weights and measures, and many other relics. Here is a small and ill constructed gaol. The town first returned members to parliament in the 23d of Edward I., and the elective franchise was vested in the corporation and freemen, who, previously to the passing of the reform act, were about 100 in number, chiefly non-resident, and in the interest of the Buckingham family. Since the reform act was passed, the number of voters has been increased to about 680. The mayor is the returning officer. This is the county-town, and here are held the assizes and general quarter sessions for the county, as also the elections of knights of the shire. Here are the county-goal and bridewell, both well-constructed buildings.

Cathedral.—Winchester is the seat of a diocese, including in its jurisdiction the counties of Southampton and Surrey. The following account of the see and cathedral is extracted from the Penny Magazine for August, 1833. "The foundation of this see, and also that of the cathedral of Winchester, have been carried back so far as the middle of the second century after the birth of Christ, when, it is affirmed, the British King Lucius, having become a convert to the true religion, erected here the first Christian church on the site of the chief Pagan temple. This legend, however, rests on too uncertain authority to be entitled to much regard. All that we really know of the ecclesiastical history of those times is, that Christianity was undoubtedly introduced into the island in the course of the first century; that the converts among the Roman settlers were some time after considerable for their numbers; and that it had been generally diffused among the British inhabitants prior to the Saxon invasion. It was not till after the commencement of the seventh century that the Saxon kings and people of Wessex were induced to relinquish Paganism. The first of the former who was baptized was Kinegils, the great-great-grandson of Cerdic, the founder of the dynasty. His conversion, which took place about the year 635, and which was speedily followed by that of the greater number of his subjects, is attributed to St Birinus, who had been sent over to preach the gospel from Italy by Pope Honorius, and is accounted the first bishop of Winchester. Kinegils began the building of a cathedral, but his death, which took place soon after, prevented him from carrying it much beyond the foundation. The work, however, was continued by his son and successor Kenewalch, and brought to a conclusion in 648, when it was dedicated to the Holy Trinity and to the apostles Peter and Paul.

This edifice is described as having been of great extent and magnificence; but any considerable building of stone, which is said to have been the material employed in the present instance, was calculated to excite admiration in that age. It stood, there can be no doubt, on the same spot which is occupied by the existing cathedral. In 871, however, in an attack made upon the city by the Danes, the sacred structure appears to have been, if not entirely demolished, so terribly injured as to have been reduced to little better than a ruin. It is probable that it was repaired by the great Alfred, when, some years after, he regained the throne of his ancestors; but in the middle of the next century we find the fabric to have fallen again into such complete decay, that the then bishop, St Ethelwold, determined to pull it down, and rebuild it from the foundation. St Ethelwold's cathedral was finished in the year 980.

Much controversy has taken place among writers on the architectural antiquities of Winchester, as to whether any or how much of the building erected by St Ethelwold remains in the present cathedral. Some have contended that the entire church was rebuilt about a century after by Bishop Walkelyn, the prelate who was first appointed to the see after the Conquest; and certain of the statements of the old ecclesiastical historians would seem to imply that this was the fact. It seems to be generally acknowledged, however, that the character of the architecture of part of the east end is nearly decisive in favour of its superior antiquity to that of the rest of the church, and especially of the tower and those portions of the transepts and nave which are known to be the work of Walkelyn. Some have even contended, on evidence of a similar description, that parts of both the transepts and the nave must be considered to be of the age of Ethelwold. The central tower, however, was undoubtedly built by Bishop Walkelyn, whose repairs and additions, whatever was their extent, were regarded as so important, that, upon their completion in 1093, the church underwent a new dedication to St Peter, and St Paul, and St Swithin. After this, a portion of the east end was rebuilt towards the close of the eleventh century, by Bishop Godfrey de Lucy. But the most important improvements which were made on the original structure were those which were commenced soon after the middle of the fourteenth century, by Bishop William de Edyndon, and continued and completed by his illustrious successor the celebrated William de Wykeham, who held this see from 1366 to 1404. The latter prelate may be said to have rebuilt nearly the whole of the cathedral to the westward of the central tower; and to him in particular is to be attributed the construction of the great west front, which is by far the most magnificent part of the edifice as it now exists. Finally, in the early part of the sixteenth century, a considerable part of the church to the east of the central tower was restored by Bishop Richard Fox, another of the most distinguished prelates by whom this see was ever governed.

The cathedral of Winchester, it will be perceived from this sketch of its history, may be regarded as a nearly complete record and exemplification of all the successive changes in the Norman style of architecture, from its rise, or at least its introduction into this country, in the eleventh, till its disappearance in the sixteenth century. The building is in the usual form of a cross; and is one of the largest of our cathedrals, its length from east to west being 545 feet, and the breadth of the nave and aisles 87 feet. The length of the transepts from north to south is 186 feet; and the roof of the nave is 76 feet in height. With the exception of the west front—which, with its noble window, its buttresses and pinnacled turrets, and the canopied statue of Wykeham that crowns its pointed termination, has a grand and imposing effect—the exterior of the church has but little to recommend it. The extreme plainness of its architecture, its long unbroken continuity of roof, and its short and squat tower, give it altogether rather a homely and almost heavy air. Placed as it is, besides, in a low situation, were it not for its immense mass, it would scarcely have anything to distinguish it from the undecorated buildings by which it is surrounded. The interior, however, is such as amply to make up for this deficiency of outward display. The vast length of the vista formed by the nave and choir, with the splendid ceiling overhead,—the lines of columns and arches on each hand,—and the large and beautiful window that casts its light down from behind the choir, at the termination of the view,—all contribute to produce upon the spectator, as he enters from the great western door, an overpowering impression of solemnity and magnificence. And when he proceeds to examine the objects by which he is surrounded more in detail, he discovers everywhere a richness of ornament which it is impossible to look upon without admiration. Not to speak of a profusion of modern monuments, there are placed in different parts of the church various ancient chantries and tombs, exhibiting some of the finest efforts of Gothic sculpture in the world. The chantries, in particular, of William of Wykeham, of Bishop Fox, of Cardinal Beaufort, and of Bishop Wapfote, are structures of the most superb description. Behind the altar also is a stone screen erected by Bishop Fox, a work of wonderful elaboration and beauty.

The chantry of Cardinal Beaufort demands particular notice. It is constructed of Purbeck marble, and is a most beautiful specimen of the later style of English architecture. The roof is beautifully groined and enriched with fan-work, and on the walls are canopied niches, formerly containing statues which were taken away during the parliamentary war. The tomb of the cardinal is here, having his effigy in full dress. Bishop Waynflete's chantry is equally worthy of notice. Among the monuments we may notice those of William Rufus, Hardicate, Earl Beorn, nephew of Canute, many bishops, Dr Joseph Warton, Isaac Walton, and many other distinguished persons.

Living, &c.—This city contains the parishes of St Maurice, St Lawrence, St Mary Kalendar, St Peter Colebrook, and St Thomas. Within the liberty of the soke are those of St Faith, St John, St Michael, St Peter Cheesehill, St Martin Winnal, and St Swithin. The parishes of St Clement, St George, St Mary de Wode, St Peter Southgate, and St Michael in the Soke, and St Peter in Marcellis, have been united with various among these. The close of the cathedral and the college of Winchester are extra-parochial. All the livings are within the archd. and dio. of Winchester. The living of St Bartholomew's is a discharged vicarage, rated at £10, returned at £70, and in patronage of the crown. The church is a plain but spacious building. The living of St Lawrence's is a discharged rectory, rated at £6 5s., returned at £28 9s. 2d., and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church is an ancient structure, consisting of a single aisle and having a lofty quadrangular tower. The livings of St Mary Kalendar, a rectory, rated at £7; St Mary de Wode, a rectory, rated at £2; St Maurice, a rectory, rated at £6 7s. 6d., and endowed with £200; St George, a rectory, rated at £3 5s. 8d.; and St Peter Colebrook, rated at £8 4s. 2d., and endowed with £200, are united, returned at £104, and in patronage of the bishop. The church of St Maurice alone remains; it is an ancient structure and was originally the chapel of a priory. The living of St Thomas, a discharged rectory, rated at £13 17s. 8d., and endowed with £700, is united with that of St Clement, which is not in charge; together they are returned at £110, and in patronage of the bishop. The church of St Clement no longer exists; that of St Thomas is a structure of considerable antiquity, presenting a good specimen of the Norman style. The living of St Faith is a sinecure rectory, held by the master of St Cross. The church not having been in existence for upwards of two hundred years, the parishioners attend the chapel of the hospital of St Cross, which is extra-parochial. The living of St John is a discharged rectory, not in charge, to which has been annexed the rectory of St Peter's Southgate, endowed with £1500, and rated at £3 13s. 4d.; the united value of these benefices is returned at £55, and the lord-chancellor is patron. St Michael's is a discharged rectory, rated at £5 17s. 11d., and in the patronage of the bishop. The church is a modern structure in the later style of English architecture. The living of St Peter's Cheesehill, is a discharged rectory, rated at £14 9s. 9½d., returned at £75, and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. The living of St Swithin's is a discharged rectory, with that of St Michael-in-the-Soke annexed, rated at £6 6s. 10½d., returned at £30, and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church is situated over a postern called the King's Gate, and was formerly the chapel for the servants of the monastery of St Swithin. The living of St Martin's Winnal is a rectory, rated at £5, and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the rector. The Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics, have places of worship here. The chapel of the Roman Catholics is a remarkably handsome Gothic structure. Opposite is a convent, consisting of Benedictine nuns removed from Brussels.

"That munificent prelate, William of Wykeham, bishop of Winchester," says Tanner in his Notitia, "about the year 1367, began to build in the south suburb of this city, a new and noble college to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, which was to consist of a warden, ten perpetual chaplains or fellows, and 70 scholars in grammar, besides conductors, clerks, choristers, &c. It was, 26th Henry VIII., endowed with lands worth £639 8s. 7d.; and being particularly excepted in the act of 1st Edward VI., for the dissolution of colleges, it flourisheth to this day, and is an excellent seminary for that other ample foundation of the said Bishop Wykeham, St Mary Winchester, commonly called New college, in the university of Oxford." This college holds a prominent rank among the institutions for the education of youth. The laws drawn up by William of Wykeham were considered so excellent as to be copied by Henry VI. for his institutions at Eton and Cambridge. The original buildings still exist, and form two spacious quadrangles, ornamented with numerous sculptures. The chapel is a fine old structure, with an elegantly groined roof and richly painted windows. The altar piece is a painting of the salutation. The school room was erected in 1687, at an expense of £2,600; over the door is a statue of Bishop Wykeham, executed in bronze and presented to the school by Mr C. G. Cibber. The Gothic taste of some person in authority has caused this fine piece of art to be painted and gilt! In the cloisters is a curious old chantry chapel, now used as the library of the college. The fellowships in New college, Oxford, are filled up from this school. About three vacancies take place annually, and in the month of July the bishop holds a visitation for filling them up by examination of candidates. There are also scholarships and exhibitions for such as fail in obtaining fellowships. Sir Thomas Brown, Sir Thomas Wootton, Sir Thomas Ryves; and the poets Collins, Hayley, Otway, Philips, Pitt, Somerville, Young, and Warton received their early education here.

The hospital ded. to the Saviour, commonly called Christ's hospital, was founded by Peter Symonds, Esq., in 1586. The endowment amounts to £420 per annum, arising from lands, and is appropriated to the support of six unmarried men above fifty years of age, and for the clothing, maintenance, and education of four poor boys. There are two exhibitions of £10 per annum each, at either university, tenable for four years, by boys of this school. Such as do not go to the university are apprenticed with a fee of £30.

The hospital of St Cross, which was founded in 1132 by Bishop Henry de Blois, was endowed for a master, steward, four chaplains, 13 clerks, 7 choristers, and 13 poor brethren, who resided in the house; and for the daily entertainment of 100 poor men of the city, who dined together in a hall erected for the purpose. Henry de Beaufort added to the institution funds for the support of two priests and 22 additional poor brethren, with three sisters or nurses. This establishment, which escaped the dissolution, was rated at £184 4s. 2d., but suffered much during the parliamentary war. It still exists, having a master, chaplain, steward, and 13 brethren. The buildings are ancient and present curious transitions from the Norman to the most highly decorated English style. The church, which is ded. to the Holy Cross, is a very curious "remain of Saxon architecture, and was built in the reign of King Stephen by the first founder: it is in the form of a cross, and consists of three aisles with a transept or cross aisle. The roof is remarkably lofty and is supported by round massive pillars, with round headed arches stronger than the Doric or Tuscan, and there are some paintings upon the pillars and walls, of the same kind as those in the cathedral and in the chapel of St Mary Magdalene. The aisles, from the altar to the west door, are about 150 feet in length, and the transept is 120. The chancel is exceedingly neat, and is paved with white marble, and on each side of the altar are handsome screens of spire work, carved in stone and neatly ornamented. Upon the desk on the left side of the chancel are carved the names of all the officers belonging to the hospital about the year 1757, among which are those of a chantry of singing men; but at present there is no provision for a choir. The great west window of this church is built in a very ornamental style, and that it was formerly an elegant one, is obvious from the remains of some curious painted glass, with which it was once finished; there remains nothing in it at present legible or at least intelligible, except the words 'Nicholas Bedford.' A window on the east side of the north transept was formerly ornamented in the same style, and still retains an Ave Maria with some fragments, under which is 'Orate pro anima Richardi Buteshall.' He was master of this hospital in the year 1346; and in a south window are these arms: gules, three lions heads passant, fleur de lis reversed; or three eagles, quartering Barry, and a chief. On the roof of the nave are two chevrons between three roses, the arms of Wykeham, also the arms of France and England quartered. The lodging-rooms of the poor people adjoin to the church, at the west end of the south aisle; and after forming an angle extend from north to south, and from the whole western side of the court. The north side consists of the master's house, which is spacious and elegant; the refectory or brethren's hall, and the gateway. In the hall the brethren meet to share their allowance, and on certain days in the year they dine and sup together in common. The gateway is formed in a square stately tower, over which is a room called the founder's chamber. The north front of the tower is embellished with three niches, in one of which remains the effigy of Cardinal Beaufort in the act of adoration to another figure now destroyed. Beneath these, on each side of the gateway, are the arms of the cardinal, who is supposed to have built the gateway, refectory, master's house, all the lodgings on the west side of the court, and the porter's lodge. The whole east side of the court, from the porter's lodge to the north transept of the church, consists of a cloister, over which is a gallery or range of decayed apartments, supposed to be part of the lodging-rooms of the poor people on the original foundation of Henry de Blois, and who was probably in process of time forced out by the master and brethren of the later foundation, or by the decay of their lodging and revenues, which might have become no longer able to receive or support them. In the church are several ancient tombs, brasses, and epitaphs, chiefly of the masters and brethren." Grose's Antiquities.

Here is an infirmary for the county, erected in 1736, and supported by subscription. It was the first building of the kind in the kingdom. Here was formerly an hospital dedicated to St John, intended for relieving sick or lame soldiers, pilgrims, and wayfarers, who received food and lodging here for one or more nights. It was founded in 933 by St Brinistr, bishop of Winchester, and afterwards came into the hands of the Knights Templars. At the general dissolution it was given to the corporation, who use the great hall for public purposes. The chapel is used as a school-room, the master of which receives £22 per annum, from an endowment given in 1701 by William Over. Part of the building is used as almshouses for six poor widows. Near the cathedral are almshouses for 10 clergymen's widows, founded in 1672 by Bishop Morley.

Monastic Establishments.—There were many monastic establishments here, of which a short notice may be interesting. Hyde abbey, or the New Minster, is thus described by Grose:—"Alfred, king of the West Saxons, having brought over from Flanders the learned monk Grimbold, founded a house and chapel at Winchester for secular canons under his government. He afterwards projected a greater foundation, and by his will ordered a noble church and college to be founded on the north side of the cathedral; this was begun in 901, and finished by his son Edward, who dedicated it to the Holy Trinity, St Peter, and the Virgin Mary. It was called the New Minster, to distinguish it from the cathedral, or Old Minster, within the precincts of whose cemetery it stood. The building being completed, Edward placed therein secular canons, who remained here till the year 963, when they were expelled by Ethelwold, bishop of Winchester, (a great favourite of monks,) on account, as was pretended, of their scandalous lives, and an abbot and monks put in possession of the house. But many differences and inconveniences arising from the too near neighbourhood of these great monasteries, their bells, singing, and other matters mutually interfering with each other, the monks of New Minster thought it proper to remove to a place called Hyde, on the north side of the city, and to a small distance without its walls; where Henry I., at the instance of William Gifford, bishop of Winchester, founded a stately abbey for them. St Peter was generally accounted the patron, though it is sometimes called the monastery of St Grimbald, and sometimes of St Barnabas, and in Anglia Sacra, said to have been dedicated to St Peter, St Paul, and St Columbanus. From this time the monastery lost its title of the New Minster. The monks of this house were endowed with very considerable lands, privileges, and immunities, not only by their founder King Edward, but also by several of his successors, kings of England, namely, Athelstane, Edward, Edred, Edgar, Edmund Ironside, Edward the Confessor, William the Conqueror, and particularly Henry I. and Maud his queen, as may be seen in their charter in the Monasticon. It was likewise not without its misfortunes, for William the Conqueror, at his first coming, finding the abbot and twelve of his monks in arms against him, seized on their estates, and held them above two years; and in the reign of Stephen, they were so plundered and oppressed by Henry de Blois, his brother, then bishop of Winchester, that their number was reduced from forty to ten monks; this arose partly from his jealousy of their increasing wealth and power, and partly from a design of making them subservient to his intended project of raising the see of Winchester to an archbishopric, and the abbey of Hyde to a bishopric, which, with the diocese of Chichester, was to be subordinate to Winchester. This abbey was the burial place of divers princes and great personages; viz. King Edmund and his son Elfred, St Eadburgh, daughter of King Edward, Aelfred, son of Edulph, King Aelfred, and as some say, King Edred, notwithstanding there is an inscription for him in the cathedral of Winchester. Before the dissolution this monastery was valued at £865 1s. 6d. per annum; and the site was granted, 37th Henry VIII., to Richard Bethell. That this building was destroyed soon after the Reformation, appears from Leland, who, speaking of it, says, 'In the suburb stood the great abbey of Hyde, and hath yet a parochie church. This abbey was called Newen Minster, and stood in the close hard by St Swithin's, but when it was translated to Hyde it took the name of Hyde. The bones of Alfridas, king of the West Saxons, and of King Edward his son, and kind, were translated from Newen Minster and laid in a tomb before the high altar at Hyde; in which tomb were of late found two little tables of lead inscribed with their names; and here lay also the bones of St Grimbald and Indoece.' Of this once noble edifice very little remains, except the precinct walls, some out buildings towards the street, and a gateway, the mouldings of which exhibit on each side the head of a king; the same head occurs on a wall towards the south. The church, which was built of flint cased with square stone, appears, from traces of its walls, to have consisted of three aisles, and to have been at least 240 feet long; most of the buildings hereabout seem to have some materials of the abbey about them, and the tower of St Bartholomew is supposed to have been erected with stones collected from its ruins." The abbot of Hyde sat in parliament. Many interesting relics were lately exhumed from its site in digging the foundation of a new bridewell. Here was an abbey ded. to St Mary, founded by Alswitha, widow of King Alfred. The endowment was augmented by bishop Ethelwold, who placed here nuns of the order of St Benedict. At the dissolution its revenue was rated at £179 7s. 2d. In 1300, bishop Pontoyo founded a college ded. to St Elizabeth, for a provost, six chaplains, six clerks, and six choristers; at the dissolution its revenue was £112 17s. 4d. The hospital of St Mary Magdalene was founded by Edward I., it was rated at £42 16s. Here were various Augustine, Dominican, and other convents of lesser note. The residence of the bishops is thus described by Grose:—"Wolvesey-castle was a place belonging to the bishops of Winchester, situated at a small distance south-east of the cathedral, on a pleasant spot watered by a branch of the river Itching, and by some is supposed to be that where the Saxon kings had their residence. Its appellation of Wolvesey is said to have been derived from the Wolphan kings and the word Eye, signifying the corner of a meadow. This castle was erected A. D. 1138, by Henry de Blois, bishop of Winchester. Its ruins show it was a structure of considerable extent, and from the known magnificence of its founder, demonstrated in his other erections, there is reason to believe that it also was very elegant, though at present its remains scarcely exhibit the least trace of ornament, consisting mostly of the inner or groundwork part of the walls, stripped of the squared stones with which they were faced, clearly evincing that the hand of man has contributed more to its demolition than both the tooth of time and the injuries of the weather. It remained entire till the civil wars in the reign of Charles I., when it was plundered and demolished by the parliamentary army under Sir William Waller, who sold the lead and other saleable materials. The chapel still exists, and from its style seems to be more modern than the time of Henry de Blois. The time of its erection is unknown, but pretty high up, on the north side, a little to the eastward of the centre buttress, there is carved in alto relievo the head of a bishop with his mitre; this most probably was meant to represent the builder. That this chapel was part of the ancient structure is evidently apparent; two circular arches in a ruined stone wall, with which it is connected, are seen over the roof of a modern shed built up against it. The chapel measures in length 37 feet by 30 broad; it is lighted by three windows on the south side and one on the east; but it has neither painted glass, ancient monuments, nor inscriptions; if ever there were any of these articles, they in all likelihood did not escape the fury and mistaken zeal of the demolishers of the castle, and, indeed, the inside of this building seems to have undergone divers modern repairs, perhaps in consequence of depredations committed on it at that time; among which is being paved with black and white marble, done in all probability by bishop Morley when he built the present palace, which has given rise to the vulgar opinion that this chapel was erected by that prelate. Its communication with the palace is by a long gallery of 6 feet by 16 on the first story, out of which a door opens into a gallery containing the episcopal seat. This being the private chapel of the palace, divine service is not performed there except when the bishop is resident." Winchester gives the title of marquess to the Paulet family. It is 62 m. S.W. by W. from London.

WINCHFELD, a parish in the hundred of Odiham, Basingstoke division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a rectory, rated at £8 16s. 10d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. H. F. St John. Church ded. to St Mary. The parish is crossed by the Basingstoke canal. Distance from Odiham, 2½ m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 238; in 1831, 227. A. P., £1,552.

WINCHMORE-HILL, a chapelry in the parish and hundred of Edmonton, co. of Middlesex. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, and subordinate to the vicarage of Edmonton. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Society of Friends, have places of worship here. The chapel was erected at an expense of £5000, partly raised by subscription, and partly contributed by the parliamentary commissioners. Upwards of one-third of the sittings are free. The chapel is ded. to St Paul. Distance from London, 8 m. N. Pop. returned with the parish.

WINCKLEY, a parish in the hundred of North-Tawton and Winekley, co. of Devon. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter, rated at £21 8s. 9d., and in patronage of the dean and chapter of Salisbury. Church ded. to All Saints. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Here is an almshouse for poor widows, with an endowment. Fairs for cattle are held on the first Monday in August, and Michaelmas-day. Distance from Chulmleigh, 5½ m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 1214; in 1831, 1596. A. P., £4,327.

WINCKTON, a hamlet, formerly a borough, in the parish of Alfriston, rape of Pevensey, co. of Sussex. It is within the liberty of the duchy of Lancaster.

WINCLE, a township and chapelry in the parish of Kestbury, hundred of Macclesfield, co.-palatine of Chester. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester, not in charge, returned at £45, and subordinate to the vicarage of Prestbury. The chapel was erected in 1642. Distance from Macclesfield, 4½ m. S.E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 351; in 1831, 453. A. P., £2,585.

WINDALE, a parish in the hundred of Clavering, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged rectory, not in charge, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, and annexed to the rectory of Gillingham-All-Saints. Church ded. to St Andrew. Distance from Beccles, 2 m. N. by W. Pop. returned with Gillingham-All-Saints.

WINDEHAM, a place in the hundred of Windeham and Ewhurst, rape of Bramber, co. of Sussex. Here was an hospital ded. to St Edmund, and in the patronage of the crown.

WINDER, a township in the parish of Lampleigh, ward of Allerdale above Darwent, co. of Cumberland. It is 5½ m. E. by S. from Whitehaven. Pop., in 1801, 144; in 1831, with parish.

WINDER (Low), a township in the parish of Barton, West ward, co. of Westmoreland. Pop., in 1801, 12.

WINDER (High), a township in the parish of Barton, West ward, co. of Westmoreland. It is 5 m. S.S.W. from Penrith. Pop. returned with that of the parish.

WINDERMERE, a parish in the ward of Kendal, co. of Westmoreland. It comprises the chapelry of Troutbeck, and the townships of Appletwhaite and Under-Milbeck. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, rated at £24 6s. 8d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. Sir R. Fleming, Bart. The church is an ancient structure, ded. to St Martin, and containing a large and curious window of stained glass, which originally belonged to the abbey of Furness. Anciently this parish, like that of Grassmere, was part of the parish of Kendal, but in process of time it was made a separate parish. The large lake, called Windermere, is in the Appletwhaite division, and the islands are all in this parish. The rector hath from time immemorial had a pleasure-boat upon it; and he hath a prescription of so much a boat, in lieu of all the tithes fish that are caught in the lake. It contains the fish called char, which is said to be caught only here and in Conistone lake. A further description is given under Appletwhaite. Distance from Kendal, 9 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 1158; in 1831, 1682. A. P., £6,867.

WINDERTON, a hamlet in the parish of Brailes, co. of Warwick.

WINDERWATH, a hamlet in the parish of Clyburn, co. of Westmoreland.

WINDHAM AND EWHURST, a hundred in the rape of Bramber, co. of Sussex, near the centre of the county. It contains two parishes.

WINDLE, a township in the parish of Prescot, hundred of West Derby, co.-palatine of Lancaster. It contains the hamlets of Hardshaw and St Helens. It is 4 m. N.E. from Prescot. Pop., in 1801, 3252; in 1831, 5825. A. P., £14,534.

WINDLESHAM, a parish in the hundred of Woking, co. of Surrey. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester, rated at £10 9s. 7d., and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. The parish contains the township of Bagshot. Here is a mill, founded in the reign of Edward III., by an abbot of Chertsey, and burdened with a rent charge of £8, for the benefit of the poor of the parish. Pop., in 1801, 1060; in 1831, 1912. A. P., £4,184.

WINDLESTONE, a township in the parish of St-Andrews-Auckland, south-eastern division of the ward of Darlington, co.-palatine of Durham. Distance from Bishop-Auckland, 4 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 196; in 1831, 201. A. P., £1,532.

WINDLEY, a township in the parish of Duffield, hundred of Appletree, co. of Derby. This township is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas, held there every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. It is 6½ m. N.N.W. from Derby. Pop., in 1801, 186; in 1831, 204. A. P., £1,312.

WINDRIDGE, a ward in the parish of St Stephen, hundred of Cashio, co. of Hertford. Distance from St Alban's, 2 m. W.S.W. Pop. returned with that of the parish.

WINDRUSH, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Slaughter, co. of Gloucester. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £5, and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Sherborne. Church ded. to St Peter. Distance from North Leach, 5½ m. E. Pop., in 1801, 317; in 1831, 291. A. P., £2,015.

WINDSLEY, a township in the parish of Kirkby-Malzeard, lower division of the wapentake of Claro, W. R., co. of York. Distance from Ripley, 3 m. W.N.W. Pop. returned with Hartwith.

WINDSOR (NEW), a borough, market-town, and parish, locally situated in the hundred of Ripplesmere, co. of Berks. The ancient Saxon name was Windleshora, derived from its vicinity to the windings of the river Thames. The town stands in an agreeable situation, on the side of the same hill on which the royal palace of Windsor Castle is built. It contains many handsome houses, chiefly of brick, and the streets are well paved and lighted with gas. The neighbourhood is beautiful, especially along the banks of the Thames, and a portion of ground near the High-street is used as a place of public recreation. Here are extensive barracks. The infantry barracks, which were erected in 1795, are capable of containing 1000 men: those for cavalry, which are also extensive, stand near the road to Winkfield, about half a mile from the town. Here is a theatre, open during the Eton vacation and the Ascot races. Here are good public and subscription libraries. Wednesday and Saturday are market-days, when there are considerable dealings in corn; and fairs for horses, cattle, sheep, and wool, are held on Easter-Tuesday, July 5th, and August 24th. Here is a commodious market-place for provisions. The town is famous for ale, and much is sent to London. The river is navigable, but the place has little trade.

The town received its first charter of incorporation from Edward I., and continued the county town till 1314, when Edward II. conferred that distinction on Reading. The charter received its last modifications from Charles II., and is now governed under it by a mayor, a high-steward, two bailiffs, and 28 burgesses, with a town-clerk, sergeants-at-mace, and other officers. Ten of the burgesses are chosen aldermen, and from them the mayor is annually elected. The mayor and one alderman are justices within the borough, and hold courts of quarter session for all except capital offences. The mayor is also coroner and clerk of the market. The common gaol and house of correction is a small building, which was erected at the expense of George III. The guild-hall was built in 1686. On the front are statues of Queen Anne and Prince George of Denmark, and the council-chamber contains portraits of the kings of England, from James I. to George IV., with some other distinguished individuals. The town was made a borough in the 30th Edward I., but did not return members regularly to parliament till the 25th Henry IV., since which, till the passing of the reform act, the scot and lot payers regularly sent two members. By the passing of the reform bill, the number of electors has been increased to about 800. The mayor is the returning officer. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £15 3s. 4d., returned at £130, and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church is an elegant structure, in the later style of English architecture, ded. to St John the Baptist. The interior is remarkably handsome, and contains much curious carving, supposed to have been the work of the celebrated Gibbons. Above the altar is a painting of the Last Supper, found in St George's chapel, and given to this church by George III. in 1788. The erection of the church cost £14,040 17s. 3d., and it contains 600 free sittings. Here are some fine old monuments, which were carefully preserved on taking down the old church in 1820. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. Here is a charity school, in which 36 boys and 24 girls receive clothing and education, on an endowment of £167 4s. per annum, augmented by subscriptions and collections; the dean and two senior canons, the vicar, and the mayor and two aldermen, are trustees, and nominate the children. Here is a ladies' charity school, in which 20 girls are clothed and educated on an endowment of £56 7s. Here is a national school for 200 children of each sex. There are various minor benefactions for education; and £50 per annum, left by Archbishop Laud, is applied for two continuous years to the apprenticing of boys, and every third year, in giving marriage portions to poor maidens of this town. An equal sum arises from an estate bought with £1250, left by Theodore Randue, Esq., which is divided among those who participate in the above. An hospital for 12 poor people, each of whom receives 10s. a quarter, was founded and endowed in 1570 by Mr Thomas Brotherton, the endowment being augmented afterwards by Mr Richard Gallis. Here are also some other almshouses, with trifling or no endowments, a general dispensary, an hospital for invalid soldiers, a charity for the relief of lying-in women, and various other charitable institutions. This town gives the title of earl to the marquess of Bute. It is 20 m. E. by N. from Reading; and 22½ m. W. by S. from London. Pop., in 1801, 3361; in 1831, 7103. A. P., £14,938.

WINDSOR CASTLE, a royal palace in the above parish. The following spirited description of this noble structure is extracted from the Penny Magazine for June, 1833.

"On a hill which is somewhat precipitous to the north, but is of gentle ascent in other directions, stands the castle of Windsor, situated in Berkshire, about 22 miles from London. 'It enjoyeth,' says our old English topographer Camden, 'a most delightful prospect round about; for right in the front it overlooketh a vale, lying out far and wide, garnished with corn fields, flourishing with meadows, decked with groves on either side, and watered with the most mild and calm river Thames: behind it arise hills every where, neither rough nor over high, attired as it were with woods, and even dedicated as it were by nature to hunting and game.' The magnificent castle which crowns this eminence is associated with some of the most interesting events and persons in the history of our country. It has witnessed all the pomp of chivalry, and its courts have rang with the feasts and tournaments of the Edwards and Henries. Kings were born here, and here they are buried; and after every change of fashion and opinions, it is still the proudest residence of the sovereign of England, as it was seven centuries ago. The parliament, within these few years, has thought fit to bestow nearly £800,000 upon the complete repair of this castle. There is scarcely a point within a few miles distance where the castle of Windsor is not seen to great advantage. To the traveller upon the Bath road it presents its bold northern front, which comprises the longest continuous range of its buildings. On the road to Windsor, by Datchet, the eastern front, with its four grand towers, appears of itself to exceed most other edifices in magnitude. To the great park the southern front is displayed; and when this part is viewed from the extremity of the fine avenue called the Long Walk, nothing can appear more stately. In every situation the Round Tower rises above the other buildings, and arrests the eye by its surpassing dimensions. Burke has well characterized it as 'the proud keep of Windsor.' Sir John Denham, in his poem of Cooper's Hill, (an eminence overlooking Runnymede) describes the majestic appearance of Windsor in the quaint and exaggerated tone of the poetry of his day:—

"Such seems thy gentle height, made only proud To be the basis of that pompous load,
Than which a nobler weight no mountain bears
But Atlas only which supports the sphere."

The visitor to Windsor, upon turning up the street (Castle-street) which leads to the castle, will have the south front presented to him. The improvements that have been made in this part within the last few years are most striking. The road now leads boldly up to the castle; and the observer looks without interruption upon the rich woods of the adjacent parks. A very short time ago a number of contemptible buildings were scattered about the castle; and even the superb avenue, the Long walk, was deprived of its natural object—the object doubtless for which it was planted—that of forming a road to the principal entrance to the castle, by the avenue and the entrance being crossed by a large plastered house and offices called the Queen's Lodge. All these excrescences have been judiciously removed. The southern entrances to the castle are reserved for private use. The visitor will approach it through what is called the lower ward. He enters into this ward by a noble gateway, with two towers, built by Henry VIII. The first object which arrests his attention is the chapel of St George—a building unrivalled in England or in Europe, as a perfect specimen of that richly ornamented Gothic architecture which prevailed in the latter end of the 15th century and beginning of the 16th. Immediately to the east of this fine chapel is an ecclesiastical building of later erection, called Wolesey's tomb-house; which is now used as the dormitory of the royal family. The buildings opposite to St George's chapel are the residences of the decayed military officers, called the Poor Knights of Windsor. The bold tower which terminates this row of buildings, as well as the opposite tower called the Winchester, (from its being the residence of William of Wykeham, bishop of Winchester, the architect of the castle,) are the best preserved, without much change, of the more ancient parts of the whole fabric. On the right as he proceeds, the visitor looks down over a low battlemented wall, upon what was once the moat of the Round tower. It appears to have been in part a garden as long since as the time of James I. of Scotland, who was detained here for some time, and has celebrated this solace of his imprisonment in one of his poems. The tower itself rises in stern grandeur out of this depth. The mound upon which it is built is no doubt artificial. This immense tower has been considerably elevated within a few years, in common with many other parts of the castle. Proceeding through a gateway of two towers, whose low portal indicates its antiquity and its employment for defence, the visitor finds himself within the magnificent quadrangle of the palace. On the north are the state apartments, in which is included the celebrated hall of St George;—on the east and south the private apartments of the king and his court. Nothing can be more imposing than the general effect of this quadrangle. Every part is now of a uniform character. We look in vain for the narrow grated windows and pierced battlements of the time of feudal strife, when convenience was sacrificed to security. These characteristics of a martial age were swept away by Charles II.

who substituted the architectural style of the age of Louis XIV., than which nothing could have been in worse taste. In the recent alterations of the castle, the architect has most judiciously preserved the best characteristics of old English domestic architecture. Returning a short distance, the entrance to the terrace presents itself to the visitor. After descending a flight of steps, the scene is totally changed. A prospect, unrivalled in extent and beauty, bursts upon the sight. Few persons can look upon this scene without emotion. The eye delightfully wanders over the various features of this remarkable landscape. It traces the Thames gliding tranquilly and brilliantly along, through green and shadowy banks—sometimes presenting a broad surface, and sometimes escaping from observation in its sudden and capricious windings;—it ranges as far as the distant hills—it counts the numerous turrets and spires of the neighbouring villages—or it reposes upon the antique grandeur of Eton college. Gray has beautifully described this magnificent prospect in well-known lines:—

— “ From the stately brow
Of Windsor's heights th' expanse below
Of grove, of lawn, of mead survey, Whose turf, whose shade, whose flowers among Wanders the hoary Thames along His silver winding way.”

The north side of the terrace is constantly open to the public; and this is by far the finest part. To the eastern side, admittance is only granted on Saturdays and Sundays.

“ The earliest history of Windsor Castle, like that of many other ancient buildings, is involved in some obscurity. It is doubtful whether in the time of William the Conqueror, and of his son Rufus, it was used as a residence; but it was certainly then a military post. At Old Windsor, a village about a mile and a half from the present castle, there was a Saxon palace, which was occasionally inhabited by the kings of England. Henry I. held his court there in 1105 and 1107; but having enlarged the adjacent castle with ‘ many fair buildings,’ he, according to the Saxon chronicle, kept the festival of Whitsuntide there in 1110. In the time of Stephen, the castle, according to Holiingshead's Chronicle, was esteemed the second fortress in the kingdom. Henry II. and his son held two parliaments there. Upon the news of his brother Richard's imprisonment in the Holy Land, John took possession of the castle; and after his accession to the throne remained there as a place of security, during his contests with the barons. Holiingshead says, that the barons, having refused to obey the summons of the king to attend him in his own castle, he gave them the meeting at Runnemede, which ended in the signature of Magna Charta. The fortress sustained several changes of masters during the wars between the crown and the nobility, which broke out again in the reign of John, and of Henry III. Windsor castle was the favourite place of residence of Edwards I. and II., and here Edward III. was born. During the long reign of this monarch, the castle, according to its present magnificent plan, was commenced, and in great part completed. The history of the building furnishes in many respects a curious picture of the manners of the feudal ages.

“ At a period when no man's possessions were thoroughly assured to him by equal laws,—when the internal peace of kingdoms was distracted by the pretensions of rival claimants to sovereignty,—and when foreign wars were undertaken, not for the assertion of national honour or the preservation of national safety, but at the arbitrary will of each warlike holder of a throne, personal valour was considered the highest merit; and the great were esteemed, not for their intellectual acquirements and their moral virtues, but for their gallantry in the tournament and their ferocity in the battle field. Amongst the legends of the old chroniclers and romance writers (and there was originally small difference in the two characters), the most favourite was the story of King Arthur and his Knights of the Round Table. Froissart, the most amusing of chroniclers, says, that Windsor was the seat of the solemnities of the Round Table in the sixth century; and later historians affirm that Edward III. in a solemn just (tournament) held at Windsor in the 18th year of his reign, revived the institution. Walsingham the historian states, that upon this occasion Edward built a round chamber 200 feet in diameter, for the deliberations and festivals of the companions in arms that he gathered about him. This strange house was itself called the Round Table. It is probable that it was a temporary structure; for, within a short time after, various commissions for appointing surveyors and impressing workmen were issued; and in 1356, William of Wykeham, then one of the king's chaplains, was appointed architect of the various buildings which Edward's taste for magnificent display had projected. In one year 360 workmen were impressed, to be employed at the king's wages. Some of them having left Windsor to engage in other employments for greater wages, writs were issued for their committal to prison, and to prohibit all persons from engaging them under severe penalties. Such were the modes in which the freedom of industry was violated before the principles of commercial intercourse were fairly established. Had workmen been at liberty to engage with whom they pleased there would have been no want of workmen for the completion of Windsor castle, or any other public or private undertaking. The capital to be applied to the payment of wages, and the workmen seeking the capital, would have been equally balanced. Impressments of various artificers appear to have gone on for the same object till the year 1373, after which there are no records of more commissions being issued. It is probable, therefore, that this immense work was completed, as far as Edward III. had contemplated, in about 17 years from its commencement. Before it had been begun, Edward had founded the order of the Garter; and during its progress, and after its completion, the festivals of this institution were celebrated at Windsor with every pomp of regal state. Knights-strangers were several times invited from all parts of the world, with letters of safe-conduct to pass and repass the realm; and one of these festivals is particularly described by the chroniclers as exceeding all others in splendour, which was given in honour of John, king of France, who was then a prisoner at Windsor. John, who appears to have been a shrewd observer, is recorded to have said, that he never knew such royal shows and feastings without some after-reckoning for gold and silver.

"Edward III. erected at Windsor a chapel dedicated to St George, for the especial service of the order of the Garter; but the present beautiful chapel is of later date. It was begun by Edward IV., who found it necessary to take down the original fabric on account of its decayed state. The work was not completed till the beginning of the reign of Henry VIII. So beautiful a monument of architectural skill could not have been hurried forward as the ruder buildings of the castle were.

"With the exception of occasional high pageantries on the festival of St George, Windsor Castle does not appear to have been the scene of many public solemnities after the reign of its chivalrous founder. Richard II., however, heard here the appeal of high treason brought by the duke of Lancaster against the duke of Norfolk. But it was often the favourite country residence of our kings; several of whom, particularly Henry VII., continued to make various additions and improvements. Elizabeth built the north terrace, and a gallery, still called after her name, and retaining the peculiar style of the architecture of her day. We have seen some original orders for various repairs of the castle, which show how little private accommodation was regarded in these days of public pageantry. The maids of honour requested to have the boarded partitions of their chambers carried up to the ceilings, as the pages could otherwise gaze in upon them, as they passed through the passages. There can be no doubt that an English palace of the 15th and 16th centuries had much fewer comforts than the most unpretending dwelling of a tradesman of the present day. The furniture was scanty and cumbrous; the linen was exceedingly scarce; of porcelain there was none; of glass scarcely any. The floors were covered with dirty rushes; the doors had crazy fastenings. Henry VIII. carried a smith about with him, with padlock and chain, to fasten 'the door of his Highness' chamber;' and the cost and quality of the various materials for a new gown which the same king presented to Anne Boleyn, are recorded with a minuteness and solemnity which the humblest servant-maid would now scorn to bestow upon her finest holiday suit.

"Windsor castle was garrisoned by the parliament during the great civil war of Charles I.; and it was the last prison of that unfortunate monarch. Upon the restoration, Charles II. bestowed upon the castle the doubtful honour of repairing it according to his foreign taste. We have no accurate records of what he destroyed; but the probability is, that in remodeling the interior he swept away some of the most valuable memorials that existed of the style of living amongst his predecessors. St George's hall was covered with paintings by Verrio, as were the ceilings of all the other state apartments; and truly nothing can be more disgusting than the nauseous flattery and bad taste of these productions. Most of the miserable improvements, as they were called, of this king, have been swept away from the exterior of the castle; and, in many particulars, from the interior. St George's hall is once more a Gothic room, such as the 'invincible knights of old' might have feasted in. Charles II., however, carried the terrace round the east and south fronts.

"Queen Anne frequently resided at Windsor. In the reigns of the first and second Georges, it was neglected. George III. dwelt for many years in a white-washed house at the foot of his own palace; till at length he determined to occupy the old castle. The apartments were little adapted to the notions of modern comfort, but the royal family continued to reside here till the death of the king. George IV. inhabited the castle as it was, for a few months in 1823; but in 1824, its general decay and want of accommodation were brought under the notice of parliament. Commissioners were appointed for superintending the alterations, and a large sum was voted for the first outlay. Mr Wyattville (now Sir Jeffery) was appointed the architect; and from that time till the present, the works have been carried on with unremitting diligence. Little now remains for the completion of the architect's noble design.

"It does not fall within the object of this article to give any minute description of the interior of Windsor castle. The apartments of the king and his court are as numerous as they are splendid. Round the east and south sides of the quadrangle runs a corridor, forming a magnificent gallery above, and connecting the various parts of the immense range of offices below. The principal floor of this corridor is superbly furnished with pictures and statues. The chief apartments of the king and queen are in the south-eastern tower, and the eastern front. The dining, drawing, and music rooms are of extraordinary dimensions, forming that fine suite whose grand oriel windows look out upon the eastern terrace. They are connected, at the north-eastern angle, with the state apartments, some of which, particularly St George's hall, are used on occasions of high festival.

"The state apartments are exhibited daily to the public. Several of them have been completely remodelled, under the parliamentary commission for the repairs of the castle. The guard-room is now fitted up with great appropriateness: one of the most remarkable objects is a bust of Lord Nelson, having for its pedestal a portion of the mainmast of the Victory, his own ship, on the deck of which he gloriously fell. St George's hall, as we mentioned before, has been entirely purified from the productions of the false taste of the time of Charles II. An adjoining chapel has been added to the original hall; so that it is now an oblong room of vast length, with a range of tall pointed-arch windows looking upon the square. Its walls, panelled with dark oak, are hung with the portraits of successive sovereigns of the Order of the Garter; and heraldic insignia of the ancient knights are borne on shields which surround the splendid room. Of the other new state apartments, the principal are the ball-room, glittering with burnished gold; and the Waterloo gallery, in which are hung the fine series of portraits painted by Sir Thomas Lawrence, of the princes, warriors, and statesmen, who were instrumental in forwarding that great victory.

"The remaining state apartments are pretty much in the same condition as they exhibited during the reign of George III. They present an assemblage of such objects as are usually shown in our palaces and noble mansions. Here are state beds, whose faded hangings have been carefully preserved from periods when silk and velvet were the exclusive possessions of the high-born; chairs of ebony, whose weight compelled the sitter to remain in the place of the seat; and tables of silver, fine to look upon, but worthless to use. Here are also the gaudy ceilings of Verrio, where Charles II. and his queen are humbly waited upon by Jupiter and Neptune; and the profligate who sold his country to Louis XIV. for a paltry bribe, and degraded the English court by every vice, is represented as the pacificator of Europe, and the restorer of religion. But there are better things to be seen than these in the state apartments. There are many pictures of great beauty, and several of transcendent excellence. Here is the celebrated 'Misers' of Quentin Matsys, painted, as it is said, by a blacksmith of Antwerp, as a proof of his pretensions to aspire to marry the daughter of a painter of the same place. The blacksmith, however, was no mean artist in other lines; for he is said to have executed the iron tomb of Edward IV. in St George's chapel—a most remarkable specimen of elaborate ingenuity. Here is the 'Titian and Arcton,' one of the finest specimens of the great master of the Venetian school; the 'Death of Cleopatra,' and the 'Venus attired by the Graces,' of Guido; the 'Charles I. and the duke of Hamilton,' and 'the Family of Charles I.' of Vandeyck; and 'the Silence' of Annibal Caracci. These are paintings, with many others that we cannot afford space to mention, which the best judges of art may come from the ends of Europe to gaze upon. Those who are captivated by gaudy colours, applied to the representation of meretricious charms, may gaze upon 'the Beauties of the Court of Charles II.'

"The Round Tower is also exhibited to the public. There is nothing very remarkable in the apartments, except in the armoury, where there are some curious specimens of the cumbersome fire-arms that were carried by the infantry in the early days of gunpowder warfare, when matches held the place of flints, and the charge of powder was borne in little wooden boxes, hung about the shoulders. Here are two suits of mail, said to have belonged to John, king of France, and David, king of Scotland, who were prisoners in this tower. The legend is appropriate, but not trustworthy.

"The object at Windsor which is most deserving the lingering gaze of the stranger, and which loses none of its charms after the acquaintance of years, is St George's Chapel. The exquisite proportions, and the rich yet solemn ornaments of the interior of this unrivalled edifice, leave an effect upon the mind which cannot be described. The broad glare of day displays the admirable finishing of its various parts, as elaborate as the joinery work of a cabinet, and yet harmonising in one massive and simple whole. The calm twilight does not abate the splendour of this building, while it adds to its solemnity; for then catches the last rays of the setting sun; and as the cathedral chaunt steals over the senses, the genius of the place compels the coldest heart to be devout in a temple of such perfect beauty. The richly decorated roof, supported on clustered columns, which spread on each side like the branches of a grove—the painted windows, representing in glowing colours some remarkable subjects of Christian history—the banners and escutcheons of the Knights of the Garter, glittering in the choir above their carved stalls, within which are affixed the armorial bearings of each Knight Companion from the time of the Founder, Edward III.;—all these objects are full of interest, and powerfully seize upon the imagination. Though this building and its decorations are pre-eminently beautiful, it is perfectly of a devotional character; and if any thing were wanting to carry the thoughts above the earth, the observer must feel the vanity of all greatness and all honour, save the true and imperishable glory of virtue, when he here treads upon the graves of Edward IV. and Henry VI., of Henry VIII. and Charles I., and remembers that, distinguished as these monarchs were for contrasts of good and evil fortune, the pride and the humility, the triumphs and the degradations of the one and the other, are blended in the grave—

"Together meet th' oppressor and th' oppress'd"— and they are now judged, as they wanted or exhibited those Christian excellencies which the humblest amongst us may attain.

"There are not many monuments possessing merit as works of art in St George's Chapel. The cenotaph of Princess Charlotte is a performance of some excellence in particular figures; but, as a whole, it is in vicious taste. Edward IV. is buried here, beneath the steel tomb of Quentin Matsys; his unhappy rival, Henry VI. lies in the opposite aisle, under a plain marble stone. Henry VIII. and Charles I. are entombed under the choir, without any memorial. At the foot of the altar is a subterranean passage communicating with the tomb-house, in which is the cemetery of the present race of kings.

"The Round Tower, the ancient keep of the castle, is famous in the romance of history as the prison, for many years, of King James I. of Scotland, a true, as well as a royal poet. The youth of this prince was passed in the castle of St Andrews, under the care of one of the finest spirits of that age, Bishop Henry Wardlaw, who founded the oldest university of Scotland. In 1405, when James had reached the age of fourteen, being then, by the death of his elder brother, David, duke of Rothsay, the heir to the crown, it was determined to send him, for greater security, to the court of France. On his voyage, however, although a truce then subsisted between England and Scotland, he was seized near Flamborough Head by the ships of Henry IV., and carried with all his attendants to London. He remained in captivity during all the reign of that king, and also throughout that of his successor, although he had become king of Scotland by the death of his father, Robert III., who died of a broken heart, about a year after thus losing his only remaining son. During this prolonged detention, James, although treated with the show of respect appertaining to his rank, appears to have been, for a considerable time at least, held in strict durance. He was confined for two years in the Tower of London; but Windsor, according to tradition, was the place in which his years of captivity were mostly spent. This at least is the spot upon which his love and genius have left their immortal light. It was while imprisoned here, that, looking from his high window in the keep, he first beheld walking in the garden below, the Lady Jane Beaufort, the grand-daughter of John of Gaunt, and consequently a near relation of the royal house. This lady, who was a person of distinguished beauty, made an immediate impression on the heart of the captive prince. He has himself related the story of his passion, in his poem called the King's Quhair."

To this long extract we have to add the following particulars respecting the chapel of St George, from the works of Bishop Tanner and Mr Grose:—"In the castle here," says Tanner, "was an old free chapel, dedicated to King Edward the Confessor, in which King Henry I. placed eight secular priests, who seem never to have been incorporated, nor endowed with lands, but to have been maintained with pensions paid yearly out of the king's exchequer. And in the park here, was, in the beginning of King Edward II.'s reign, a royal chapel for 13 chaplains and four clerks, who had yearly salaries out of the manors of Langley-Mark and Sippenham, in the county of Buckingham. King Edward III., in the fourth year of his reign, removed those chaplains and clerks out of the park into the castle, and shortly after added four more chaplains and two clerks to them. But this victorious prince, being afterwards desirous of raising this place of his nativity to much greater splendour, refounded this ancient free chapel royal, and, in 1352, established it as a collegiate church, to the honour of the Virgin Mary, St George, and St Edward, King and Confessor, consisting of a custos—since called a dean—12 great canons, or prebendaries, 13 vicars, or minor canons, four clerks, six choristers, 26 poor alms-knights, besides other officers; their yearly revenues were rated, 28th Henry VIII., at £1002 2s. 1d. This free chapel was particularly excepted out of the act for suppressing colleges, &c., 1st Edward VI., and still subsists in a flourishing condition." The chapel is situated in the lower court. "This ancient structure, which is in the purest style of Gothic (English) architecture, was first erected by Edward III., in the year 1337, soon after the foundation of the college for the honour of the order of the garter, and ded. to St George, the patron of England; but however noble the first design might be, King Edward IV. not finding it entirely completed, enlarged the present structure, and designed the present building, together with the houses of the dean and canons, situated on the north and west sides of the chapel. The work was afterwards carried on by Henry VII., who finished the body of the chapel, and Sir Reginald Bray, knight of the garter, and favourite of the king, assisted in ornamenting the chapel and completing the roof. The architecture of the interior has always been admired for its neatness and great beauty; and, in particular, the stone roof is reckoned an excellent piece of workmanship. It is an ellipsis, supported by Gothic pillars, whose groins and ribs sustain the whole ceiling, every part of which has some different device, well finished; as the arms of Edward the Confessor, Edward III., Henry VI., Edward IV., Henry VII., and Henry VIII.; also the arms of England and France quartered. In a chapel in the south aisle is represented in ancient paintings, the history of St John the Baptist; and, in the same aisle, are painted on large panels of oak, neatly carved and decorated with the devices peculiar to each prince, the portraits, at full length, of Prince Edward, son to Henry VI., Edward IV., Edward V., and Henry VII. In the north aisle is a chapel ded. to St Stephen, wherein the history of that saint is painted on the panels, and well preserved. In the first of these panels St Stephen is represented preaching to the people; in the second, he is before Herod's tribunal; in the third, he is stoning; and, in the fourth, he is represented dead. At the east end of this aisle is the chapter-house of the college, in which is a full-length portrait, by a masterly hand, of the victorious Edward III. in his robes of state, holding in his right hand a sword, and bearing the crowns of France and Scotland, in token of the many victories he gained over those nations. On one side of this painting is kept the sword of that great and warlike prince. But what appears most worthy of notice is the choir. On each side are the stalls of the sovereign and knights companions of the most noble order of the garter, with the helmet, mantling, crest, and sword of each knight, set up over his stall, on a canopy of ancient carving, curiously wrought, and over the canopy is affixed the banner or arms of each knight, properly blazoned on silk; and on the back of the stalls are the titles of the knights, with their arms neatly engraved and blazoned in copper. The sovereign's stall is on the right hand of the entrance into the choir, and is covered with purple velvet and cloth of gold, and has a canopy and complete furniture of the same valuable materials; his banner is likewise of velvet, and his mantling of cloth of gold. The prince's stall is on the left, and has no distinction from those of the other knights companions; the whole society, according to the statutes of the institution, being companions and colleagues, equal in honour and power. The altar-piece was, soon after the restoration, adorned with cloth of gold and purple damask, by King Charles II., but on removing the wainscot of one of the chapels in 1707, a fine painting of the Lord's Supper was found, which being approved of by Sir James Thornhill, Verrio, and other eminent masters, was repaired and placed on the altar-piece. Near the altar is the queen's gallery, for the accommodation of the ladies at an installation. In a vault under the marble pavement of this choir, are interred the bodies of Henry VIII. and Jane Seymour his queen, King Charles I., and a daughter of Queen Anne. In the south aisle, near the door of the choir, is buried Henry VI., and the arch near which he was interred, was sumptuously decorated by Henry VIII. with the royal ensigns and other devices, but they are now much defaced by time. In this chapel is also the monument of Edward, earl of Lincoln, lord-high-admiral of England in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, erected by his lady, who is also interred with him: the monument is of alabaster, with pillars of porphyry. Another, within a neat screen of brass work, is erected to the memory of Charles Somerset, earl of Worcester, and knight of the garter, who died in 1526, and his lady, daughter to William, earl of Huntingdon. A stately monument of white marble, erected to the memory of Henry Somerset, duke of Beaufort, and knight of the garter, who died in 1699. There are here also tombs of Sir George Manners, Lord Roos, that of the Lord Hastings, chamberlain to Edward IV.; and several others." This chapel, having been used by James II. as a popish chapel, was ravaged by the populace, who destroyed the decorations and windows, and it continued in a dilapidated condition till George III. ordered it to be repaired. Under the choir has been constructed a mausoleum for the royal family. In this have been buried Princess Amelia, the dutchess of Brunswick, Princess Charlotte and her infant, Queen Charlotte, the duke of Kent, George III., the Princess Elizabeth of Clarence, the duke of York, George IV., and Princes Alfred and Octavian. Windsor palace is distant from London 22 m. W. by S.

WINDSOR (OLD), a parish in the hundred Ripplesmere, co. of Berks. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £8 6s. 8d., and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Mary. Many persons of rank have been interred in the churchyard, to whom some handsome monuments have been erected; here also lie the remains of Mrs Frances Sheridan and Mrs Mary Robinson, both distinguished authoresses. Here is a female school of industry, and the parochial school, erected in 1797, has an annual income from land. Here are four cottages, given as residences for indigent persons. The parish is crossed by the Roman road from Silchester. It is said that during the Saxon heptarchy this was the seat of a palace. It is mentioned in Domesday book as having been a royal demesne from the time of the Confessor, and at the Conquest it came into possession of William the Conqueror. Distance from New Windsor, 2 m. S.E. by E. It contains the hamlet of Coworth. Pop., in 1801, 669; in 1831, 1453. A. P., £5,986.

WINESTEAD, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of Holderness, E. R., co. of York. Living, a rectory in the archd. of the E. R. and dio. of York, rated at £12, and, in 1829, in patronage of T. B. Hildyard, Esq. The church is an ancient structure ded. to St German, and consists of a nave, a chancel, and a sepulchral chapel on the south side. The west end has a large pointed window of five lights, with trefoil heads and perpendicular tracery in the sweep. The chapel is stuccoed and has two immense buttresses, and the east end of the chancel had formerly a pointed window of three lights with trefoil heads, now filled up. Between the nave and chancel is a screen of five pointed arches with perpendicular tracery. On the floor of the chancel are two large slabs, one has the brass figure of a lady, the other of a knight; half of the latter is gone. Beneath are the effigies of six boys and six girls, kneeling. A pointed arch between the chapel and nave rests on attached octagonal columns. Before the entrance to this chapel, and almost filling up the space, are three monuments. The first, on the floor of the nave, is the effigy of an ecclesiastic, his hands joined in prayer, and above his head are the remains of a crocketed canopy. Behind this is a handsome altar tomb, much disfigured with paint. On the dado are panels containing shields of arms, with foliage between, and small basso relievo figures at each end. On the table is the recumbent effigy of Sir Charles Hildyard, Knight, in plate armour, his head resting on a mat rolled up and his feet against a cock. His hands are joined in prayer, and on his left side is a sword. Adjoining this monument is a low altar tomb without any inscription. In the chapel is a font, a modern basin of wood on a circular pedestal. Here are also several tablets to the family of Hildyard, including Sir Robert Hildyard, Bart., born July 10th, 1716., and died February 1st, 1781, and Sir R. D'Arcy Hildyard, Bart., died 1814, aged 71. The vaults of this family, consisting of 27 cells, are situated on the west side of the chancel. Sir Robert de Hilton founded a chantry here in 1347. On the outside of the walls to the east of the south window of this erection, next to the modern vault of the Hildyards, is a shield bearing the arms of Hilton, carved in stone; and on the other side of the same window is a shield bearing the arms of Hildyard, carved in the same manner. Winestead-hall is an elegant mansion, the seat of J. Moyser, Esq. Winestead-house belongs to A. Maister, Esq. The manor came into possession of the Hildyard family in the reign of Richard II. Sir Robert D'Arey Hildyard, the last Baronet, dying in 1814 without issue, bequeathed his estate to his niece, Anne Catherine Whyte, who married, in 1815, Thomas Thornton, of Flintham-house, Notts, who, in compliance with Sir Robert's will, assumed the name and arms of Hildyard. Distance from Patrington, 2 m. N.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 103; in 1831, 145. A. P., £3,016.

WINFARTHING, a parish in the hundred of Diss, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £12, and, in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Albemarle. Church ded. to St Mary. It is 4 m. N. from Diss. Pop., in 1801, 565; in 1831, 703. A. P., £3,614.

WINFIELD, a township in the parish and hundred of Wrotham, lathe of Aylesford, co. of Kent.

WINFORD, a parish in the hundred of Hartcliffe and Bedminster, co. of Somerset. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £21 12s. 11d., and in patronage of the rector and fellows of Worcester college, Oxford. Church ded. to St Mary and St Peter. The parish contains the tythings of Felton, Regil, and Winford. It is 6½ m. S.W. by S. from Bristol. Pop., in 1801, 641; in 1831, 865. A. P., £4,031.

WINFORD-EAGLE, a parish in the hundred of Tollerford, Dorchester division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, and annexed to the vicarage of Toller-Fratrum. Church ded. to St Lawrence. This was the birth-place of the celebrated Dr Thomas Sydenham. The parish receives the adjunct to the name from its having been formerly held of the Honor de Aquila; Pevensy-castle being the head thereof. On Farnham-down are several tumuli or barrows, one of which was opened some time ago, when 17 urns, containing bones and ashes, were brought to light. Distance from Dorchester, 8 m. N.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 149; in 1831, 134. A. P., £2,414.

WINFORTON, a parish in the hundred of Huntingdon, co. of Hereford. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford, rated at £9 6s. 8d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the heirs of the late John Freeman, Esq. Church ded. to St Mary. Here is a charity school, founded and endowed by the late John Freeman, Esq. The lord of the manor holds an occasional court-leet. The parish is crossed by the public road from Kington to Hay, and is distant from the latter 6 m. N.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 179; in 1831, 158. A. P., £3,007.

WINFRITH, a hundred in the Blandford division of the co. of Dorset, containing 8 parishes. It is situated on the south side of the county.

WINFRITH-NEWBURGH, a parish in the above hundred, to which it gives name. It is of great extent, and formerly contained a residence of the family of Newburgh, to whom the manor belongs, but of which no traces now exist. Living, a rectory, to which is annexed the curacy of West Lullworth, in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £23 14s. 4½d., and in patronage of the bishop of Salisbury. The church, which presents some interesting remains of Norman architecture, is ded. to St Christopher. Here are the hamlets of Bromhill, Burton, Foreshill, Knighton, Lacotes, Bindon, Burngate, and Hamburgh. Over a rivulet near Bromhill are three bridges. Here is a small school erected and supported by subscription. It is 8 m. W. by S. from Wareham. Pop., in 1801, 569; in 1831, 891. A. P., £1,842.

WING, or WENGE, a parish in the hundred of Cottesloe, co. of Buckingham. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Bucks and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £18 16s. 3d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Chesterfield. The church is an elegant building ded. to All Saints. The Wesleyan Methodists have here a place of worship. Here are almshouses for eight poor persons, founded in 1596, and endowed with £30 per annum, by Lady Pelham, to which an annuity of £6 10s. was bequeathed in 1772, by Sir Wm. Stanhope. This parish contains the hamlets of Ascot, Bureot, Cottesloe, and Crofton. The petty-sessions for the hundred are held here. "The church and other lands here having been given by the Empress Matilda to the monastery of St Nicholas, at Angiers in France, a cell of Benedictine monks from thence settled at a hamlet in this parish, since called Ascot. After the parliament had dissolved the alien priories, 4th Henry V., this was granted to the prioress and nuns de Pratis, near St Albans, which was suppressed by Cardinal Wolsey, in order to be annexed to his commendatory abbey of St Alban, but he afterwards getting a grant of it for himself, upon his attainder, this manor and rectory were given, 23d Henry VIII., to John Pen, and 35th Henry VIII. were granted as parcel of the late abbey of St Alban, to Sir Robert Dormer." Tanner's Not. Mon. It is 4 m. S.W. by W. from Leighton-Buzzard. Pop., in 1801, 993; in 1831, 1052. A. P., £9,607.

WING, a parish in the hundred of Martinsley, co. of Rutland. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £7 5s. 5d., and in patronage of the lord-chancellor, or marquess of Exeter. Church ded. to St Peter and St Paul. It is 4 m. N.E. by E. from Uppingham. Pop., in 1801, 246; in 1831, 307. A. P., £1,795.

WINGATE, or WINDEGATE-GRANGE, a township in the parish of Kelloe, southern division of the ward of Darlington, co.-palatine of Durham. It is 6½ m. E.S.E. from Durham. Pop., in 1801, 135; in 1831, 115. A. P., £2,044.

WINGATES, a township in the parish of Long Horsley, western division of the ward of Morpeth, co. of Northumberland. It comprises the hamlets of Chirm, Garrootee, Wholm, and Wingates-Moon. Here is a school in which five children are educated on a small endowment, given in 1816, by Peter Silcock. It is 9 m. N.N.W. from Morpeth. Pop., in 1801, 155; in 1831, 163.

WINGERWORTH, a parish in the hundred of Scarsdale, co. of Derby. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £16, returned at £62 15s., and in patronage of the dean and chapter of Lincoln. Here is a handsome mansion called Wingerworth-hall, erected in 1728, on the site of a more ancient structure which had been garrisoned on the part of the parliament in 1643. Coal, ironstone, and freestone are found in abundance here. Here is a school with a revenue of about £20, for which 20 children receive education. The parish is crossed by the Ikfield-street. It is 2½ m. S. by W. from Chesterfield. Pop., in 1801, 500; in 1831, 471. A. P., £3,240.

WINGFIELD, a hamlet in the parish of Chalgrove, co. of Bedford.

WINGFIELD, a township in the parish of Wrotham, co. of Kent.

WINGFIELD, a parish in the hundred of Hoxne, co. of Suffolk. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, not in charge, returned at £50. Patron, the bishop of Norwich. The church is a handsome edifice of high antiquity, constructed of flints and stone, and ded. to St Andrew. It contains a beautiful chancel, in which are some splendid monuments and brasses to various members of the Wingfield and De la Pole families. Here was anciently a castle, built by Michael de la Pole, first earl of Suffolk, in the reign of Richard II. The south front yet remains; the north has been converted into a farm house. The whole is surrounded by a moat. "The Lady Eleanor, relict of Sir John Wingfield, and Thomas Wingfield, brother to the said Sir John, being his executors, in performance of his desire and intents, procured, A. D. 1362, the parish church of this place to be made collegiate, for a provost, or master, and several priests, at first only three, but afterwards increased to nine priests and three choristers. It was ded. to St Mary, St John the Baptist, and St Andrew, and was valued, 26th Henry VIII., at £69 14s. 5d. per annum. After the dissolution it became part of an augmentation which King Edward VI. made to the bishop of Norwich." Tanner's Not. Mon. The west side of the quadrangle of this college yet remains, on the south side of the church, having been converted into a farm house. Distance from Eye, 5½ m. E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 521; in 1831, 668. A. P., £3,791.

WINGFIELD, or WINKFIELD, a parish in the hundred of Bradford, co. of Wilts. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £21 6s. 3d. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. E. Spencer. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Trowbridge, 2 m. W.S. W. Pop., in 1801, 290; in 1831, 288. A. P., £3,050.

WINGFIELD (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of Scarsdale, co. of Derby. It comprises the townships of Claylane, Stretton, Tupton, and Woodthorpe. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £21 6s. 3d. Patron, in 1829, R. Collet, Esq. The church is a handsome structure, ded. to St Laurence. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. This parish is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and is subject to a court of pleas held there every third Tuesday for the recovery of debts under 40s. Here is a school with a small endowment. In Stretton is a school in which 25 children are educated, on an endowment of £15 15s. per annum. The parish is crossed by the ancient Roman road called Ikfield street, and is 4½ m. S.S.E. from Chesterfield. Pop., in 1801, 240; in 1831, 256; total in 1831, 1691: the other returns are given under the several townships. A. P., £1,974.

WINGFIELD (SOUTH), a parish in the hundred of Scarsdale, co. of Derby. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £6 13s. 4d. Patron, in 1829, the duke of Devonshire. Church ded. to All Saints. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. A considerable number of the inhabitants are employed in the weaving of stockings, the trade in which has been advancing rapidly. Coal is found here, and the parish is crossed by the Ikfield street. Here is a school endowed with £20 per annum, arising from land bought with £200 bequeathed in 1638 by Samuel Newton. At Okertorpe is an estate left for charitable purposes by Mr Strelley, and yielding £55 per annum, of which £20 are employed in apprenticing poor boys, and £10 in assisting two poor scholars in the universities. Here are the interesting ruins of the manor house, which was originally built by Ralph, Lord Cromwell, in the reign of Henry VI. It afterwards was a seat of the earls of Shrewsbury; and here Mary, Queen of Scots, lived some months in 1569. During the parliamentary war this building was a post of some importance; at first in the hands of the parliament, it was taken in 1643 by the earl of Newcastle, but was retaken after a siege the following year, and in 1646 it was dismantled by order of the parliament. In 1774 it sustained a farther demolition. Distance from Alfreton, 2 m. W. Pop., in 1801, 898; in 1831, 1091. A. P., £4,877.

WINGHAM, a hundred in the lathe of St Augustine, co. of Kent, containing 5 parishes.

WINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of Wingham, lathe of St Augustine, co. of Kent. Living, a perpetual curacy, rated at £46 10s., returned at £100, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the archbishop of Canterbury. Patron, in 1829, Sir H. Oxenden, Bart. Church ded. to St Mary. The Independents have a place of worship here. This was formerly a market town, but the market has fallen into disuse. Fairs for cattle are held on May 12th and November 12th, and are very well attended. The high road from Canterbury to Deal passes through the parish, and in the vicinity there are many handsome houses. There are held the petty sessions for the division. William de Wragham, bishop of London, and lord-chancellor in the reign of Henry III., was born here. "A college of a provost and six secular canons, in the parish church of St Mary here, was intended by archbishop Kilwardby, but actually settled and endowed by his successor, John Peckham, archbishop of Canterbury, in 1286. The whole revenue was valued at £65 1s. 8d. per annum, the clear at £33 6s. 8d.; but Leland saith it was able to dispense at the suppression £84 per annum. The site was granted, 7th Edward VI., to Sir Thomas Palmer.—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from London, 6 m. E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 844; in 1831, 1115. A. P., £5,092.

WINGRAVE, a parish in the hundred of Cottesloe, co. of Buckingham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £9 9s. 7d., returned at £115. Patrons, in 1829, the trustees of the late earl of Bridgewater. Church ded. to St Peter and St Paul. The Independents have a place of worship here. Here is a school partly supported by subscription. There was formerly a chapel at Rowsam in this parish. Distance from Aylesbury, 5½ m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 602; in 1831, 783. A. P., £3,688.

WINKBOURNE, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of Thurgarton, co. of Nottingham. Living, a donative curacy, certified at £18. Patron, in 1829, P. Burnell, Esq. The church is an ancient structure, which formerly belonged to a fraternity of Knights Hospitallers, settled at Newland in the co. of York. Their possessions here were granted in the reign of Edward VI. to the family of Burnell. Distance from Southwall, 3 m. N. Pop., in 1801, 159; in 1831, 134. A. P., £1,863.

WINKFIELD, a parish in the hundred of Ripplesmere, co. of Berks. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £8 5s. 10d. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Salisbury. Church ded. to St Mary. Here is a free school for 21 boys and 21 girls, founded and endowed in 1710 by the earl of Ranelagh. Three sums of £500 each were added to the endowment by Thomas Maule, in 1715; Thomas Hatch, in 1788; and John Tow, in 1809. The annual revenue now amounts to upwards of £250, for which the children are clothed and educated. An apprentice fee of £5 is given with each boy. Annexed to the school is a chapel, also founded by the earl of Ranelagh, in which the schoolmaster, who must be in holy orders, performs divine service every day. This parish contains the hamlets of Ascot, Bulbrook, and Hateley. Distance from New Windsor, 5½ m. S.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 1465; in 1831, 2009. A. P., £7,084.

WINLATON, a parochial chapelry and township in the parish of Ryton, and western division of the ward of Chester, co.-palatine of Durham. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Durham, not in charge, and subordinate to the rectory of Ryton. Here was formerly a chapel, erected in 1705, but which having gone to ruin, the rector of Ryton was wont to perform divine service occasionally in a school room. In 1828 the township was made parochial, and an elegant church was erected at an expense of £2,500, in which are 637 free sittings; £2,000 of the cost was defrayed by a grant from the parliamentary commissioners. At the village of Blaydon are places of worship for Presbyterians, and Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists. Here is a subscription library, also a school on the national system, in which above 100 children are educated, each paying three half-pence a week. Here are extensive iron works, belonging chiefly to Messrs Crawley, Millington, & Co., of Thames-street, London, in which edge-tools, nail-roads, files, and the heavier articles are manufactured. On the banks of the Tyne are works for refining lead. The owners of the iron works constantly employ two vessels of 300 tons burden each in transporting their goods to London and Newcastle. Distance from Gateshead, 6½ m. W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 3021; in 1831, 3951. A. P., £7,619.

WINMARLEIGH, a township in the parish of Garstang, hundred of Amounderness, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Distance from Garstang, 3 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 243; in 1831, 275. A. P., £3,158.

WINSLEY, a joint chapelry with Lindley-Stoke, in the parish and hundred of Bradford, co. of Wilts. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, and subordinate to the vicarage of Bradford. The chapel is ded. to St Nicholas. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. It is $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. W. from Bradford. Pop., in 1831, 2847.

WINSLOW, a market-town and parish in the hundred of Cottisloe, co. of Buckingham. This town has existed from a very remote period, and is mentioned as having been given, in 794, to the abbey of St Albans, by Offa. It stands in a fertile and highly cultivated country, and is situated on the brow of a hill, commanding an agreeable prospect. It consists chiefly of three streets, almost built of brick, and containing some very good houses. The inhabitants are partially employed in the manufacture of lace. Thursday is market-day, chiefly for provisions. A small quantity of corn is also sold here. Fairs for cattle, hiring servants, &c., are held on February 18th, March 20th, Holy Thursday, August 21st, September 22d, November 26th, the Thursday before Old Michaelmas-day, and the first and second Thursdays following. Attempts have been made to obtain opium from the white poppy in this neighbourhood, and with considerable success. In 1822, 60 pounds weight of opium were obtained from poppies grown on four acres of land, producing £75; and in the year following, 11 acres yielded 143 lbs. To encourage the exertions of the proprietor, the sum of £30 was each year granted to him by the society for the encouragement of arts, commerce, and manufactures. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of St Albans and dio. of London, rated at £11 5s. 10d., and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church is a spacious Gothic building of considerable antiquity, ded. to St Lawrence. The Wesleyan Methodists, Independents, and Baptists, have places of worship here. Here is a school founded and endowed with £600 in 1724, by Joseph Rogers; the endowment was invested in land, now yielding a rental of £22, for which 12 poor children receive instruction. At Hanging-Styles is a charity school, to which some unknown benefactor gave £27 10s. It is $6\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.E. from Buckingham, and 50 m. N.W. from London. Pop., in 1801, 1101; in 1831, 1290. A. P., £4,681.

WINSLOW, a township in the parish of Bromyard, hundred of Broxash, co. of Hereford. It is 2½ m. S.W. by W. from Bromyard. Pop., in 1801, 386; in 1831, 450. A. P., £2,963.

WINSON. See WINSTON.

WINSTANLEY-IN-MAKERFIELD, a township in the parish of Wigan, hundred of West Derby, co.-palatine of Lancaster. It is 3½ m. S.W. by W. from Wigan. Pop., in 1801, 631; in 1831, 731. A. P., £3,399.

WINSTER, a market-town and chapelry in the parish of Youlgrave, hundred of High-Peak, co. of Derby. The town is situated about three miles from the river Darwent, and was formerly inhabited chiefly by miners. An attempt was made, some time ago, to establish manufactories of cotton goods, but it did not succeed, and was recently abandoned. Saturday is market-day, but the market is very ill attended. Four fairs, formerly held, have fallen into disuse, with the exception of that held on Easter-Monday. The parish is in the duchy of Lancaster and honour of Tutbury, and is subject to the jurisdiction of a court of pleas, held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. Living, a perpetual curacy, in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, certified at £12, returned at £136 11s. 1½d., and in patronage of the freeholders of the town. The minister draws one-fourth of the tithes of corn and hay raised in the township, the same having been bestowed on the living in 1702, by Mrs Anne Phemeys and Mrs H. Fenshaw. The chapel is an old structure, partly in the Norman style of architecture, and ded. to St John the Baptist. The Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists have places of worship here. Here is a school in which 20 children receive education on an endowment of £20 per annum, bequeathed in 1717, by Thomas Eyre; and five more are educated from an annuity of £5, given, in 1718, by Robert Moore. The parish is very ill supplied with water. The Cromford and High-Peak railway passes within three miles, and it is proposed to carry a branch from it to this place. On the neighbouring commons are several barrows. One of these was opened in 1768, when a silver bracelet, various trinkets, glass beads, and two vessels of glass, containing fluid, were found. It is 150 m. N.N.W. from London.

WINSTER, a chapelry in the ward and parish of Kendal, co. of Westmoreland. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, certified at £5 1s., returned at £42 13s., and in patronage of the landowners. This chapelry was originally a part of that of Crook, and the inhabitants still pay towards the repairs of Crook chapel. Though in the parish of Kendal, it is held to be in the constabewick of Undermillbeck, in the parish of Windermere. Part of Cartmell fells, though in another parish and county, pays to the curate of this chapel, as part of the chapelry, on account of the distance of the parish church. It is 7 m. W. from Kendal. The pop., and other returns, are included in those made from Undermillbeck.

WINSTON, a parish in the south-western division of the ward of Darlington, co.-palatine of Durham. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Durham, rated at £9 18s. 1½d., and in patronage of the bishop of Durham. The church is ded. to St Andrew. Here are the hamlets of Burford, Newsham, Osmundcroft, and Stubhouse. The river Tees runs along the south side of the hill on which the village stands, and is crossed by a handsome stone bridge, erected in 1764, and consisting of a single arch of 111 feet span. There is a school with an endowment of £70 per annum, given by the earl of Bridgewater. Distance from Barnard-Castle, 6½ m. E. Pop., in 1801, 307; in 1831, 327. A. P., £3,067.

WINSTON, a parish in the hundred of Bisle, co. of Gloucester. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £7 10s., and, in 1829, in patronage of Sir E. B. Sandys, Bart. Church ded. to St Bartholomew. The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. The parish is crossed by the ancient Ermyng-street, and is 6 m. N.W. by N. from Cirencester. Pop., in 1801, 143; in 1831, 164. A. P., £1,277.

WINSTON, a chapelry in the parish of Bibury, hundred of Bradley, co. of Gloucester. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, a peculiar, and subordinate to the vicarage of Bibury. The chapel is ded. to St Michael. Distance from Northleach, 4½ m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 145; in 1831, 176.

WINSTON, or CASTELL-GWYS, a parish in the hundred of Dungleddan, co. of Pembroke, South Wales. It contains the town of the same name, which is incorporated, and contributed with Pembroke in returning a member to parliament. A fair is held November 8th. It is 5 m. N.E. from Haverford-West. Pop., in 1801, 569; in 1831, 745. A. P., £3,012.

WINSTON, a parish in the hundred of Thredling, co. of Suffolk. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £9 3s. 9d., and in patronage of the dean and chapter of Ely. Church ded. to St Andrew. It is 7 m. W. by S. from Framlingham. Pop., in 1801, 261; in 1831, 398. A. P., £1,920.

WINSTREE, a hundred in the eastern end of the co. of Essex, containing 13 parishes, and in 1831, 4411 inhabitants.

WINTERBOURN, a chapelry in the parish of Chevely, hundred of Faircross, co. of Berks. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, not in charge, and subordinate to the vicarage of Chevely. Here is a school with an endowment of £10 per annum. Distance from Speenhamland, 3½ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 357; in 1831, 326. A. P., £2,344.

WINTERBOURNE, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of Langley and Swinehead, co. of Gloucester. It contains the hamlet of Hambrook. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £28 7s. 6d., and in patronage of the president and fellows of St John's college, Oxford. Church ded. to St Mary. The Wesleyan Methodists have here a place of worship. About 180 children are educated in a National school, founded a few years ago, and supported by subscription. An annuity of £2 10s., given in 1741 by John Silcocks, is applied for the education of poor children. Distance from Bristol, 6½ m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 1592; in 1831, 1939. A. P., £4,347.

WINTERBOURNE-ABBAS, a parish in the hundred of Eggerton, Bridport division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a rectory, to which is annexed that of Winterbourne-Steepleton, in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £18 17s. 6d., and in patronage of the rector and fellows of Lincoln college, Oxford. Many tumuli exist in this vicinity, leading to the supposition that at a remote period this has been the scene of some important conflict. Here is an ancient structure, supposed to have been a Druidical temple, consisting of nine huge stones set so as to form a circle of nine feet in diameter. Many erect stones are scattered about the vicinity, and not far from the temple are the remains of a cromlech. The stream called the South Winterbourne rises near the temple and runs through the parish, which is distant from Dorchester, 5 m. W. Pop., in 1801, 156; in 1831, 133. A. P., £1,464.

WINTERBOURNE-BASSETT, a parish in the hundred of Selkley, co. of Wilts. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £10 9s. 7d., and in patronage of the president and fellows of Magdalene college, Oxford. Church ded. to St Catherine. Here are some Druidical remains, such as a circle of large stones, a barrow surrounded with large stones, and traces of what are regarded as houses of archdruids. It is 8 m. N. W. by W. from Marlborough. Pop., in 1801, 218; in 1831, 288. A. P., £2,601.

WINTERBOURNE-CLENSTONE, a parish in the hundred of Coombe-ditch, Blandford (North) division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £6 18s. 1½d., returned at £141 8s., and, in 1829, in patronage of E. M. Pleydell, Esq. Church ded. to St Nicholas. Here is the commencement of Coombs-ditch, supposed by Dr Stukeley to have been a rampart of the first colony of the Belge. It gives name to the hundred, and here the courts were formerly held. This parish was formerly much more populous than now; it was, in fact, originally divided into three parishes, the livings of which were rectories. Two of the churches have disappeared, but many foundations of houses are yet visible. Distance from Blandford-Forum, 4 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 49; in 1831, 84. A. P., £1,424.

WINTERBOURNE-DANTSEY, a parish in the hundred of Alderbury, co. of Wilts. Living, a perpetual curacy, a donative, not in charge, returned at £115, and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the prebendary of Chisenbury and Chute, in the cathedral church of Salisbury. Church ded. to St Edward. It is 4

m. N.N.E. from Salisbury. Pop., in 1801, 120; in 1831, 161. A. P., £682.

WINTERBOURNE (EARLS), a parish in the hundred of Alderbury, co. of Wilts. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, returned at £21, and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the prebendary of Chute and Chisenbury, in the cathedral church of Salisbury. Church ded. to St Michael. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. In the vicinity is an ancient earthwork of a circular form, inclosing an area of about 15 acres. It is called Chlorus' camp, or Figbury ring. Distance from Salisbury, 3 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 189; in 1831, 243. A. P., £1,670.

WINTERBOURNE-FARRINGTON, or ST GERMAN'S, a district, formerly a parish, in the hundred of Culliford-Tree, Dorchester division of the co. of Dorset. The living, which was united in 1751 to the rectory of Winterbourne-Came, was a discharged rectory in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £7 3s. 6½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Lady C. Damer. This district now claims to be extra-parochial. It is 2½ m. S. from Dorchester. The population and other returns are included under those made from Herringstone.

WINTERBOURNE-GUNNER, or CHERBOROUGH, a parish in the hundred of Alderbury, co. of Wilts. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £12 16s. 10d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. C. J. and Mrs Coleman. Church ded. to St Mary. It is 4 m. N.N.E. from Salisbury. Pop., in 1801, 136; in 1831, 166. A. P., £1,356.

WINTERBOURNE - HOUGHTON. See HOUGHTON-WINTERBOURNE.

WINTERBOURNE - KINGSTON. See KINGSTON-WINTERBOURNE.

WINTERBOURNE (ST MARTIN), a parish, formerly a market-town, in the hundred of George, Dorchester division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £9 15s., and in patronage of the bishop of Salisbury. The church has an embattled tower crowned with pinnacles. A fair is held on St Martin's day. The market, which has fallen into disuse, was granted by Henry III. In this parish is Marden castle, one of the strongest and most extensive camps of the Romans in the west of England. It is mentioned by Ptolemy as the summer encampment (castra aestiva) of the garrison stationed at Dunium or Durnovaria, the capital of the Durotriges. It consists of a central area of an irregular oval form, 40 acres in extent, surrounded by a treble ditch and rampart. The whole extent covered by the works is above 115 acres. Five ditches and ramparts defend the eastern, and six, the western entrance. The vicinal road from Dorchester to Weymouth passes near the former, and the latter communicates with a branch of the via Icenaria. The summit commands an extensive prospect of barrows, stretching for many miles to the southward along the tops of the hills. Distance from Dorchester, 3 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 262; in 1831, 369. A. P., £3,667.

WINTERBOURNE-MONKTON, or WAST, a parish in the hundred of Culliford-Tree, Dorchester division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £8, returned at £130, and, in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Ilchester. Here was an alien priory, subordinate to the abbey of Cluny, or that of de Vasto, to which this manor and other estates hereabouts were given A. D. 1214. It is 2 m. S.W. by S. from Dorchester. Pop., in 1801, 82; in 1831, 101. A. P., £880.

WINTERBOURNE-STEEPLETON, or STAFLETON, a parish in the hundred of Uggescombe, Dorchester division of the hundred of Dorset. Living, a rectory, united to that of Winterbourne-Abbas, in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £10 4s. 7d., and in patronage of the master and fellows of Lincoln college, Oxford. The church, which is ded. to St Michael, was erected in 1401. The church has a stone spire; there is only one other spire in the county. It is 4 m. W. by S. from Dorchester. Pop., in 1801, 143; in 1831, 176. A. P., £1,699.

WINTERBOURNE-STOKE, a parish in the hundred of Branch and Dole, co. of Wilts. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £11 12s. 8d., returned at £121 7s. 10d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Alexander Baring, Esq. Church ded. to St Peter. It is 5 m. W. by S. from Amesbury. Pop., in 1801, 256; in 1831, 272. A. P., £3,245.

WINTERBOURNE-STRICKLAND, a parish in the hundred of Pimperne, Blandford division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £16 6s. 3d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Lady C. Damer. It is 4 m. W.S.W. from Blandford-Forum. Pop., in 1801, 306; in 1831, 401. A. P., £1,345.

WINTERBOURNE-WHITCHURCH, a parish in the hundred of Coombs-Ditch, Blandford (North) division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £7 16s. 10d., returned at £40, and in patronage of the bishop of Salisbury. The church, which is ded. to St Mary, consists of a long narrow nave, with a south transept, and contains a curious font of great antiquity. Samuel Wesley, father of John and Charles Wesley, was born here during the incumbency of his father. It is 5½ m. S.W. from Blandford-Forum. Pop., in 1801, 430; in 1831, 513. A. P., £2,208.

WINTERBOURNE-ZELSTONE, a parish in the hundred of Rushmore, Blandford division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £13 11s. 3d. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. Sir J. Hanham, Bart. The church is ded. to St Mary, and has a lofty embattled tower. Distance from Blandford-Forum, 6 m. S. by S. Pop., in 1801, 233; in 1831, 233. A. P., £1,406.

WINTERBURN, a joint township with Flasby in the parish of Gargrave, W. R. of the co. of York. The Independents have a place of worship here. "Before I take leave of Winterburn, I am bound to notice two obscure names, Solsat and Leflat, in the Domesday survey of the manor. The former is conjectured, by a respectable friend, (the Rev. F. Wilkinson, vicar of Bardsey,) to be Skeldyet, a farm within this manor, partly within the township of Hetton, and parish of Burrial, and partly within the township of Wallerburne. On the subject of the latter I have no information."—Whitaker's Hist. of Craven. Distance from Skipton, 7 m. N.W. by N. Pop. returned with Flasby.

WINTERCOT, a township in the parish of Leominster, co. of Hereford.

WINTERHAY, in the parish of Ilminster, co. of Somerset. Distance from Ilminster, ½ m. N.W.

WINTERHEAD, a hamlet in the parish of Shipham, co. of Somerset.

WINTERINGHAM, a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Manley, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. This place is thought to have been anciently called Abramfus. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £28. Patron, in 1829, the Hon. and Rev. J. L. Saville. Church ded. to All Saints. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Barton-upon-Humber, 7½ m. W. Pop., in 1801, 678; in 1831, 726. A. P., £7,166.

WINTERINGHAM (LOWER), a hamlet in the parish of St Neots, co. of Huntingdon. Distance from St Neots, 2½ m. E.S.E.

WINTERINGHAM (UPPER), a hamlet in the parish of St Neots, co. of Huntingdon. Distance from St Neots, 2½ m. E. by S.

WINTERSET, a township in the parish of Wragby, W. R. of the co. of York. Distance from Wakefield, 6 m. S.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 133; in 1831, 149. A. P., £1,252.

WINTERSHILL, a hamlet in the parish of Durlley, co. of Southampton. Distance from Bishops-Waltham, 2½ m. N.W.

WINTERSLOW, a parish including the tything of East Winterslow, or Easton, West Winterslow, or Weston, and Middle Winterslow, or Middleton, in the hundred of Alderbury, co. of Wilts. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £18 13s. 4d. Patron, Lord Holland. Church ded. to All Saints. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. A few years ago were discovered near Winterslow-hut, three barrows, in one of which, containing a vault built in a remarkably secure manner by means of flints wedged together so as to form an arch, were found relics supposed to be those of some British female of distinction, and consisting of some beautiful brown hair in a state of perfect preservation, ashes enclosed in linen cloth, burnt bones, a lance-head of brass, beads of amber, and other similar antiquities. A Roman road passed through this parish from Winchester to Salisbury. Pop., in 1801, 694; in 1831, 748. A. P., £3,529.

WINTERSTOKE, a hundred in the co. of Somerset, and situated on the north-western side of it. It contains 26 parishes. Pop., in 1831, 19,511.

WINTERSTOKE, a village in the parish of Banwell, co. of Somerset. It is now depopulated.

WINTERTON, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of Manley, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged vicarage, rated at £8, returned at £99. Patron, the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to All Saints. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. There is no regular market held here, but a meeting of farmers takes place every Wednesday for the sale of agricultural produce. There is a fair for cattle held on July 6th. Here is a school for the instruction of ten poor children, with an endowment of £3 8s., bequeathed in 1728 by Richard Beck. Within this parish is the termination of the Fosse road. Here were discovered three remarkable tessellated pavements in 1747. Distance from Barton-upon-Humber, 8 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 778; in 1831, 1295. A. P., £5,942.

WINTERTON, a parish in the hundred of West Flegg, co. of Norfolk. Living, a rectory with the perpetual curacy of East Somerton, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £20 13s. 4d. Patron, in 1829, E. Cooper, Esq. The church is ded. to All Saints, and has a lofty steeple, which is well known, and commonly used as a land-mark. There are also two lighthouses on a part of the coast called Winterton-Ness. Here were held formerly a fair and market, which have, however, long fallen into disuse. A considerable proportion of the inhabitants are employed in fishing. Some gigantic bones were found here in 1665, one of which, seemingly that of a man's leg, weighed about 57 pounds, and measured the enormous length of 3 feet 2 inches. Distance from Caister, 5½ m. N. by W. Pop., in 1801, 378; in 1831, 631. A. P., £1,136.

Living, a discharged vicarage, united since 1729 to that of Burgh-in-the-Marsh, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £8. Patron, the bishop of Lincoln. Church ded. to St Mary. It is within the liberty of the duchy of Lancaster. Distance from Spilsby, 11 m. E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 221; in 1831, 244. A. P., £3,627.

WINTHORPE, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of Newark, co. of Nottingham. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, rated at £7 11s. 0½d. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. R. Rastall. The Fosse road traverses the parish, which is situated on the banks of the river Trent. Distance from Newark, 3¼ m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 196; in 1831, 228. A. P., £1,905.

WINTNEY (HARTLEY), in the co. of Southampton. See HARTLEY-WINTNEY.

WINTON, a township in the parish of Kirby-Stephen, co. of Westmoreland. Here is a free school erected by subscription in 1659, and afterwards in 1681, endowed with an annual income of £11 by Robert Waller, and with a legacy of £112 by Richard Menckhouse in 1722. It is free to all children belonging to the township on payment of a small quarterly fee. Here were born and educated John Langhorne, D.D., author of "Fables of Flora," and joint translator of Plutarch with his brother, William Langhorne, M.A.; and Richard Burn, LL.D., the learned author of several works on law and history. Pop., in 1801, 262; in 1831, 267. A. P., £2,167.

WINTON, a township in the parish of Kirby-Siggerton, N. R. of the co. of York. Distance from Northallerton, 4 m. N.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 132; in 1831, 145. A. P., £1,547.

WINTRINGHAM, a parish in the wapentake of Buckrose, E. R. of the co. of York, comprising the township of Winttringham and chapelry of Knapton. Living, a donative in the archd. of the E. R. and dio. of York, rated at £17 6s. 8d., returned at £17 6s. Patron, in 1829, Sir W. Strickland, Bart. Church ded. to St Peter. Distance from New-Malton, 7 m. E. by N. Pop., in 1831, 589. A. P., £5,018.

WINWICK, a parish partly in the hundred of Polebrook, co. of Northampton, but chiefly in that of Leightonston, co. of Huntingdon. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £7 16s. 10d. Patron, in 1829, Lord Montague. Church ded. to All Saints. Distance from Oundle, 6 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 110; in 1831, 326. A. P., £1,575.

WINWICK, a parish and township in the hundred of West Derby, co.-palatine of Lancaster. The living, which is said to be the largest in England, is a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester, rated at £102 9s. 9½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Derby. The church, which is ded. to St Oswald, has a lofty spire, and is of such antiquity that it is supposed to have been erected on the first introduction of Christianity into the island. It contains the townships of Ashton-in-Mackerfield, Calcheth, Golborne, Haydock, Houghton, Middleton and Arbury, Kenyon, Southworth and Croft, and Winwick; the chapelry of Lowton, and the borough and chapelry of Newton-in-Mackerfield. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here, and the Roman Catholics employ as a chapel, a building of the name of Southworth-hall, which formerly belonged to the Roman Catholic college of Stonyhurst. Here is a free grammar school which was founded in 1618, by Gualter Legh, Esq., with an annual income of £10, which has been increased to £34 by the bequests of subsequent benefactors. By the conditions of the bequest, it is provided that in case of the school being vacant for more than one year, the income will revert for such time as it may be so to the heirs of Francis, Thomas, and Peter Legh. The school room was built by Sir Peter Legh. It is an established custom in this parish for the rector to pay the cottage rents of six industrious poor people, the date of which benefactions is inscribed on a board fixed over the door of each cottage. Here is an eminence called Redbank, situated between the village of Winwick and Newton, on which the Scots received a terrible defeat from Oliver Cromwell.

Distance from Warrington, 2½ m. N. Pop., in 1801, 12,290; in 1831, 17,961. A. P., £55,242.

WINWICK, a parish in the hundred of Guildsborough, co. of Northampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £15 6s. 8d., and in patronage of the bishop of Lincoln. Church ded. to St Michael. The Grand Union canal crosses this parish. There is a curious gateway here, which formerly belonged to an ancient mansion, part of which is now used as a farm-house. Distance from Daventry, 9½ m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 124; in 1831, 159. A. P., £3,267.

WIRINGTON, or WITHERINGTON, a hamlet in the parish of Paston, liberty of Peterborough, formerly the hundred of Nassaburgh and co. of Northampton. Living, a chapel to the rectory of Paston; not in charge. Chapel ded. to St Mary and St John the Baptist. Distance from Peterborough, 3½ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 372; in 1831, 537. A. P., £2,049.

WIRKSWORTH, a hundred situated nearly in the centre of the co. of Derby. It contains 19 parishes. It is a great mining district; "But to give a clear illustration of this matter (the mineral customs and laws of Derbyshire,) it will be necessary first to remark, that the principal part of the county, where lead-ore is found in considerable quantity, is known by the name of King's-field. Nearly the whole wapentake of Wirksworth comes under this denomination. This does not appear always to have been the case, for in the time of the Saxons it belonged to the abbey at Repton. But Mr Pegge imagines that in the year 874, when this religious house was destroyed by the Danes, it was escheated to the crown, since it appears to have been in its possession when Domesday book was compiled. As to that part of the King's-field, which is situated in the High-peak, I apprehend, that at least ever since the Norman Conquest, it has been the property of the crown, and in the same custody with the castle. Now all that part of the county which comes under the denomination of the King's-field, has been from time immemorial let upon lease. The present farmer of the mineral duties in the High-peak, is the duke of Devonshire, and in the wapentake of Wirksworth the widow of the late — Rolles, Esq. They have each a steward and bar-masters in the different districts, which they hold under the crown. The steward presides as their judge in their barmote courts, and with 24 jurymen chosen every half year, determines all disputes which arise respecting the working of the mines. For this purpose they meet twice in the year, and, if requisite, may, upon proper notice, be summoned still oftener. In the High-peak the courts are held at Moneyash, and in the wapentake of the town of Wirksworth. The office of the bar-master consists of various branches. But the most material are putting miners into possession of veins, which they have discovered, and collecting that proportion of ore, to which the lessee of the crown, or lord of the manor has a claim. That part of the King's-field which is situated in the wapentake of Wirksworth, is divided into eight liberties. Now these, though under the same jurisdiction, leased by the same person, and subject to the same duties, pay in very different proportions. In Bonsal and Brassington every thirteenth dish is due, but a twenty-fifth only is taken. Neither of them is subject to a tithe. Cromford pays every thirteenth dish. The tithes, Smitham and Bellsand excepted, is every fortieth. In Elton the twenty-fifth is taken, and every tenth dish is due as tithe to the duke of Rutland. At the capital mines he takes every nineteenth, but at the smaller ones, at discretion. One half of the liberty of Matlock pays a thirteenth, and the other a twenty-fifth, but neither of them any tithe. In Wirksworth, which produces a larger quantity of ore than any other liberty, a twenty-fifth is taken in some places, and a thirteenth in others. A fortieth is due to the vicar as tithe. The reason why a larger proportion of ore is taken in some places than in others, is, that the former resisted the claims of the lessee of the crown, when he asserted his right to every thirteenth dish of all kinds of ore. These observations have solely a reference to the King's-field. But in the Low-peak there are mines also in grounds which are private property. In this case, agreements are made between the owner of the land, and the labouring miners; and it concerns each party to engage on terms the most advantageous to themselves. Besides the claims which have been mentioned, there is another called cope. In the wapentake it is fourpence, and in the High-peak sixpence per load, and is paid by the buyer of the ore to the farmer of the mineral duties, or to the lord of the manor." Pilkington's Derbyshire. Pop., in 1831, 23,267.

WIRKSWORTH, a parish, including the market-town of Wirksworth, the townships of Cromford, Hopton, and Idle, and the hamlets of Callow and Middleton, in the hundred of Wirksworth; the townships of Alderwasley, Ashleyhay, Biggin, and Idridgebay with Allton, in the hundred of Appletree; and the hamlet of Iron-Brook-Grange, in the hundred of High-peak, and co. of Derby. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £42 7s. 8½d., and in the patronage of the dean of Lincoln. The vicar has a right to every fortieth dish of lead ore found in the parish, but this is not so lucrative as it formerly was. The church, which is ded. to St Mary, is a handsome building in the later style of English architecture, and consists of a nave, chancel, transepts, and two aisles, with a square tower supported in the centre by four large pillars. The Baptists, Independent and Wesleyan Methodists have here places of worship. Here is a free grammar school, which possesses an income of about £250, bequeathed by Anthony Gell, Esq., of Hopton, in 1576; the school-house was lately rebuilt, at an expense of about £2,000, in the English style of architecture. The boys who enjoy the benefit of this institution receive a classical education free, but a small fee is paid for instruction in writing, arithmetic, and English grammar. In 1520 the Rev. James Beresford, sometime vicar of this parish, founded two scholarships and two fellowships at St John's college, Cambridge, to which the above mentioned school, along with those of Ashbourne and Chesterfield is entitled, after the relatives of the founder. The benevolent founder of the school also established six almshouses for poor men. There are also many other bequests for the benefit of the poor of the parish, in particular, one left by Elizabeth Bagshaw in 1797, being £2,000 in the 3 per cent. consolidated annuities, producing about £56 per annum, which, under the superintendence of a body of trustees, is distributed in sums of £1 each.

Wirksworth, which name was formerly written Wirceworth, Wirchestecorde, and Wyrkysworth, is a place of considerable antiquity, and is generally supposed to have been so called from the lead mines which were wrought here so early as the time of the Emperor Adrian. The Saxons also carried on mining here to a great extent. In 835, Kenware, the abess of Repton, within whose demesnes Wirksworth then was, granted it to Humbert, on condition of his supplying lead to the annual value of £15 for the use of Christ-church, Canterbury. In Domesday book this place is made mention of as belonging to the crown, and having within its boundaries three lead mines and a church. It continued one of the royal demesnes till the reign of John, and was by that monarch granted to William de Ferrars, but again lapsed to the crown in the reign of Henry III., by whom it was presented to his son, Edmund, earl of Lancaster, and the manor has since that period remained part of the possessions of the duchy of Lancaster. It is situated in a valley, and is well supplied with water from the neighbouring hills by means of pipes; it is by no means either well paved or lighted. The principal portion of the inhabitants are employed in mining operations, but the manufacture of cotton goods, principally gingham, has been recently introduced, and is on the increase. Here are also establishments for the manufacture of hats, hosiery, tapes, &c., and for wool-combing. The Cromford canal has its commencement about a mile and a half to the north of the town, and crosses the river Derwent by means of an aqueduct of one arch, the span of which is about 80 feet. The Cromford and High-peak railway also commences about half a mile to the north. Here is held the barmote court for the determination of disputes which arise in the working of the mines; it is held by the steward in a handsome building erected in 1814 for that purpose by the Hon. Charles Bathurst, lately chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. In this hall, which is called the Moot-hall, is preserved an ancient brazen measure, by which are corrected twice a year the dishes used for measuring the ore by the miners. The mines are regulated by ancient customs and laws, somewhat similar to those in force in the mining districts of Cornwall; some details of these may be found under the head of the wapentake of the same name. Courts leet and baron are held here by the lessee of the crown, the former annually at Easter, and the latter biennially at Easter and Michaelmas. A court for the rectorial manor is also held by the dean of Lincoln, as impropiator of the larger tithes. No courts are held for the other manor within the parish, called the Holland, or Richmond manor, which was granted in the reign of Henry VIII. to Ralph Gell, Esq., and which is still in the possession of his descendants. Here is held a petty session for the wapentake by the county magistrates. The town is governed by a constable and headborough. There were formerly some mineral springs within the parish, but they have been destroyed by the draining of the mines. Many Roman antiquities have been discovered here, in particular in 1736, when a number of Roman coins were found. Distance from London, 140 m. N.W. by N.; from Derby 13 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, of the market town, 2978; in 1831, 4082. A. P., £17,708. Pop., of the parish, in 1801, 5862; in 1831, 7754. A. P., £31,836.

WIRRAL, a hundred in the north-western extremity of the co.-palatine of Chester, having the river Mersey on the north-east, and the Dee on the south-west. It contains 18 parishes and 74 townships, with the town of Great Neston. Pop., in 1831, 13,881.

WIRSWALL, a township in the parish of Whitechurch, hundred of Nantwich, co.-palatine of Chester, having the Chester on the west. Distance from Whitechurch, 2 m. N. Pop., in 1831, 183. A. P., £1,283.

WISBEACH, a hundred in the Isle of Ely, at the northern extremity of the co. of Cambridge, bordering upon Lincolnshire, and containing 9 parishes.

WISBEACH, or WISEBECH, a market-town and sea-port in the hundred of Wisbeach, Isle of Ely, co. of Cambridge. This is an ancient town, and is mentioned under the name of Wisbece, in a Saxon charter granting some lands in this neighbourhood to the abbey of Medehamstead, by Wulfhere, son of Peada, king of Mercia. The first part of the name is clearly derived from the river Ouse, formerly called the Wise, but it has been disputed whether the latter syllable refers to its situation on the sea-coast, or beach, or whether it is rather derived from the Saxon word bee, which signifies either a river, or a tongue of land situated at the confluence of two rivers, thus referring to its position on the Ouse at its confluence with the Nene. The latter supposition is partly justified by an ancient charter of Edward VI., in which it is called Wisbeche. William the Conqueror here erected a strong fortress for the purpose of restraining the disorderly conduct of his male-content barons, and the irruptions of the numerous outlaws in the fens, who, finding refuge in these swamps, at that time almost impenetrable, often burst out, and committed great devastations in the adjoining country. This castle was well maintained with a strong garrison of soldiers, till, in 1236, it was in a great measure destroyed by an inundation of the sea. It was, however, soon after rebuilt by Bishop Morthmer, and by him, and his successors in the see of Ely, occasionally used as an episcopal palace. In the reign of Elizabeth it was occasionally used as a state prison, and was afterwards, during the protectorate of Oliver Cromwell, purchased by his secretary, Thurloe, and by him used as his occasional residence. After the restoration of Charles II. it again came into the possession of the see of Ely, and having been by them sold, soon fell into total decay, and no remains of it are now visible. The inhabitants were, in 1690, exempted from tolls throughout the kingdom, which, on King John's visit, was confirmed, and other privileges granted. It was on this occasion that that prince, in attempting to cross the Wash at an unfavourable time, lost the greater part of his baggage, together with his treasure and regalia.

The town is in general well built, and consists of several handsome streets, with a circus erected in 1816. It is well paved, supplied with abundance of good water, and lighted and watched at the expense of the corporation. The river Nene, on both sides of which the town is situated, is here crossed by a bridge, consisting of one arch, of an elliptical form, and about 72 feet in span. Here are assembly rooms, and a theatre, which is occasionally opened by a company from the larger towns. There are also spacious baths, comfortably fitted up and provided with dressing-rooms, and similar conveniences. There has existed in the town a literary society, which possesses a library of about 3000 volumes, and is well supported. The parochial library is an excellent collection, containing many valuable works on divinity. Large quantities of oil were prepared here about a century ago, in seven large mills; as also butter to the extent of about 8000 firkins, which were principally shipped to London. About 120,000 quarters of corn are annually shipped here for Lynne, Cambridge, and other places; this is grown in the neighbourhood, the amount of which has of late years been very much increased by the recent inventions in agriculture, much of the land which was formerly covered with fens, having been lately recovered. The remaining exports consist chiefly of rape seed and long stapled wool, which is shipped for Yorkshire, and timber for the use of the British navy, which is shipped to Chatham and other naval ports. In 1828, the number of vessels which cleared out from the port was 109, namely, 45 foreign, and 64 British, the latter being principally employed in the coasting trade; the tonnage of these amounted to 70,320 tons, and the receipt at the custom-house was almost £30,000. Vessels of 100 tons can approach the quay, the navigation of the Nene having been greatly improved by a straight cut from Peterborough. The custom-house forms part of the town-hall, which is situated on the old Firkin cross. Every Tuesday and Friday a packet leaves Peterborough for Wisbeach, and returns every Wednesday and Saturday. A canal extends from the river at Wisbeach to the old Nene at Outwell, and thence to the Ouse at Salter's-Lode sluice, thus affording a means of communication with Norfolk, Suffolk, and the other eastern counties. The vicinity abounds in rich pasturage, from which many sheep and cattle are sent to the London market. Saturday is market day. Fairs are held on Palm-Sunday, and Saturday before Lady-day, for hemp and flax; on the second Wednesday in April for horses; on August 1st, 2d, and 12th; for hemp, flax, and cattle. The last mentioned is greatly frequented, and 3000 head of cattle have been sold there.

The town was incorporated by Edward VI. who restored the Guild of the Holy Trinity, originally founded in 1379. The government is vested in 10 capital burgesses, one of whom is appointed town-bailiff, and who are annually elected by such inhabitants as are freeholders, or occupy houses of the value of 40s. per annum. The corporation is not invested with magisterial authority, and their duties extend merely to the management of the estates of the guild, which yield from £2000 to £3000 per annum. The magistrates of the county hold the petty sessions here twice a week, and the quarter sessions and summer assizes, alternately with Ely. On the second Friday of every month, a court of requests for the recovery of debts under 40s., is held in the shire-hall. This building forms part of the gaol, which was erected in 1807, at an expense of £600. It contains 17 wards, a yard, chapel, and tread-mill. The town of Wisbeach is divided into the parishes of St Mary and St Peter, both in the archd. and dio. of Ely. The living of St Peter's is a vicarage, to which are annexed the perpetual curacy of St Mary and the chapelry of Guyhirn. It is rated at £36 13s. 4d., and in patronage of the bishop of Ely. The church is a handsome structure, presenting a fine combination of the English and Norman styles of architecture. The date of its erection is unknown; the nave bears the date of 1586, but many circumstances render it probable that it is much older. The tower was erected in 1500. The living of St Mary's is a perpetual curacy, not in charge, and subordinate to that of St Peter. The church stands about two m. N.W. from the town, and is a plain structure in the early English style of architecture. A chapel of ease for 1000 persons, including 300 free sittings, was lately erected; Dr Jobson, the incumbent, endowed it with an estate valued at £200 per annum. The Baptists, Independents, Johnsonians, Society of Friends, Presbyterians, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians, have places of worship here. Here is a free school for instructing in the classics all boys of the town who may apply, supposed to have been founded in the 14th century, by the Guild of the Holy Trinity. The master receives a salary of £160; the bishop of Ely is visitor. Attached to this school are four by-fellowships in Peterhouse college, Cambridge, founded, in 1628, by Thomas Parka, who also gave funds for providing six scholarships at Magdalene college, four of £10, and two of £70 per annum. Here are a national school for 250 boys, and a girls' school for 125 scholars, endowed with £55 per annum. Here are six almshouses, erected in 1813. Distance from Cambridge, 44 m. N.; and from London, 94 m. N. by E. Pop. of St Mary's, in 1801, 831; in 1831, 1524. A. P., £9,961. Pop. of St Peter's, in 1801, 4710; in 1831, 7253. A. P., £28,333.

WISBOROUGH-GREEN, a parish in the hundreds of Bury, Rotherbridge, and West Easwith, rape of Arundel, co. of Sussex. It contains the chapelry of Loxwood-End. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester, rated at £9 18s. 0½d., and in patronage of the prebendary of Wisborough in the cathedral church of Chichester. The church—which is in the early style of English architecture—is ded. to St Peter. The Arun and Wey canal crosses the parish. The Independents have a place of worship here. It is 6 m. N.E. by E. from Petworth. Pop., in 1801, 1307; in 1831, 1782. A. P., £5,091.

WISEDALE, a chapelry in the parish of Bentham, western division of the wapentake of Staincliffe and Ewcross, W. R. of the co. of York. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, rated at £7, and subordinate to the rectory of Bentham. It is 14 m. N.W. by N. from Settle. WITHAM, a hundred in the co. of Essex, containing 15 parishes, and, in 1831, 10,990 inhabitants.

WITHAM, a market town and parish in the hundred of Witham, co. of Essex. This town is supposed to have been erected by Edward the Elder on the site of the Roman station mentioned by Antonine under the name of Cannium. The town was subsequently in possession of the Knights Templars, whose preceptory was situated at Cressing, about three miles distant. The notion of the Roman origin of the place is chiefly founded on the discovery of numerous Roman coins of different dates found in leveling the old fortifications, and from the number of Roman bricks which have been found, and employed in the erection of part of the church. In the vicinity of the town is a camp with double ramparts, which, from its circular form, is presumed to be of Danish origin. The town stands in an agreeable situation near the confluence of the rivulet Braine with the river Blackwater. It consists principally of one long street of a respectable aspect, through which runs the high road from London to Colchester. It is partially paved and lighted, and the supply of water is good. The inhabitants derive their chief emolument from travellers. Here is a mansion, formerly the property of the earl of Abercorn, in which George II. rested in his progress to and from Hanover, and Queen Charlotte, consort of George III., was received on her arrival in England. The lord of the manor holds occasional courts, for the appointment of constables and other officers, who regulate the internal affairs of the town. The petty-sessions for the division are held here every Tuesday by the magistrates of the county. Tuesday is market-day, and fairs are held on the Monday before Whitsunday, June 4th, and September 14th. The market was granted by Richard I. to be held at Cheping-hill, from which it was removed by license of Richard II. In the vicinity is a mineral spring, which was formerly in considerable repute.

Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Colchester, and dio. of London, rated at £22 0s. 7d., and in patronage of the bishop of London. The church, which is ded. to St Nicholas, stands in the ancient part of the town, on Cheping-hill, about half a mile to the north of the present town. It is an ancient structure in the later style of English architecture, containing some interesting monuments. The Baptists, Independents, Society of Friends, and Roman Catholics have places of worship here. In 1630, Dame Catherine Barnardiston bequeathed a house, the rent to be appropriated to the education of children, which, with voluntary contributions, is now applied to the support of a national school, in which 82 boys and 55 girls receive instruction. In 1491, Thomas Green, Esq., bequeathed a farm in Springfield, yielding upwards of £50 per annum, for the foundation of two almshouses for four poor widows, each of whom receives an allowance of money. By some mismanagement this bequest was lost for upwards of 80 years, but it was recovered by a suit in chancery, chiefly conducted through the exertions of Dr Warley, vicar of the parish. That gentleman also founded, in 1719, a school for poor children, and endowed it with £100. Here are various almshouses: two, founded by George Armond, Esq., in the reign of Charles I.; two, by Mr Green, for poor widows, endowed with £35 per annum; six, for persons of the Independent persuasion, by Matthew Hervey, Esq.; five, founder unknown, for 10 poor widows, having an income of £67 per annum, arising from two farms at Goldhanger and Fairstead. It is 8 m. N.E. by E. from Chelmsford, and 37 m. N.E. by E. from London. Pop., in 1831, 2736. A. P., £9,403.

WITHAM-ON-THE-HILL, a parish in the wapentake of Beltisloe, parts of Kesteven, co. of Lincoln. It contains the hamlets of Manthorpe, and Toft with Lound. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £6 1s. 0½d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of G. W. Johnson, Esq. Church ded. to St Andrew. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Seventeen poor children are educated here in the school, on an endowment, given in 1719 by James Thompson, and consisting of a rent charge of £4, and the produce of certain lands. Distance from Bourne, 4½ m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 353; in 1831, 540. A. P., £3,631.

WITHAM (NORTH), a parish in the wapentake of Beltisloe, parts of Kesteven, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £6 19s. 2d., and in 1829, in the patronage of Lord Downe. Church ded. to St Mary. The parish contains the hamlet of Lebthorpe, and is crossed by the river Witham. Distance from Colsterworth, 1½ m. S. by W. Pop., in 1801, 186; in 1831, 273. A. P., £1,722.

WITHAM (SOUTH), a parish in the wapentake of Beltisloe, parts of Kesteven, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £3 12s. 11d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of Lord Huntingtown. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. In the school here are educated three poor children, on an endowment of £3 per annum, given by the Rev. Mr Troughton. Here was a preceptory of Knights Templars, said to have been founded in 1164, which subsequently came into the possession of a fraternity of the Knights Hospitallars. Distance from Colsterworth, 3½ m. S. by W. Pop., in 1801, 348; in 1831, 410. A. P., £1,429.

WITHAM-FRIARY, or CHARTERHOUSE WITHAM IN SELWOOD, a parochial chapelry, formerly an extra-episcopal liberty, consisting of the district of Witham-Friary in the hundred of Frome, and the district of Charterhouse-on-Mendip in the hundred of Winterstoke, co. of Somerset. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells, certified at £40, returned at £40, and, in 1829, in the patronage of the duke of Somerset. The church, which formed part of the ancient monastery, is ded. to St Mary. It has recently been enlarged, the incorporated society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £100 towards defraying the expense of the construction of 100 free sittings. It would seem that although the parish was in the peculiar jurisdiction of the lord of the manor, the right was not exercised till 1785, when an official was appointed. In 1826, the duke of Somerset resigned his peculiar rights, on condition of the governors of Queen Anne's bounty contributing to the endowment, and charged his own estate with an annual sum for the clergyman, so that the district became parochial, and the bishop of Bath and Wells entered upon his jurisdiction in 1827. "Here is said to have been at first a nunnery, but it is more certain that upon the Carthusian monks coming over to England, A. D. 1181, this was the first house of that order, built and endowed by King Henry II. to the honour of the Blessed Virgin, St John the Baptist, and All Saints. It had at the dissolution revenues worth £227 1s. 8d., according to Mr Speed. The site was granted, 36th Henry VIII., to Ralph Hopton."—Tanner's Not. Mon. No trace of the conventual buildings now remains, the ruins having been removed in 1764; the site is now occupied by a farm house. Distance from Frome, 5½ m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 485; in 1831, 574. A. P., £6,290.

WITHCALL, a parish in the Wold division of the hundred of Louth-Eake, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £11 16s. 8d. Patron, the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Martin. This parish is within the liberty of the duchy of Lancaster. Distance from Louth, 4 m. W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 66; in 1831, 72. A. P., £1,092.

WITHCOTE, a parish in the hundred of Framland, but locally situated in the eastern division of the hundred of Goscote, co. of Leicester. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £6 9s. 4½d., returned at £45. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. Henry Palmer. Distance from Melton-Mowbray, 9 m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 52; in 1831, 32. A. P., £930.

WITHERIDGE, a hundred on the northern side of the co. of Devon, containing 21 parishes, and, in 1831, 9567 inhabitants.

WITHERIDGE, a parish, formerly a borough and market town, in the hundred of Witheridge, co. of Devon. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter, rated at £23 10s. 5d. Patron, in 1829, R. Melhuish, Esq. The church, which contains a curiously carved pulpit of stone, is ded. to St John the Baptist. The weekly market has long ago fallen into disuse, but great markets for cattle, &c. are still held on the Wednesday after September 21st, and the first Wednesday in November. Here is a school in which 40 poor children are educated gratuitously on an endowment of £500 stock, given in 1799 by Richard Melhuish, Esq. This parish was the birth-place of William Chapple the antiquary. Distance from Chumleigh, 8 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 875; in 1831, 1263. A. P., £5,271.

WITHERLEY, a parish in the hundred of Sparkenhoe, co. of Leicester. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of London, rated at £16 2s. 3½d. Patron, in 1829, J. H. Chapman, Esq. Church ded. to St Peter; the tower, surmounted by a spire, is 156 feet high, and is considered the finest in the county. Here is Mancetter, the site of the Roman station of Manduessodum. The counties of Leicester and Warwick are here separated by the Watling-street, which here crosses the river Anker at Witherley-bridge. Distance from Atherton, 1 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 383; in 1831, 492. A. P., £2,074.

WITHERNE, a parish in the Wold division of the hundred of Calceworth, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £18 10s. 2½d. Patron, in 1829, Robert Vyner, Esq. Church ded. to St Margaret. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. In 1726, £100 were bequeathed by George Stovins, which, with £50 given by the Rev. William Jones, yields a small sum annually, which is applied to the education of poor children. Distance from Alford, 8½ m. N.W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 295; in 1831, 390. A. P., £3,787.

WITHERNSEA, a chapelry in the parish of Hollym, southern division of the wapentake of Holderness, E. R. of the co. of York. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of the E. R. and dio. of York, not in charge, and subordinate to the vicarage of Hollym. The church, now in ruins, is a spacious structure, ded. to St Nicholas, and consists of a nave, chancel, aisles, and western tower. It was erected in 1488, but the time of its consecration is not known. In the centre of the church is a tombstone, the inscription of which has been defaced. The tower now serves as a landmark for sailors. Distance from Patrington, 2½ m. Pop., in 1801, 76; in 1821, 130. A. P., £1,163.

WITHERNWICK, a parish in the E. R. of the co. of York, partly within the liberty of St Peter of York, and partly in the northern division of the wapentake of Holderness. Living, a vicarage, rated at £6 7s. 1d., and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the prebendary of Archbishop Holme in the cathedral of York. The church is a small mean edifice, ded. to St Alban, and consisting of a nave, south aisle, and chancel, with a small belfry on the roof. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Hedon, 8 m. Pop., in 1801, 293; in 1831, 443. A. P., £4,478.

WITHERSDALE, a parish in the hundred of Hoxne, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £6 16s., annexed to the vicarage of Tressingfield, and in the patronage of the master of Emanuel college, Cambridge. Church ded. to St Mary Magdalene. Distance from Harleston, 3 m. S.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 115; in 1831, 194. A. P., £1,268.

WITHERSDEN, a hamlet in the parish of Wye, co. of Kent.

WITHERSFIELD, a parish in the hundred of Risbridge, co. of Suffolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, rated at £9 17s. 1d., and in 1829, in the patronage of G. T. W. H. Duffield, Esq. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Clare, 9 m. W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 424; in 1831, 543. A. P., £2,346.

WITHERSLACK, a township and chapelry in the parish of Beetham, ward of Kendal, co. of Westmoreland. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, certified at £31 1s. 8d., returned at £94, and in patronage of the vicar of Beetham. The chapel—which is ded. to St Paul—was built and endowed in 1664, by John Barwick, dean of St Paul's, and a native of the village. The river Belo passes through the chapelry, on which is a fishery belonging to the earl of Derby. A manorial court is held by the earl at the Derby Arms Inn, on the second Tuesday after Trinity. The ancient manor-house is now occupied by a farmer. In 1656, a mineral spring was discovered near the chapel, and called Holywell. It has since disappeared. Dr John Barwick, and his brother, Dr Peter Barwick, a physician, left estates for the endowment of schools, and for the apprenticing of children belonging to the parish. The original endowment consisted of £26 to the curate, for teaching 40 poor boys, £4 for the repair of the chapel, and £10 for apprenticing boys and portioning poor maidens. Since that time the lands have risen in value, and now yield about £400 per annum, so that, a girl's school has been founded, and the sums given as marriage portions to deserving females have been augmented. It is $7\frac{1}{2}$ m. W.N.W. from Milthorpe. Pop., in 1801, 306; in 1831, 488.

WITHERSTONE, a parish in the hundred of Eggerton, Bridport division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £2 13s. 4d., and in patronage of the earl of Dorchester. "This ancient little parish is now depopulated, and reduced to one farm-house, and the manor extinct; but it is still a tything, and almost included in the parish of Poorstock, to which the inhabitants pay church and poor rates, and attend divine service, and bury their dead there, since their own church is gone to ruins. It is situated $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. E. from Poorstock." Hutchins' Dorset. Distance from Bridport, 5 m. E.N.E. Pop. returned with that of Poorstock.

WITHIAL, a hamlet in the parish of East Pennard, co. of Somerset.

WITHIEL, a parish in the hundred of Pyder, co. of Cornwall. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter, rated at £10, and, in 1829, in patronage of Sir R. R. Vyryan, Bart. Church ded. to St Uvell. At Brynn, in this parish, was born Sir Beville Grenville, who distinguished himself in the royal cause during the parliamentary war. It is 5 m. W. by S. from Bodmin. Pop., in 1801, 283; in 1831, 486. A. P., £2,109.

WITHIELL-FLOREY, a parish in the hundred of Taunton and Taunton-Dean, co. of Somerset. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells, of the certified value of £14, returned at £44 5s., and, in 1829, in the patronage of Sir T. B. Lethbridge, Bart. Church ded. to St Mary Magdalene. Distance from Dulverton, 5 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 83; in 1831, 89. A. P., £1,187.

WITHING, a small hamlet in the parish of Aylesbeare, co. of Devon.

WITHINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Bradley, co. of Gloucester. Living, a rectory in the peculiar jurisdiction of the incumbent, rated at £30, and in the patronage of the bishop of Worcester. The church is a cruciform structure, ded. to St Michael. It is partly in the Norman, partly in the early English style of architecture, and contains a number of monuments, the handsomest of which, is one to the memory of Sir John How, his wife, and nine children. Here are several schools with small endowments. A sum of £200, given by the Rev. Dr W. Osborn, and John Rich, Esq., has been placed at interest, for the purpose of apprenticing poor children. The river Colne crosses the parish. In 1811, a Roman pavement was found here; part of it was sent to the British museum. Distance from North Leach, 6 m. W. Pop., in 1801, 572; in 1831, 743. A. P., £4,384.

WITHINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Broxash, co. of Hereford. Living, a discharged vicarage, to which is annexed the perpetual curacy of Preston-Wynne, rated at £5 1s., returned at £106 15s. 8d., and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the dean of Hereford. Church ded. to St Peter. The Baptists have a place of worship here. The overseers remark, "that the women and the infirm were formerly employed in spinning for the clothiers, by which they got a comfortable subsistence; but since the introduction of machinery this has totally failed, and there is no other employment for them but occasional assistance in agriculture." Distance from Hereford, 4 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, with the chapelry of Preston-Wynne, 503; in 1831, 723. A. P., £3,471.

WITHINGTON, a township in the parish of Manchester, hundred of Salford, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Distance from Manchester, 4 m. S. Pop., in 1801, 748; in 1831, 1048. A. P., £5,008.

WITHINGTON, a parish in the Wellington division of the hundred of South Bradford, co. of Salop. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, not in charge, returned at £64, and subordinate to the rectory of Upton-Magna. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. The parish is crossed by the Shrewsbury canal. Distance from Shrewsbury, 6 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 170; in 1831, 193. A. P., £1,377.

WITHINGTON (LOWER), a township in the parish of Prestbury, hundred of Macclesfield, co.-palatine of Chester. Here is a school for poor children, chiefly supported by Mr Parker. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. It is supposed that an ancient town stood here, from the name of a hill, Tunstet, in Saxon, the site of a town. Distance from Congleton, 7 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 540; in 1831, 584. A. P., £3,355.

WITHINGTON (OLD), a township in the parish of Prestbury, hundred of Macclesfield, co.-palatine of Chester. Distance from Congleton, $7\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 137; in 1831, 191. A. P., £1,266.

WITBYBROOK, a parish in the Kirby division of the hundred of Knightlow, co. of Warwick. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £8 6s. 8d., returned at £72 3s., and in the patronage of the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. Church ded. to All Saints. The parish includes the hamlet of Hopsford, and is crossed by the Oxford canal. Distance from Coventry, 8 m. N.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 294; in 1831, 318. A. P., £3,495.

WITHYCOMBE, a parish in the hundred of Carhampton, co. of Somerset. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £10 11s. 5½d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of Timothy Hutton, Esq. Church ded. to St Nicholas. Here is a curious Druidical structure formed of rude stones disposed in a circle; in the vicinity are two cairns or barrows. It is 2½ m. S.E. from Dunster. Pop., in 1801, 283; in 1831, 332. A. P., £1,978.

WITHYCOMBE-RAWLEIGH, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of Budleigh, co. of Devon. It contains a portion of the town of Exmouth. Living, a perpetual curacy, in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter, certified at £34, returned at £97, and annexed to the vicarage of East Budleigh. The church was rebuilt in 1745. Here are almshouses for poor persons, with a small endowment. The parish is bounded on the west by the river Exe, which is here navigable. The manor was formerly held on the tenure of presenting to the king two good arrows stuck into an oaten cake, whenever he should hunt in Dartmoor. Distance from Exmouth, 2½ m. E. Pop., in 1801, 692; in 1831, 1063. A. P., £5,763.

WITHYHAM, a parish in the hundred of Hartfield, rape of Pevensey, co. of Sussex. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester, rated at £25 5s. 5d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of the duke of Dorset. The church is a handsome Gothic structure, ded. to St Mary, erected in 1624, by Richard, earl of Dorset, who was buried here. Here was formerly Buckhurst, for six centuries the seat of the Saville family, ancestors of the duke of Dorset, whose first title was taken from it. When it was demolished, part of the materials were employed in the construction of Sackville college, East Grinstead. This parish is within the liberty of the duchy of Lancaster. Distance from East Grinstead, 6½ m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 1074; in 1831, 1610. A. P., £5,091.

WITHYPOOLE, a parish in the hundred of Williton and Freemanners, co. of Somerset. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells, certified at £17 10s., and subordinate to the vicarage of Hawkridge. Church ded. to St Andrew. Distance from Dulverton, 7 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 144; in 1831, 212. A. P., £955.

WITLEY, a parish in the second division of the hundred of Godalming, co. of Surrey. Living, a discharged vicarage, to which is annexed the perpetual curacy of Thursley, in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester, rated at £17 15s. 10d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of the Rev. J. F. Chandler. The church is in the early style of English architecture, and ded. to All Saints. Many ancient gold and silver coins have at various times been dug up here. Distance from Godalming, 3½ m. S. Pop., in 1801, 1039; in 1831, 1376. A. P., £5,282.

WITLEY (GREAT), a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Doddington, co. of Worcester. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester, rated at £7 6s. 3d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of Lord Foley. The church is a handsome structure, ded. to St Michael. The windows contained stained glass by Price, and the roof paintings by Verrio, which were formerly in the chapel at Camons, the seat of the late duke of Chandos, and were purchased for this place on the demolition of that princely mansion. The church contains monuments to the first lord and lady Foley, by whom it was erected in 1760. Here is the hamlet of Ridmarley, which formerly gave its name to the parish. The magistrates of the county occasionally hold the petty-sessions here. Distance from Stourport, 5 m. S.W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 425; in 1831, 386. A. P., £2,876.

WITLEY (LITTLE), a chapelry in the parish of Holt, lower division of the hundred of Oswaldslow, co. of Worcester. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, in the archd. and dio. of Worcester, and annexed to the rectory of Holt. Chapel ded. to St Michael. Distance from Worcester, 8½ m. N.W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 235; in 1831, 287. A. P., £1,701.

WITLINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of Henstead, co. of Norfolk. The living, which is now a sinecure from the decay of the chapel, is a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, certified at £6. The chapel was ded. to St Andrew. Distance from Norwich, 3 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 20; in 1831, 45. A. P., £866.

WITNESHAM, a parish in the hundred of Carleford, co. of Suffolk. Living, a rectory is the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £18 13s. 4d. Patrons, the master and fellows of the college of Peterhouse, Cambridge. Church ded. to St Mary. A few years ago, when some workmen were making excavations in the earth, they discovered the skeletons of a man and horse, the former clad in armour and seated on the animal. It has been supposed from the character of the armour that the individual was buried in the course of the parliamentary war. Distance from Ipswich, 4½ m. N. by E. Pop., in 1801, 387; in 1831, 562. A. P., £2,993.

WITNEY, a parish in the hundred of Bampton, co. of Oxford. It contains the market town of the same name, the chapelry of Hailey, and the hamlets of Crawley and Curbridge. This place existed long before the Conquest as a town of some importance, under the name of Whitney, or Whitney. In the reign of Edward the Confessor the manor was given by bishop Adwyn to the monastery of St Swithin at Winchester, in gratitude for the deliverance of Emma, mother to the king, from the fiery ordeal which she underwent in the cathedral of that city. It was formerly a royal borough, and sent two members to parliament from the 5th Edward II. to the 39th Edward III., when the inhabitants petitioned to be released from the burden, a petition by no means uncommon in the early periods of the history of the House of Commons. The town, which is situated on the river Windrush, consists principally of two streets, containing many well built houses, arranged with considerable regularity. The road from London to Cheltenham and Gloucester passes through it, and the vicinity abounds in agreeable scenery. Here is a neat stone bridge of three arches over the Windrush, erected in 1822. The town is within the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the county, and its internal affairs are regulated by two bailiffs, with constables and other officers, for the election of whom a court leet is held annually. The duke of Marlborough, as lessee under the bishop of Winchester, holds a court baron annually. Thursday is market day, and fairs for cattle, cheese, &c. are held on the Thursday in Easter week, the Thursdays after July 9th and 24th, the Thursday following the first Sunday after September 8th, the Thursday before October 10th, and that after December 1st. The inhabitants are partly employed in the manufacture of gloves, malt, and in various branches of the woollen manufacture. But the chief source of emolument is the manufacture of blankets, for which Witney has long been celebrated. About 2000 persons receive employment from this source, and the consumption of wool exceeds 6000 packs annually. The manufacture is by no means in such a flourishing condition as it once was. In the reign of Queen Anne, the blanket weavers in the town, and within twenty miles around it, were incorporated by the style of "The Master, Assistants, Wardens, and Commonalty of the blanket weavers of Witney, in Oxfordshire." At that period, 150 looms and 3000 persons were constantly employed, and the weekly consumption of wool amounted to about 1000 packs. The charter was found to lead to bad consequences, the rules framed by the corporation having retarded the interests of the trade, so that for many years the privilege has not been acted upon. For the convenience of the manufacturers a handsome blanket-hall was erected about 1721. In the market place is a neat town-hall, the lower part of which consists of piazzas for the use of the market.

The living consists of a rectory and vicarage, which are stated in Bacon's Liber Regis to have been "united, 9th Caroli I., into one benefice by the name of the rectory of Whitney, but all dues and fees were reserved as if they were still separate." They are both in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, and patronage of the bishop of Winchester. The rectory is rated at £47 9s. 4thd., and the vicarage at £9 12s. 6d. The church is a spacious cruciform structure, ded. to St Mary, presenting a combination of the early and decorated styles of English architecture. A tower springs from the intersection of the nave and transepts, surmounted by octagonal turrets and a richly ornamented spire. The clerestory windows of the nave are in the later style, and there is an elegant window of seven lights in the north transept. In the church are many curious monuments, and the chancel contains an ancient piscina of elegant form. The Independents, Society of Friends, and Wesleyan Methodists, have places of worship here. Here is a free grammar school, to which the grocers' company are trustees, and the provost and four senior fellows of Oriel college, Oxford, are visitors. It was founded in 1663 by Henry Box, who endowed it with a rent charge of £63 on an estate at Longworth, in the co. of Berks. There are a principal and sub-master. The scholars, who must be native of Witney, are limited to thirty. The buildings, which are surrounded by a spacious play ground, consist of a school room, library, and dwelling house for the principal. In 1723, Mr John Holloway founded a free school, and endowed it with lands, now producing about £135 per annum. It is intended for the instruction of the sons of journeymen weavers of Witney and Hailey, ten being sent from the former and five from the latter. The boys receive also clothing, a new suit once a year, and an apprentice fee of £15 is given with each on leaving the school. Mr Holloway also founded and endowed almshouses for six widows of blanket weavers, each of whom has two rooms and a garden, with a weekly allowance of 4s.; the endowment consists of £85 per annum, arising from land. Here is a school in which 30 girls receive instruction, on an endowment of £6 per annum, founded in 1693 by Mr William Blake of the parish of Cogga. Here is a national school, supported by subscription, in which 80 boys and 70 girls are educated. In Church-street were formerly six ancient almshouses, which in 1796 were demolished. On the site were erected six good houses, the rents of which are distributed to certain poor persons. In 1828, Mrs Townsend erected six good almshouses for aged unmarried females. Distance from Oxford, 11 m. N. by W.; from London, 65 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, of the township, 2584; of the entire parish, 4349: in 1831, of the former, 3190; of the latter, 5336. A. P., £3,204.

WITTENHAM (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of Ock, co. of Berks. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £17 10s., and, in 1829, in the patronage of the Rev. J. F. Hilliard. Church ded. to St Peter. The north side of the parish is bounded by the river Isis, into which the Thames flows on the opposite side. Here are traces of an ancient encampment, the origin of which is involved in doubt, but is generally attributed to the ancient Britons. It was subsequently possessed by the Romans. The site is called Sinodun-hill. Distance from Wallingford, 4 m. N.W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 134; in 1831, 113. A. P., £1,839.

WITTENHAM (LONG, or WEST), a parish in the hundred of Ock, co. of Berks. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £12 12s. 6d., returned at £113 7s. Patrons, the rector and fellows of Exeter college, Oxford. Church ded. to All Saints. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Here is a national school, supported by subscription. The river Thames flows along the north border of the parish. Distance from Wallingford, 5 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 451; in 1831, 547. A. P., £3,976.

WITTERING, or WHITTERING, a parish in the liberty of Peterborough, co. of Northampton. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £8 0s. 10d., returned at £104, and, in 1829, in patronage of the marquess of Exeter. Church ded. to All Saints. Here was a priory founded about 1308. Distance from Wansford, 2½ m. N.W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 194; in 1831, 216. A. P., £1,556.

WITTERING (EAST), a parish in the hundred of Manhood, rape of Chichester, co. of Sussex. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chichester, rated at £6 18s. 8d., and in the patronage of the bishop of Chichester. Distance from Chichester, 6 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 202; in 1831, 226. A. P., £1,791.

WITTERING (WEST), a parish in the hundred of Manhood, rape of Chichester, co. of Sussex. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester, rated at £10, returned at £149, and in the patronage of the prebendary of West Wittering, in the cathedral church of Chichester. The church presents a combination of English architecture of various dates. This parish has the privilege of sending four boys to a school at Chichester, founded and endowed in 1702 by Oliver Whitby. Here is a school in which six poor boys receive education on an endowment of £3 per annum, given by the same person. The English channel bounds the parish on the south-west, and the mouth of Chichester harbour lies on the north-west side. Distance from Chichester, 7½ m. S.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 396; in 1831, 608. A. P., £3,606.

WITTERSHAM, or WITTESHAM, a parish in the hundred of Oxney, lathe of Shepway, co. of Kent. Living, a rectory in the dio. of Canterbury, rated at £15 8s. 6½d., and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the archbishop of Canterbury. The church is an irregular structure, ded. to St John the Baptist. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Tenterden, 4½ m. S. by E. Pop., in 1801, 496; in 1831, 919. A. P., £5,005.

WITTINGDON, a hundred in the rape of Lewes, co. of Sussex, containing five parishes.

WITTINGTON, a hamlet in the parish of Northwold, co. of Norfolk.

WITTON, a parochial chapelry, locally in the parish of Great Budworth, hundred of Northwich, co.-palatine of Chester. It contains the township of Twambrooke and part of that of Rudheath. The village, which forms a suburb to the town of Northwich, stands on an elevated spot near the banks of the river Dane. The living is a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester, certified at £20 3s., returned at £85, and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord de Tabley. The chapel, which is an elegant structure in the later style of English architecture, is ded. to St Helen. Here is a free grammar school, of which the king and bishop of Chester are visitors. It is free to the descendants of the founder and to such children whose parents reside in the chapelry. They are educated in Greek, Latin, and the doctrines of Christianity, and are governed by statutes resembling those of Harrow school, and St Paul's school, London. The government is vested in 12 fellows, who appoint the master, subject to the approval of the bishop of Chester, and the master of the king's school, Chester. The buildings, which were rebuilt in the commencement of last century, stand near the church, and consist of a school-room, porter's lodge, and residence for the master. It was founded in 1588, by Sir John Deane, and endowed with property which had formerly belonged to the college of St John the Baptist and Guild of St Anne, in the city of Chester, to the priory of Norton, in the county of Chester, and to that of Basingwork, in the county of Flint; also with a salt work in the town of Northwich. The income arising from these now amounts to £400 per annum. Connected with this institution was formerly some exhibitions in the university of Oxford, founded in 1624 by Thomas Farmer, A. M., who had been master of the school for 40 years; also an annuity in augmentation of the master's stipend, founded in 1715 by Peter Cotton. These bequests have, from some cause or another, been lost. Distance from Northwich, ¼ m. E. Pop., in 1801, 1531; in 1831, 2912. A. P., £5,316.

WITTON, a parish in the hundred of Huntingstone, co. of Huntingdon. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, and subordinate to the rectory of Houghton. Church ded. to All Saints. The river Ouse bounds the northern side of the parish. Distance from St Ives, 2½ m. W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 213; in 1831, 277. A. P., £2,242.

WITTON, a township in the parish and hundred of Blackburn, co.-palatine of Lancaster. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in some cotton-spinning manufactories. The river De-went runs along the south boundary of the township. Distance from Blackburn, 2 m. N. by W. Pop., in 1801, 461; in 1831, 1047. A. P., £2,503.

WITTON, a parish in the hundred of Blodfield, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged rectory, to which are united those of Brundel and Little Plumstead, rated at £6 13s. 4d., returned at £118 12s., and, in 1829, in patronage of J. Musket, Esq. Church ded. to St Margaret. Distance from Norwich, 3½ m. E. Pop., in 1801, 187; in 1831, 293. A. P., £1,694.

WITTON (EAST), a parish in the western division of the wapentake of Hang, N. R. co. of York. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, rated at £3 8s. 6½d., returned at £111, and, in 1829, in patronage of the marquess of Aylesbury. In this parish are the remains of Jervaux abb. Akarius Fitz-Dardolph, in the time of K.

Stephen, gave to Peter de Quinciano, a monk, and to other monks of Savigny, certain lands at Fors and Worton, in Wensleydale, being part of his possessions; where, in 1145, they began to lay foundations of a monastery of their order, Cistercians, which was successively called the abbey of Fors, Wensleydale, and Charity. The donations that were made by Akarius and others appeared to have been confirmed by Alan, earl of Richmond. Serlo, then abbot of Savigny, disapproved of the foundation, as having been made without his knowledge and consent; neither did he choose, though repeatedly solicited by Peter, to supply it with monks from his convent, on account of the great difficulties experienced by those whom he had before sent into England. He therefore, in a general chapter, proposed that it should be transferred to the abbey of Byland. This being agreed to, twelve monks, with Joker de Kingstons for their abbot, were sent to them from that house. After undergoing great hardships for some time from the smallness of their endowment and the sterility of their lands, (during which they received occasional relief from the abbot of Byland,) Conan, son to Alan, earl of Richmond, greatly increased their revenues, and, in 1156, they removed their monastery to a pleasant and healthy valley in East Witton, the present situation. This was done with the consent of Harocus, son of Akarius the founder, who took care to reserve to himself the patronage of the abbey as well as the prayers of the monks, usually offered up for the founder and his relations, and that the bones of his father and mother should be removed to an honourable place in the new monastery. In this place the monks erected a magnificent church and monastery, which, like most of the Cistercian order, was dedicated to St Mary. At the dissolution, it was valued according to Speed at £455 10s. 5d. The site was granted, 36th Henry VIII., to Matthew, earl of Lennox, and Lady Margaret his wife. What little remains of this ancient structure had become nearly overgrown with rough wood and briars, and scarcely any trace of it as a building was seen, except some few arches, nearly level with the ground, when, in 1805, the late earl of Aylesbury visited this place, and among a great variety of improvements projected on his estate, was much pleased to find that his steward had dug down to the bottom of one of the arches, which proved to be the door of the church, and discovered a beautiful floor of tessellated pavement. His lordship caused the whole of this ruin to be explored and cleared out, which was done in 1806 and 1807; when the abbey, church, and choir, with the transepts and high altar, several tombs, the chapter house, abbot's house, kitchen, &c., were discovered. Distance from Middleham, 2 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 682; in 1831, 687. A. P., £5,631.

WITTON (GILBERT), a parish in the eastern division of the ward of Chester, co.-palatine of Durham. Living, a rectory, to which is united that of Kimblesworth, not in charge, certified at £55 11s., in the archd. and dio. of Durham, and in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham. Church ded. to St Michael. Here is a school, in which eight children are educated on an endowment of £12 per annum, arising from land given for the purpose in 1728, by Jane Tinney. Here was an hospital for five lepers, founded at a remote period by Gilbert de la Ley. It is bounded on the south by the river Browney. Distance from Durham, 3½ m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 359; in 1831, 417. A. P., £3,648.

WITTON-LE-WEAR, a parish in the north-western division of the ward of Darlington, co.-palatine of Durham. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Durham, certified at £11 10s., returned at £103 18s. 4d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of W. Chaytor, Esq. The chapel is an ancient structure, ded. to St Philip and St James. The vicinity abounds in coal. The river Wear—on the north bank of which stands the village—is here crossed by a bridge. Here is a grammar school, founded by John Cuthbert, Esq., and endowed with the interest of £200. The school-room erected by the founder is now occupied as a private boarding school. Here are remains of Witton-Castle, founded in 1410, and recently burnt down during some repairs. It was the baronial residence of the Lord de Eure, and was held for the king during the civil war by Sir William D'Arcy, but was besieged and taken by a detachment of the parliamentary army, under Sir Arthur Haslerigg. The building was an oblong keep, flanked with towers and turrets. Distance from Bishop-Aukland, 5 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 450; in 1831, 502. A. P., £3,852.

WITTON (LONG), a township in the parish of Hartburn, western division of the ward of Morpeth, co. of Northumberland. Distance from Morpeth, 8 m. W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 124; in 1831, 143.

WITTON (NETHER), a parish in the western division of the ward of Morpeth, co. of Northumberland. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham, and annexed to the vicarage of Hartburn. Church ded. to St Giles. Here are the townships of Coat-Yards, Ewesley, Healy-with-Comb-hill, Nether Witton, Nunnikirk, Ritton-Coltpark, and Ritton-Whitehouse. Distance from Morpeth, 8 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 465; in 1831, 520. A. P., £4,084.

WITTON (UPPER), a chapelry in the parish of Aston, Birmingham division of the hundred of Hemlingford, co. of Warwick. Distance from Birmingham, 3½ m. N. by E. Pop., returned with that of the parish.

WITTON-SHIELDS, a township in the parish of Long Horsley, western division of the ward of Morpeth, co. of Northumberland. Here is a strong tower, erected in 1608 by Sir Nicholas Thornton; it has been converted into a chapel for Roman Catholics, in which service is performed once a month. Distance from Morpeth, 7 m. N.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 21; in 1831, 63.

WITTON (WEST), a parish in the western division of the wapentake of Hang, N. R. of the co. of York. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, certified at £5 16s. 8d., returned at £75, and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Bolton. The church is of considerable antiquity, being attributed by some to the reign of Henry I. It commands a beautiful view of Wensleydale. Here is a school in which poor children are educated on an endowment of £12 per annum arising from £250, given in 1790 by Charles Robinson. "Here standithe the ruine of a castlet or pill, on the toppe of a hill which is callid Penhill. It longed to Rafe Fitz-Randol, as Midleham dyd." Leland's Itinerary. "The king granted to Ralph, erle of Westmoreland, free chace in all his lands of Burton in Bishopsdale, Walden, West Witten, and Wensleydale." Bibl. Haw. No. 793. p. 17. Distance from Middleham, 5 m. W. Pop., in 1801, 446; in 1831, 552. A. P., £3,555.

WIVELISCOMBE, a market-town and parish, situated with three other parishes, in a detached portion of the western division of the hundred of Kingbury, co. of Somerset. The town has existed from a remote antiquity, but its history presents nothing worthy of notice; the name is supposed to have been derived from the Saxon words Willis or Fili, many, and Combe, a dell or ravine; many of which exist in the vicinity. The town is situated on a low hill, in the midst of a valley of some extent, bounded by lofty hills which are interrupted by numerous ravines. The town consists of several streets, containing some handsome modern houses, as well as a number which bear the stamp of considerable antiquity. The streets have of late received a number of improvements, having been widened and partially paved, so that they have a respectable air. Water is brought in pipes from a spring at the distance of about a mile. The interests of the town have been considerably promoted by the recent diversion of the mail road through it. The town is governed by a bailiff and portreeve, chosen, with ale-tasters and other officers, at a court-leet held annually. These officers have no magisterial authority, but the magistrates of the county have jurisdiction. One part of the town is called the borough, and at an early period the inhabitants sent members to parliament, but were relieved from that burden at their own request. The inhabitants are employed to a considerable extent in the weaving of blankets and in other branches of the woollen manufacture. Tuesday and Saturday are market-days, and are well frequented by corn-merchants and others. Fairs for oxen, sheep, &c., are held on May 12th, and September 25th. A great market for oxen is also held on the last Tuesday in February, on which occasion a great deal of business is usually done.

The living is a vicarage, rated at £27 0s. 10d., and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the prebendary of Wiveliscombe, in the cathedral church of Wells. The church is a handsome structure in the early style of English architecture, and ded. to St Andrew. It was erected a short time ago at an expense of £6,000, and contains 558 sittings, 457 of which are free. The money was raised on the security of the parish rates, to be paid off in 20 years, aided by subscriptions, and a grant of £500 from the incorporated society for building and enlarging churches. Here is an infirmary for the reception of the sick poor. The Independents have a place of worship here. Here are traces of two ancient encampments, and remains of an episcopal palace. In digging the foundations of the church some Roman and Saxon coins were found. Distance from Somerton, 28 m. W.; and from London, 155 W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 2571; in 1831, 3047. A. P., £11,615.

WIVELSFIELD, a parish in the hundred of Street, rape of Lewes, co. of Sussex. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester, certified at £20, returned at £28, and, in 1829, in the patronage of the improprators of the rectorial tithes. The church is a Gothic structure, ded. to St John. Here is a school, in which six poor children are educated on an endowment of £5 per annum, for the foundation of which, Francis More, Esq., bequeathed £100 in 1723. The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. Distance from Cuckfield, 4 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 423; in 1831, 559. A. P., £1,767.

WIVENHOE, a parish in the Colchester division of the hundred of Lexden, co. of Essex. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London, rated at £10, and, in 1829, in the patronage of the Rev. N. Corsellis. Church ded. to St Mary. A few poor boys are educated in the school here, on an endowment of £2 per annum, given by Mr Potter. The river Colne bounds the parish on the west and south. Here is a custom-house, and this is regarded as the port to Colchester. The quay is very commodious, and vast numbers of the celebrated Colchester oysters are shipped from hence for London and other markets. The Independents have a place of worship here. Distance from Colchester, $\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 1093; in 1831, 1714. A. P., £3,299.

WIVETON, a parish in the hundred of Holt, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £15, and, in 1829, in the patronage of G. Wyndham, Esq. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Clay, $\frac{1}{2}$ m. W. Pop., in 1801, 172; in 1831, 218. A. P., £726.

WIXAMTREE, a hundred near the centre of the co. of Bedford. It contains eight parishes, and the pop. in 1831, was 6547.

WIXFORD, or WICKLESFORD, a parish in the Stratford division of the hundred of Barchway, co. of Warwick. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Worcester, not in charge, and subordinate to the rectory of Exhall. Distance from Alcester, 2 m. S. Pop., in 1801, 116; in 1831, 106. A. P., £860.

WIX, or WEEKS, a parish in the hundred of Tendring, co. of Essex. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Colchester, and dio. of London, endowed with £1900, and, in 1829, in the patronage of Miss Hickeringham. Church ded. to St Mary. Here is a school, with a endowment of £5 per annum, arising from a bequest by Mr Clarke. In the time of Henry L., Walter Mascherell and others, founded here a monastery for nuns of the Benedictine order, to the honour of the Virgin Mary, and endowed it with property. At the dissolution its revenues were rated at £92 12s. 3d., and its possessions were granted by Henry VIII. to Cardinal Wolsey towards the endowment of his projected colleges. Distance from Manningtree, $4\frac{1}{2}$ m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 573; in 1831, 832. A. P., £5,208.

WOBURN, or OLD WOBURN, a market-town and pariah in the hundred of Manshead, co. of Bedford. The town is chiefly of modern erection, having suffered extensively from fire in 1594 and 1724. It stands on the high road from London to Leeds, and consists of several streets, broad and well-built, intersecting one another at right angles, and partially paved. The supply of water is chiefly obtained from wells. The magistrates of the county have jurisdiction over the town, and hold petty-sessions for the hundred here, on the first Friday of every month. The inhabitants are partly employed in agriculture, partly in the manufacture of straw-plait and thread-lace. Friday is market-day; and fairs for horses, cattle, sheep, and hogs, are held on January 1st, March 23d, July 13th, and September 25th. The market-house is a handsome structure of brick, situated in the centre of the town. It was erected in 1724 at the expense of the Bedford family, on the site of a former structure destroyed in the great fire which happened in that year. The lord of the manor holds occasional courts here, for the appointment of constables. During the winter season assemblies are occasionally held here. "Near this place," says Tanner in his Notitia, "Hugh de Bolbec, A. D. 1145, built an abbey for Cistercian monks, to the honour of the blessed Virgin Mary. The whole income of this monastery was certified, 26th Henry VIII. to be £391 18s. 2d., according to Dugdale, or £431 13s. 11d. according to Mr Speed. The site, with great part of the lands, was granted, 1st Edward VI. to Lord John Russell." On the site of this abbey was erected a stately mansion for the duke of Bedford, about the middle of last century. It was built under the superintendence of Mr Flitcroft, and subsequently considerably enlarged after plans by Mr Holland, the well-known architect of Drury-lane theatre. The form of the whole is quadrangular, inclosing a spacious court, and situated in an extensive park well-stocked with deer and game. The west front, which is of Ionic architecture, contains the principal rooms. This place was visited in 1572 by Queen Elizabeth, and in 1645 by Charles I. Several stone coffins have at different times been found here; and in 1744, on taking down a part of the ancient conventual buildings, a corpse was found in a remarkable state of preservation, though it had probably been buried upwards of 200 years before. The building still retains its name of Woburn-abbey. With a distinguished liberality the present noble proprietor permits the inhabitants of the vicinity to walk at pleasure in the grounds. About a mile from the town is a petrifying spring. Living, a perpetual curacy of the certified yearly value of £60, returned at £135 5s., formerly subordinate to the vicarage of Birchwood, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the incumbent, and in the patronage of the duke of Bedford. The church, which was erected by Robert Hobbs, the last abbot of Woburn, is a curious structure ded. to St Mary. It is nearly covered with ivy, and has a detached quadrangular tower about 50 feet in height. It contains a fine representation of the Nativity, given for an altar-piece by the present duke of Bedford, and some curious monuments of considerable antiquity, among which may be noticed one of the family of Stanton, on which are twelve figures in the attitude of prayer. The pulpit is supposed to have belonged to the abbey from an early period of its existence; it is richly ornamented with niches, pillars, and tracery. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. Here is a free school, founded in 1582 by Francis, fifth earl of Bedford, and further endowed by one of his successors. The duke contributes £50 per annum, and the remainder of the sum required for its support is raised by subscription. It is conducted on the system of Mr Lancaster, and is open to an unlimited number of children of both sexes, of whom about 150 at present receive education. Here are 12 almshouses for 24 poor widows, founded and endowed in 1672, by John, duke of Bedford. Distance from Bedford, 15 m. S.W. by S.; and from London, 41 m. N.W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 1563; in 1831, 1837. A. P., £7,390.

WOBURN (WEST, or BISHOP'S), a pariah, formerly a market-town, in the hundred of Desborough, co. of Buckingham. It stands in a pleasant valley, near the bank of the small river Wycombe, on which are several corn and paper mills. The pariah contains 2596 acres of land and was inclosed in 1802. The market, which was held on Friday, has fallen into disuse; fairs for horses, cattle, and sheep are held on May 4th and November 12th. Here is a small manufactory of lace. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £12, and, in 1829, in the patronage of James Dupré, Esq. The church, which is ded. to St Paul, is a spacious ancient structure, consisting of a nave and aisles, with a strong tower. It contains some interesting monuments and a curious font covered with carving. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. Here is a school on the Lancastrian system, supported by voluntary contributions. Here was formerly a palace of the bishops of Lincoln. In the sixteenth century a mansion, now occupied by the lord of the manor, was erected upon its site, including some portions of the original structure. In one of the rooms was imprisoned Thomas Chaer of Amerham, in 1506, on account of his religious opinions. Distance from Beaconsfield, 3 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 1401; in 1831, 1927. A. P., £4,923.

WOKEFIELD, a tything in the pariah of Stratfield-Mortimer, hundred of Theale, co. of Berks. Pop., in 1831, 160.

WOKING, a hundred on the western side of the co. of Surrey. It contains 14 parishes, and the pop. in 1831, was 12,069.

WOKING, a parish, formerly a market-town, in the hundred of the same name, co. of Surrey. It is divided into the tythings of Townstreet, Goldsworth, Heathside, Kingfield, Mayford, Shackelford, Hale-end, Crastock, and Sutton; all of which, Crastock and Sutton excepted, are in the manor of Woking. The town stands on the river Wey, and the parish is crossed by the Basingstoke canal. This was one of the royal demesnes in the time of Edward the Confessor. It was afforested by Henry II., in 1154, and given by his successor to Lord Bassett. It passed through the hands of several families, as the Despencers, Edmund of Woodstock, the Zouches, and the mansion was often honoured with the presence of royalty. It belonged to Edward IV., Henry VII., Henry VIII., and Charles I., and passed through many hands to those of the earl of Onslow, the present possessor. Of this palace few traces now remain. The lord of the manor holds courts leet and baron. The market, which was held on Tuesday, has fallen into disuse; a fair, for toys, is held on Whit-Tuesday. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester, rated at £11 0s. 5d., and, in 1289, in the patronage of Earl Onslow. The church, which is in a mixed style of English architecture, is ded. to St Peter. In the windows are some remains of ancient stained glass, and the interior contains some monuments and brasses. On the west side of the river stands Sutton-house, the residence of the Weston family. It was erected about 1530 by Sir Richard Weston, and presents a fine example of the domestic architecture of the 16th century. The original building was of a quadrangular form, inclosing a court 80 feet square. The gateway was a noble structure with turrets at the angles. It was destroyed in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, by a fire which took place during a visit from that monarch, and continued in a ruinous state till 1721, when Mr Weston caused it to be repaired. Of the original building the south-west and north-east fronts remain. Distance from Ripley, 2½ m. W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 1840; in 1831, 1975. A. P., £9,766.

WOKINGHAM, or OAKINGHAM, a parish and market town partly in the hundred of Sonning, co. of Berks, and partly in the hundred of Amesbury, co. of Wilts, but having separate jurisdiction. The original name was Oakingham, and there is an acorn on the seal of the corporation. It stands within the limits of Windsor Forest, and consists of several streets diverging from the market place, occupying a triangular area. The streets are not regularly built, but contain good houses. Water is abundant, and the situation is remarkably healthy, so that the inhabitants are considered to be remarkable for longevity. The inhabitants are partly employed in the making of malt and flour, and in the manufacture of shoes, gauze, and silks. Tuesday is market day, when poultry in particular is supplied in remarkable abundance. Fairs, chiefly for horses and cattle, are held on April 23d, June 11th, October 11th, and November 2d. There is no record of the time when the town was incorporated, it therefore holds its privileges by prescription. The government is vested in an alderman, seven capital burgesses, high steward, recorder, and town-clerk. These, with the exception of the town-clerk, are justices-of-the-peace, and have exclusive jurisdiction within the town. The alderman is elected from among the burgesses on Wednesday in Easter week. The freedom of the town is obtained by birth, apprenticeship, purchase, or gift from the corporation. Courts of session for lesser offences are held twice a year by the corporation, who are likewise entitled to hold a court of requests for the recovery of small debts, but the privilege has been allowed to fall into disuse. The lord of the manor holds occasional courts, and the magistrates of the county of Berks hold petty sessions here for the Wokingham, or forest division of the county, on the first and third Tuesdays of every month. The forest courts, now discontinued, were formerly held here, as being the only town in the forest. In the centre of the market place is the town hall, an ancient building, recently repaired. Balls are occasionally held here. Living, a perpetual curacy, certified at £40, returned at £130, and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the dean of Salisbury. The church is an ancient and handsome structure, ded. to All Saints. The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. Here is a free school for children of both sexes, in which 34 boys and 12 girls receive gratuitous instruction, besides others who pay small sums. The master and free scholars are appointed by the corporation. The endowment arises partly from a rent charge of £20 per annum, given in 1811 by Dr Charles Palmer, partly from minor bequests, and partly from voluntary contributions. Here is also a Sunday school for 200 children, conducted on the national system, and supported partly by funded endowment and partly by subscription. The building, which cost £700, was erected in 1825. Near the church are eight almshouses for 16 poor persons, founded and endowed by Mr John Westend in 1451. About a mile from the town is the hospital of Luckley-Green, founded in 1665 by Henry Lucas, Esq., and placed under the superintendence of the Drapers' company in London. It contains 16 poor pensioners and a master. The pensioners receive £14 per annum, and are chosen alternately from the counties of Berks and Surrey. The curate of the parish is chaplain and has a free house. The hospital is a neat structure, the erection of which cost £2,320. Archbishop Laud left £60 per annum to be bestowed for two successive years in apprenticing poor boys, and on every third year in portioning poor maidens. Dr Thomas Goodwin, bishop of Bath and Wells, was born here, and educated in the free school. Distance from Reading, 7 m. E.S.E.; and from London, 32 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 2261; in 1831, 2692. A. P., £7,620.

WOLD. See OLD.

WOLD-NEWTON, a parish in the wapentake of Dickering, E. R., co. of York. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of the E. R. and dio. of York, rated at £6 19s. 9½d., returned at £60, and, in 1829, in patronage of the Honourable M. Langley. The church is a small but neat edifice, having a nave, chancel, and small turret at the west end. On the south side is a porch, and within it a circular arched entrance; the upper part inclosed with chequer work, and a cross in a circle. The interior is neat, with a circular font ornamented in the upper part with leaves and cable mouldings. This was anciently a chapelry to Hunmanby, to which it still continues to pay a small annual sum, and the inhabitants bury their dead there. Here is a chapel for Wesleyan Methodists, erected in 1830. The lord of the manor is H. B. Osbaldeston, Esq. "The village is small and pleasantly situated in a valley, with a large mere or lake, principally supplied by the Gipseys. These are streams of water which at different periods are observed on some parts of the Yorkshire Wolds; they appear towards the end of winter or early in the spring. They are then seen trickling through the grass where the ground is not broken, and sometimes rushing with considerable force through the surface; and the emission of water is sometimes so copious as to constitute a very considerable stream, filling a drain twelve feet wide and three feet deep, called by the country people the Gypsy race, by which it is conveyed to the sea. This is probably the re-appearance of a Wold stream, running eastward till it is absorbed a few miles from the village; but it is undoubtedly accelerated and augmented by a continuance of heavy rains; and indeed the Gipseys never make their appearance except in a very wet season, when they sometimes flow during two or three months, and then totally cease, leaving scarcely a mark to distinguish the place from which the water issued. There can be no doubt that the ancient Britons exalted their rivers and streams into the offices of religion; and whenever an object had been thus employed, it was revered with a degree of sanctity ever after; and, we may readily suppose, that the sudden and extraordinary appearance of this stream after an interval of two or three successive years, would awaken their curiosity and astonishment. From the Druids may probably have descended a custom, formerly prevalent among the young people at North Barton, but now discontinued. It was, 'going to meet the Gipseys,' on her first approach. Whether or not this meeting was accompanied by any particular ceremony, is not ascertained." Allen's Yorkshire. It is 8 m. from Bridlington. Pop., in 1801, 106; in 1831, 252. A. P., £2,018.

WOLLAND, a parish in the hundred of Whiteway, Sherborne division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly a rectory, a peculiar of Milton-Abbas, and subordinate to the vicarage of Hilton. The church, having fallen into ruins, was almost entirely rebuilt in 1745. Distance from Blandford-Forum, 9 m. W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 123; in 1831, 119. A. P., £1,426.

WOLLASCOT, a hamlet in the parish of St Mary, liberty of the town of Shrewsbury, co. of Salop.

WOLLASHULL, or WOLVERSHULL, a hamlet, formerly a chapelry in the parish of Eckington, upper division of the hundred of Pershore, co. of Worcester. The chapel is now in ruins. It was ded. to St Catherine. Distance from Pershore, 4 m. S. Pop. and other returns included in those of the parish.

WOLLASTON, a parish in the hundred of Higham-Ferrers, co. of Northampton. Living, a discharged vicarage, to which is annexed that of Irchester, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £13 6s. 8d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of Francis Dickens, Esq. The church is a handsome cruciform structure, ded. to St Mary. From the intersection of the nave and transepts springs a handsome tower surmounted by a lofty spire. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. The parish is crossed by the river Nen. Distance from Wellingborough, 3 m. S. by E. Pop., in 1801, 761; in 1831, 975. A. P., £5,335.

WOLLASTON, a hamlet in the parish of Old Swinford, lower division of the hundred of Halfshire, co. of Worcester.

WOLLASTONE. See WOOLASTONE.

WOLLATON, anciently OLAVESTON, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of Broxtow, co. of Nottingham. Living, a discharged rectory, to which is annexed the perpetual curacy of Cosal, in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, rated at £14 2s. 6d., returned at £88 11s. 4d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Middleton. The church is a Gothic building, in a mixed style, ded. to St Leonard. Here is Wollaton-hall, an extensive and handsome edifice in the Elizabethan style of domestic architecture. It was erected of freestone brought from Ancaster in the co. of Lincoln, by Sir Francis Willoughby, and is now the residence of Lord Middleton. Here are coal mines, which have been wrought to a great extent from time immemorial. The parish is crossed by the Nottingham canal. Distance from Nottingham, 3 m. W. Pop., in 1801, 838; in 1831, 537. A. P., £2,939.

WOLLERTON, a hamlet in the parish of Hodnet, Drayton division of the hundred of Bradford North, co. of Salop, 5 m. S.W. from Drayton-in-Hales.

WOLLESCOT, a hamlet in the parish of Old Swinford, hundred of Halfshire, co. of Worcester.

WOLLEY, a parish in the hundred of Bath-Forum, co. of Somerset. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells, not in charge, and subordinate to that of Bathwick. Church ded. to All Saints. Distance from Bath, 3 m. N. Pop., in 1801, 80; in 1831, 104. A. P., £1,155.

WOLPHAMCOTE, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of Knightlow, co. of Warwick. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £12 8s. 2d., returned at £73, and, in 1829, in patronage of J. Tibbits, Esq. The parish is crossed by the Oxford canal. Church ded. to St Peter. On sinking a well in the village a sort of vault was lately discovered, in which was found a number of coins and urns. Distance from Dunchurch, 5½ m. S.E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 371; in 1831, 372. A. P., £6,366.

WOLPHY, a hundred at the north-eastern extremity of the co. of Hereford, bounded by Salop and Worcester. It contains 28 parishes, with the town of Leominster. Pop., in 1831, 18,014.

WOLSINGHAM, a market town and parish in the north-western division of the ward of Darlington, co.-palatine of Durham. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Durham, rated at £31 13s. 4d., and in the patronage of the bishop of Durham. Church ded. to St Mary and St Stephen. It is a plain structure with a low tower, standing on a rising ground to the north-west of the village, and containing a very handsome font of Weardale marble. The Baptists and Methodists (Wesleyan and Primitive,) have places of worship here. The town is very irregular, and stands on the north bank of the river Wear. A new town hall was begun in 1824, but has not been completed for want of funds. The inhabitants are partly employed in the numerous coal, lime, and lead works of the neighbourhood, and partly in the manufacture of linen, woollen cloth, edge-tools, and agricultural implements. The bishop of Durham is lord of the manor, and holds courts leet and baron twice a year, at which claims may be tried for the recovery of debts under 40s. The petty sessions for the division are held here every Wednesday by the magistrates of the co. The jurisdiction of the manorial courts extends to Bishopley, North and South Bradburn, Lysack, Softley, and Stanhope. A market and fairs are held under grant of the bishop. Tuesday is market day, and fairs for cattle and general merchandise are held on May 12th and October 2d. Here is a free grammar school, founded in 1613, in which 24 boys receive education. The house and master's residence were rebuilt by the bishop in 1786. Here are Sunday schools attended by nearly 200 children, and a school in which 40 girls receive education. Near a field called the Chapel-Garth, are remains of an ancient structure supposed to have been the manor house of the bishop of Durham. Distance from Durham, 16 m. W.S.W., and from London, 269 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 1834; in 1831, 2239. A. P., £9,351.

WOLSTAN, or WOLFUCHESTON, a parish in the Rugby division of the hundred of Knightlow, co. of Warwick. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £15 10s., and, in 1829, in patronage of Lady Scott. The Baptists have a place of worship here. "Some lands, with the church and tithes here, are said to have been given to the abbey of St Peter, super Divam, in Normandy, by Roger de Montgomery, or some other benefactor, shortly after the Conquest, whereupon some Black monks from that foreign monastery were placed here. These alien priories being often seized during the wars with France, this was sold by the abbot and convent of St Peter aforesaid, to the prior and convent of Carthusians near Coventry, 18th Richard II., and as parcel of their possessions, was granted, 3d Edward VI., to Richard Felde and Richard Woodward."—Tanner's Notitia. In the vicinity are remains of a Roman encampment. Distance from Rugby, 6½ m. W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 577; in 1831, 968. A. P., £9,067.

WOLSTANTON, a parish and township in the northern division of the hundred of Firehill, co. of Stafford. The living is divided into a perpetual curacy, certified at £9 15s., and a rectory, rated at £33 3s. 9d., both in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, and, in 1829, in patronage of Walter Smyd, Esq. Church ded. to St Nicholas. The chapel is a neat structure. The Grand Trunk canal here passes under a tunnel $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. in length. This parish is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and subject to the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. The school has a small endowment. Distance from Newcastle-under-Lyne, $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. N. by E. Pop., in 1801, of the village, 848; of the parish, 4679; in 1831, of the former, 1063; of the latter, 10,853. A. P., £20,522.

WOLSTHORPE, a hamlet in the parish of Lowdham, co. of Nottingham.

WOLSTON, or WESTON-NEGEND, a chapel in the parish of Worthen, hundred of Chirbury, co. of Salop. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford, not in charge, and subordinate to the rectory of Worthen. Church ded. to All Saints. Distance from Montgomery, $7\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.E. Pop. with parish.

WOLVERTON, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of Erpingham, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £8, and subordinate to the rectory of Wickmere. Church ded. to St Margaret. In the windows of this structure, which is supposed to have been founded by John de Wulterton, is some ancient stained glass, with portraits of the founder and his lady, and figures supposed to represent the twelve apostles. Distance from Aylsham, 4 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 114; in 1831, 163. A. P., £2,337.

WOLVERCOTE, or WOOLVERCOTT, a parish in the hundred of Wootton, co. of Oxford. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, certified at £22, returned at £40, subordinate to the vicarage of St Peter-in-the-East, and in patronage of the warden and fellows of Merton college, Oxford. Church ded. to St Peter. Here is a school on the national system, in which about 65 boys and 55 girls receive education. The master and mistress have a house rent free, and an income of £52, derived partly from voluntary contributions, with an annuity of £3 drawn from the poor's estate. The river Isis passes the parish close to the church. About 1138, a pious lady called Editha, founded and endowed a monastery for monks of the Benedictine order here, which was ded. to the Virgin Mary and St John the Baptist. To this monastery Henry II. gave many possessions and privileges, so that at the dissolution its revenues amounted to £319 18s. 8d. Within the walls of this establishment were interred the remains of Fair Rosamond. Distance from Oxford, 3 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 341; in 1831, 524. A. P., £2,381.

WOLVERHAMPTON,

A parish in the co. of Stafford. It lies partly in the southern division of the hundred of Off-

low, partly in the northern division of the hundred of Seisdon, and partly in the eastern division of the hundred of Cuttlestone. In the first are the chapelries of Pelsall, Wednesfield, and Willenhall; in the second the market towns of Bilston and Wolverhampton; and in the third the townships of Featherstone, Haughton, Hilton, and Kirwaston. Pop., of the whole, in 1801, 24,536; in 1831, 48,080. A. P. with the chapelries.

Town.—The town of Wolverhampton is situated on a rising ground, and consists of several streets diverging from a centre, in which is the market place. An act was obtained in 1814, under which several recent improvements have taken place, especially the formation of a new street forming the entrance from Bilston. The streets are well lighted with coal gas, but irregularly paved, and contain many handsome houses, chiefly of modern erection, with a few apparently of considerable antiquity. Water is obtained chiefly from wells sunk in the rock; though difficult to be got on account of the great depth to which the wells must be sunk, the supply is sufficiently abundant. Here is a neat theatre, lately erected. In the town hall, which has since been taken down, the celebrated Mrs Siddons and John Philip Kemble first developed their wonderful talents. In 1794, a public subscription library was founded, and removed in 1816 to a handsome new building, which likewise contains a newsroom, assembly, and concert rooms. The number of volumes now amounts to upwards of 5000. Here is a Harmonic society for the encouragement of music; the members meet in a room over the library, and give occasional concerts. Assemblies are held in the same building during the winter season. In August, races are held annually on a fine course near the town, on which a stand has recently been erected. The town is within the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the county, who hold here the petty sessions for the north and south divisions. Under an act of the 48th George III., a court of requests, the jurisdiction of which extends over Wednesfield and Wolverhampton, and the parishes of Brewood, Pattingham, Busbury, and Penn, is held every fourth Friday, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5. The office is in Prince's-street. An annual court leet is held by the lord of the manor, at which two constables and other officers are chosen. One of the constables is nominated by the dean of Windsor. The pop. of the town in 1801 was 12,565; in 1831, 24,732. A. P., £32,967.

Trade, &c.—The inhabitants were formerly much employed in the manufacture of the finer kinds of steel ornaments, but this branch of trade has rather declined, or been transferred to other places. Wares of brass and tin, locks, files, nails, gun locks, screws, machinery of every kind, and ironmongery articles in general, constitute now the chief produce. Here is a chemical work of some extent. The trade of the town is greatly facilitated by the Birmingham canal, which passes to the north and west of the town. Not far from this it communicates with the Staffordshire and Worcestershire, and the Eslington and Wyrley canals, thus opening a channel of communication with the most important parts of the kingdom. Passage boats sail daily for Chester, London, and Liverpool, and twice a week for Derby, Hull, and Nottingham. Wednesday is market day; the market is held in the area at the centre of the town, in the middle of which is a pillar of cast-iron, 40 feet high, and supporting a large lantern lighted with gas. A fair for cattle and all sorts of goods is held for three days annually, beginning on the 10th of July.

Living, &c.—In the town are two livings, both perpetual curacies. The living of St Mary and St Peter is not in charge, returned at £130, in the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Wolverhampton, and in patronage of the dean of Windsor, who holds the ancient deanery of Wolverhampton. The church was anciently collegiate and a royal free chapel, and as such possessed many privileges and immunities. It is an ancient structure, built in the form of a cross, spacious, and presenting a combination of the early, decorated, and perpendicular, or florid styles of English architecture. From the intersection of the nave and transepts springs a square embattled tower of very elegant design, chiefly in the later style. The interior is of a severe and gloomy aspect, from the style being chiefly the early English, with the exception of the chancel, which has a more modern and a lighter air. That part of the church contains a fine brass statue of Admiral Sir Richard Leveson, who commanded under Sir Francis Drake in the expedition fitted out against the Spanish Armada, also a monument to Colonel John Lane, who protected Charles I. after the battle of Worcester. Beyond the church is a chapel formerly ded. to the Virgin Mary, and called the Lady chapel. In this is an alabaster monument to John Lane and his wife, the effigy of the former being in armour. The church contains also a highly sculptured pulpit, wrought out of a single mass of stone, and a font of an octagonal form, supported on a pillar, and believed to be of high antiquity. It is enriched with carvings of bosses, flowers, and foliage, and with figures supposed to represent St Paul, St Peter, and St Anthony. Near the south-west corner of the churchyard are the remains of an ancient building, supposed to have belonged to the monastery which formerly existed here, the site of which is uncertain. It consists of a single vault thirty feet square, the roof of which rests on arches springing from the walls and a single central pillar, and is finely groined. In the churchyard stands also a curious pillar of unknown origin. It is twenty feet high, and covered with carvings in vast profusion, in a rude style, but having a rich effect, from the style of which the formation has been variously attributed to the Saxons or Danes. The living of St John was established in 1761, and is in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, not in charge, returned at £69, and, in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Stamford. The church is an elegant Grecian structure, presenting a combination of the Ionic and Corinthian orders. Attached to it is an elegant tower surmounted by a lofty spire. Above the altar is a handsome painting of the Descent from the Cross, the work of Mr Burney, a native of Wolverhampton. A new church has been lately erected and ded. to St George. The expense has been defrayed partly by a grant from the parliamentary commissioners, and partly by a subscription to the amount of £3,500 among the inhabitants. The Baptists, Independents, various denominations of Methodists, Society of Friends, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics have places of worship here.

Schools, &c.—Here is a free grammar school, open to all boys of the town; of whom about 150 were lately on the foundation. There are five masters; the head master has a house and £500 per annum; the usher a house and £300; the writing master, £84; the French master, £80; and the German master, £70. It was founded in 1513, by Sir Stephen Jenyns, Knt., lord-mayor of London in 1508, and a native of this town. The foundation was confirmed by letters patent from Henry VIII., and the endowment consisted of estates in the parish of Rushoc, co. of Worcester, to which various benefactors have contributed to a small extent. The income is now about £1,170. The management was originally vested by the will of the king and founder in the master and wardens of the Merchant Tailors' company in London, but the court of chancery lately issued a decree, constituting the bishop of Lichfield and Coventry and the two members for the county for the time being, with 37 other gentlemen, trustees of the school, in consequence of a petition from the company whose management of the trust had failed in giving satisfaction to the inhabitants. At this school were educated Sir Wm. Congreve, and the celebrated John Abernethy, surgeon of St Bartholomew's hospital, London. Here are also various Sunday schools, chiefly connected with the dissenting congregations. About 36 boys and 30 girls, six of each of whom are supported and clothed, are educated in the Blue-coat school, which has existed from remote antiquity. There are free houses for the master and mistress, and the endowment amounts to about £340 per annum, arising from a farm and other property purchased with various accumulated benefactions. Here is a dispensary liberally supported, and under the patronage of the earl of Dudley; the annual expenditure exceeds £400. One of the charitable establishments is the Union mill, for grinding the corn and preparing the bread of the poor at a cheap rate.

History.—This place was originally called Hanton or Hamton, and the present name is a corruption Wulfrans-Hanton, Wulfrana, sister of King Edgar, having founded a college here in 996. This place was visited by Charles I. during the civil war, when he was well-received by the inhabitants, who gave him a large sum of money. In 1645 this was the headquarters of Prince Rupert. "An ancient monastery of religious persons, built, or amply endowed by a devout and charitable widow lady, called Wulfruna, in the year 996. It was in the possession of secular canons at the conquest.

King William Rufus gave this church to Samson, bishop of Worcester, who settled it upon the prior and convent of his own cathedral, and they held it till the time of King Stephen, when Roger, bishop of Salisbury, got it away from them. But he did not probably enjoy it long, for King Stephen granted it to the bishop of Chester and the church of Lichfield; and it was again in the hands of secular canons till the famous Petrus Blesensis, who was dean, resigned it into the hands of Hubert, archbishop of Canterbury, that he might build an abbey here for monks of the Cistercian order, which he began to do about 5^o Joannis. But it seems never to have been finished or fully settled: for we find the seculars in possession again not long after, and they still continue so. This church was accounted one of the King's free chapels, was dedicated to St Mary and St Peter, and, with the collation of the prebendaries, was annexed by King Edward IV. to the deanry of Windsor. The deanry was valued, 26^o Henry VIII., at £38 per ann., and five prebends, as follows, viz., Wobaston preb. £7 13s. 4d. clear; Wortesley preb. £4 13s. 4d.; Codsall preb. £5 6s. 8d.; Perton preb. £5 13s. 4d.; and Pemeford preb. £4 13s. 4d. But in the seventh year of King Edward VI. a grant was made to John, duke of Northumberland, of the college of Wolverhampton, and of seven prebends thereto belonging, viz., of Wolverhampton, Hatherton, Wilnall, Fetherston, Halton, Monmore, Stonwall alias Kinewaston, and Wobaston. But these coming again into the crown by the attainder of the said duke, Queen Mary, ann. reg. I., refounded the dean and prebendaries, and endowed them with all the manors, lands, &c., formerly belonging to the college, free chapel, and deanry of Wolverhampton, amounting, as then rated, to £113 13s. per annum. And when some questions were afterwards raised about the possessions of this church, King James I., in the 18th of his reign, confirmed and settled them, and made the famous Marcus Antonius de Dominis, archbishop of Spalato and dean of Windsor, dean of Wolverhampton, and prebendary of the first prebend, viz. of Wolverhampton, and seven other clergymen, (among whom were Joseph Hall, Gabriel Goodman, and Dr Thomas Goad,) were nominated to seven other prebends. Clement Leeson, chaplain, and William Waterfall, obtained, A. D. 1394, the king's licence to found here an hospital of one priest and six poor men to the honour of the blessed Virgin Mary." Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from London, 123 m. N.W.

WOLVERLEY, a township in the parish of Wem, Whitchurch division of the hundred of Bradford (North), co. of Salop.

WOLVERLEY, a parish partly in the upper division of the hundred of Halfshire, and partly in a detached portion of the lower division of the hundred of Oswaldalaw, co. of Worcester. Living, a vicarage, exempt from visitation, rated at £18 6s. 8d., and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the dean and chapter of Worcester. The church, which stands on an eminence, is a neat structure of brick, erected in 1772, and ded. to St John the Baptist. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. The river Stour, and the Stafford and Worcestershire canal pass through this parish. The parish contains the hamlets of Blakesall, Causall, Cookley, Hauzeley, Horseley, Kingsford, Low, Sion-hill, Wolverley, and Little Wolverley. The inhabitants are partly employed in the manufacture of iron and tin wares. Here is a school on the Madras system, in which about 90 boys and 70 girls receive gratuitous education, on an endowment given in 1618, by William Sebright, Esq. In this village was born the eminent printer, John Baskerville. Distance from Kidderminster, 2 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 950; in 1831, 1840. A. P., £7,020.

WOLVERSHILL, a hamlet in the parish of Bulkington, hundred of Knightlow, co. of Warwick.

WOLVERTON, or WOOLVERTON, a parish in the hundred of Newport, co. of Buckingham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £10 3s. 9d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of W. Drake, Esq., and others. Church ded. to the Holy Trinity. Distance from Stony-Stratford, 1 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 288; in 1831, 417. A. P., £3,596.

WOLVE'S-NEWTON. See WOLF'S-NEWTON.

WOLVETON, or WOLVEHAMPTON, in the parish of Charminster, hundred of St George, Dorchester division of the co. of Dorset. "It was anciently a manor and hamlet, now extinguished and depopulated; and containing only the seat of the Frenchards. It lies a little to the south of Charminster, near the south branch of the Frome, into which the river Cerne falls, a little west of this place. Near Bradford the Frome divides itself, and forms an island and joins again below Dorchester. On the north and lesser branch stands Wolvehampton. It is not certain whether this manor did not anciently belong to the prebend of Wolvehampton. However, in process of time it was in a manner alienated from it, and the prebendary became little more than lord paramount." Hutchin's Dorset.

WOLVEY, a parish in the Kirby division of the hundred of Knightlow, co. of Warwick. Living, a discharged vicarage, rated at £6 6s. 5½d., in the peculiar jurisdiction of the bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, and, in 1829, in the alternate patronage of the earl of Coventry and the prebendary of Wolvey, in the cathedral church of Lichfield. The church is a very ancient structure, ded. to St John the Baptist. It contains a monument, erected about 500 years ago, to some member of the family of Clinton, who formerly had a residence in the neighbourhood. The river Anker has its source in this parish. Distance from Nuneaton, 5 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 620; in 1831, 935. A. P., £5,183.

WOLVISTON, a chapelry in the parish of Billingham, north-eastern division of the ward of Stockton, co.-palatine of Durham. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, returned at £93 2s. 6d., in the archd. and dio. of Durham, and in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham. The chapel, which is ded. to St Peter, is a modern structure, situated on a rising ground; it has recently been enlarged, on which occasion the incorporated society for the enlargement of churches and chapels, contributed £75 towards defraying the expense of 100 free sittings. Distance from Stockton-upon-Tees, 4½ m. N. by E. Pop., in 1801, 411; in 1831, 582. A. P., £1,813.

Living, a discharged vicarage, united to that of Drysull, in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £12 12s. 6½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the Hon. E. and Lady Foley. Church ded. to St Benedict. The parish is crossed by the Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal. It contains the liberty of Orton. Distance from Wolverhampton, 4 m. S.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 1170; in 1831, 1647. A. P., £6,684.

WOMBRIDGE, a parish in the Wellington division of the hundred of South Bradford, co. of Salop. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, certified at £2 1s. 4d., returned at £86, and, in 1829, in patronage of William Charlton, Esq., lord of the manor. The church, which is ded. to St Leonard and St Mary, has been enlarged; on which occasion the incorporated society for the enlargement of churches and chapels, contributed £270 towards defraying the expense of 295 free sittings. A customary market is held at Oaken-Gates in this parish. In the vicinity, particularly at Ketley, are some extensive coal-mines and iron-works, the principal of the latter having been founded in 1818, but the former having existed from time immemorial. The railways connected with these cross the parish in various directions, in which the Shrewsbury, Shropshire, and marquess of Stafford's canals communicate with one another. The ancient Watling-street, and the great road from London to Holyhead likewise cross the parish. "A priory of Black canons was erected here by William Fitz-Alan, in the reign of Henry I., and by him commended to the patronage of St Mary and St Leonard. Herein were at the time of the dissolution, a prior and three or four religious, who had yearly revenues, valued according to Dugdale at £65 7s. 4d., or at £72 15s. 8d. according to Mr Speed. The site of this monastery was granted, 31st Henry VIII. to James Leveson." Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Wellington, 2 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 1835; in 1831, 1855. A. P., £2,395.

A market town and parish in the hundred of Loes, co. of Suffolk. The town stands in an agreeable situation on the north bank of the river Deben, and consists of two principal streets, with a number of lanes, and a spacious square called Market-hill. The hill on which it stands is surrounded by beautiful walks, the situation is remarkably healthy, and the supply of water is abundant. The streets are paved and lighted, and their general aspect neat and respectable. In the centre of Market-hill is the session-hall, which is a handsome structure of brick, recently repaired. It was erected in 1587 at the expense of Thomas Seckford, Esq. A bridewell was erected on a neighbouring hill in 1804, on the site of an older edifice. About half a mile to the north-west of the town barracks were erected during the war, for the reception of 750 cavalry and 4165 infantry, part of which has since been demolished. Here is a small theatre, in which concerts are occasionally held.

Trade.—This is a place of considerable importance. The mouth of the river Deben forms an excellent haven, and is navigable as far as the town for vessels of 120 tons. Here is a custom house, with the usual establishment of collector, comptroller, tide-surveyor, and coast-waiter. There are two quays, one for general commerce, the other for the accommodation of vessels loaded with lime. Here are two small docks. Vessels of war of small magnitude, and coasting craft, are occasionally built here. There is a regular trade with London, Newcastle, Hull, Liverpool, the continent of Europe, and the Baltic. The number of vessels is stated at about 40, having an aggregate burden of nearly 3000 tons. The principal articles of import are coal, timber, wine, spirits, porter, salt, grocery, drapery, and iron wares. The exports consist chiefly of corn, flour, and malt. The ship building business formerly employed a great many hands, as also did a salt work, but both branches of trade have declined very much. Wednesday is market day, and is well attended by dealers in corn, cattle, and provisions. Fairs for cattle are held on April 5th and October 31st.

Government.]—By an act of parliament called Gilbert's act, the government of the town is vested in a visitor and two guardians, chosen by the parishioners holding houses rated at £5 and upwards. These have no magisterial authority, but merely regulate the parochial rates. In other respects the town is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the county, who hold a petty sessions in the sessions-hall here every Wednesday. Here are also held the quarterly sessions for the liberty of St Ethelred, and for the hundreds of Colneis, Carlford, Loes, Plomesgate, Welford, and Thredling.

Living, &c.]—The living of Woodbridge is a perpetual curacy, certified at £45, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. J. Carthew. To this living have been annexed the rectorial tithes, which had formerly been impropriated by the Seckford family; the minister, however, does not hold the rank of rector. The church, which is ded. to St Mary, is a handsome and spacious edifice, erected at the expense of John, Lord Seymour, in the reign of Edward III., and constructed of black flint mingled with freestone. It consists of a nave and aisles, and the roof is supported by clustered Gothic pillars and arches. The tower is a stately piece of architecture 180 feet high, crowned with battlements and enriched towards the top with sculpture, among which are representations of the four evangelists. It was erected in the reign of Henry VI., as was also the north portico, an elegant structure decorated with sculpture, representing among the objects the fight of St Michael with the dragon. On the north side of the chancel stands an elegant private sepulchral chapel containing the family vaults of the Seckford family; it was built in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and contains a tomb, without an inscription, but supposed to be that of the founder. The Baptists, Independents, Society of Friends, and Wesleyan Methodists, have places of worship here. Here is a free grammar school in which about ten boys receive gratuitous instruction. It was founded in 1662 by several individuals, the principal benefactor being Mrs Dorothy Seckford, in consequence of whose will, also, the tithes of the rectory were given to the curate. The endowment consists of property, worth about £37 per annum, of which the master receives £25, and holds lands worth about £12, with a rent-free residence; he has also permission to take boarders and day scholars, the latter paying about £3 per annum for elementary education. The patrons of the school are the heirs of the founder and the parish minister; but should these not exercise their privilege, the lord of the manor of the ancient priory, the curate, the church-wardens, the three principal proprietors, and the three principal holders of land in the parish may appoint the master. The free scholars are instructed chiefly in the classics. Here is a national school, founded and supported by subscription, aided by contributions from the national school society; it is attended by about 350 children of both sexes. About 100 children of both sexes likewise receive the elements of education in another school on the Lancastrian system. Here is also a Sunday school, chiefly attended by girls, 24 of whom are supplied with clothing. In the reign of Elizabeth, Thomas Seckford, Esq., founded here a number of almshouses, which were placed by patent of the queen under the control of the master of the rolls and the chief justice of the common pleas. These houses were endowed with property in the parish of St John's, Clerkenwell, London, which in 1767 produced an annual income of £565. Of this sum a certain portion was expended in improving the estate, so that about £30,000 were thus laid out, and the annual revenue has increased to a great extent. In a short time from £5,000 to £6,000 per annum will fall into the hands of the trustees. The number of persons pointed out by the founder was 13 poor unmarried men, with three poor women as nurses, all to be chosen, if possible, from the poor inhabitants of the parish of Woodbridge. The minister and churchwardens appoint the inmates, and the churchwardens receive £5 per annum each, as paymasters of the charity. The sums expended are £27 per annum to the senior inmate, and £20 to each of the others. Each has certain further allowances, and wears a silver badge stamped with the arms of the founder. The poor of Clerkenwell receive £10 per annum from the estate, and an equal sum is given to the minister for visiting the inmates of the almshouses, and instructing them when necessary. It is probable that the charity will be greatly extended when the large revenue mentioned above is placed at the disposal of the trustees. About £150 per annum, the produce of different benefactions, are distributed annually among poor persons of the town, according to their several necessities. In this town was born Christopher Saxton, publisher of the first county maps.

History.]—The town of Woodbridge has been in existence from a remote period, and is mentioned so early as the reign of Edward the Confessor. The name is supposed to have been originally Wodenbrigg, from the Saxon god Woden. In 1666, this place suffered severely from the plague. "Here was a priory of six or six Black canons, dedicated to the blessed Virgin Mary, founded by one Ernaldus Rufus, his son Ernaldus, and his grandson called Ernaldus filius Ernaldi secundi, in the latter end of the 12th century. The patronage was in Sir Giles de Bruvose, in the reign of Edward

II., and afterwards in — Hansard. Its yearly revenue was rated, 26th Henry VIII., at £50 3s. 5d., per annum, and the site was granted, 36th Henry VIII., to Sir John Wingfield and Dorothy his wife, and, 19th Elizabeth to Thomas Sekford, Esq., master of requests. — Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Ipswich, 7½ m. E.N.E.; and from London, 76½ m. N.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 3020; in 1831, 4769. A. P., £10,819.

WOODBURY, a parish, formerly a market-town, in the eastern division of the hundred of Budleigh, co. of Devon. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, returned at £74, in the patronage of the dean and chapter, and in the peculiar jurisdiction of the custos and college of vicars-choral, in the cathedral church of Exeter. The parish is bounded on the west by the river Exe, which is here navigable. Here is a charity school, with an endowment of about £50 per annum, arising from various bequests, and in particular from those of Thomas Weare, in 1691, Dr William Holwell, in 1707, and Esaias Broadmeed, in 1728. The magistrates of the county hold the petty sessions for the hundred here. In this parish are the following hamlets: Ebford, Exton, Grindle, Gulliford, Higher Nutwell, Salterton, and Woodmanton. The market has long since fallen into disuse. Distance from Topham, 3 m. E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 1286; in 1831, 1673. A. P., £10,335.

WOODBURY-HILL, in the parish of Beer-Regis, co. of Dorset.

WOODCHESTER, a parish in the hundred of Longtree, co. of Gloucester. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £10, and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Ducie. The church is ded. to St Mary, and consists of a nave, chancel, and south aisle, with an embattled western tower. Within the church is an altar tomb to Sir R. Huntley and his lady, whose effigies lie under a canopy of stone, surrounded by the figures of their ten children. The Baptists have here a place of worship. The village stands in a delightful country, on an elevated point in a range of hills, at the foot of which is a fertile valley. The inhabitants are partly employed in the making of woollen cloths, of which there are eight manufactories in the vicinity. At Minchinhampton is St Loe's school, founded by Nathaniel Cambridge, to which certain children of Woodchester are eligible, who are clothed on an endowment of £50, arising from £500 bequeathed in 1722 by Robert Bridges, for teaching, clothing, and apprenticing poor boys. With those who are apprenticed, a premium of £15 is given. "Gueta, wife to Earl Godwin, is said to have built a religious house here to make amends for her husband's fraud at Berkeley." — Tanner's Not. Mon. "Woodchester," says Lyson, "is indicated by its name to have been a Roman station, and many Roman antiquities have at various times been discovered there; of these, the most remarkable is a Mosaic pavement, parts of which had frequently appeared on the digging of graves in the churchyard, and were probably observed soon after that ground was appropriated to the purposes of a cemetery. The earliest mention made of this discovery is in the additions to Camden's Britannia, published in 1696 by Bishop Gibson, who erroneously supposes the pavement to have belonged to a religious house which formerly stood at Woodchester. He mentions also the discovery of Roman coins and other antiquities there. In the year 1793, on the digging of a vault for the interment of the late John Wade, Esq., of Perdhill, at the depth of four feet below the surface of the ground, so considerable a portion of the same pavement was laid bare, as enabled me in the course of that and the following year to ascertain its form and dimensions. It appeared to have been a square of 48 feet 10 inches. The complete design of this pavement could now be ascertained, which for size and richness of ornament, is, I believe, equalled by few of those discovered in other provinces of the Roman empire, and is undoubtedly superior to any thing of the kind hitherto found in this country." The coins found were chiefly of the Lower Empire, with one of Adrian and one of Lucilla. The design of the pavement was divided into 24 compartments, and presented figures of beasts and architectural ornaments. Distance from Stroud, 2½ m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 870; in 1831, 885. A. P., £2,730.

WOODCHURCH, a parish and township in the lower division of the hundred of Wirrall, co.-palatine of Chester. The parish contains also the townships of Arrow, Barnston, Irby, Landican, Noctorum, Oxton, Pensby, Prenton, and Thingwell. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester, rated at £25 9s. 2d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of Mrs Hughes, and others. The church is a very ancient structure in the Norman style of architecture, ded. to the Holy Cross. It contains a curious font of some antiquity. Here is a free school, with an income of about £80, founded and endowed in 1665, by William Gleave, Esq., alderman of London. Distance from Great Neston, 6½ m. N. by W. Pop. of township in 1801, 52; in 1831, 78. A. P., £497. Pop. of parish in 1801, 725; in 1831, 929. A. P. with the townships.

Church ded. to St. Saints. Here was anciently a palace belong ing to the bishops of Salisbury, but no traces of the buildings can now be discovered. The parish is bounded on the east by the river Avon. In this parish Charles II. concealed himself after the battle of Worcester. Distance from Salisbury, $4\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 345; in 1831, 397. A. P., £3,059.

WOODFORD-ST-MARY, a parish in the hundred of Becontree, co. of Essex. This is a beautiful village, so denominated from the circumstance of there having anciently been a ford here, bordering on Epping-Forest. There is now a bridge at the site of the ancient ford, giving name to the hamlet of Woodford-bridge. The village, which stands on the main road from London to Newmarket, consists chiefly of detached houses, surrounded by trees and gardens, and of handsome villas, which are much resorted to by wealthy merchants of the metropolis. The situation of many of these villas is rather elevated, and, in consequence, they command agreeable views of the counties of Kent and Essex. The nearest line of communication with the metropolis is that afforded by a cross road recently opened, passing from the upper part of the village to the Lea-Bridge road. In this manor prevails the custom of Borough English, by which the youngest son inherits in preference to the other branches of the family. The hamlet of Woodford-Wells takes its name from a mineral spring, which was formerly much resorted to, but has of late fallen out of repute. Living, a rectory in the peculiar concurrent jurisdiction of the consistorial court of the bishop of London and of the commissary of London, rated at £11 12s. 1d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of the Hon. W. T. Long Pole Wellesley. The church, which was erected in 1817, at an expense of about £9,000, on the site of an ancient structure which had fallen into partial decay, is ded. to St Mary. The expense of erecting the new building was defrayed partly by voluntary contributions, and partly by a rate levied on the parishioners. The building consists of a nave and aisles, with a square embattled western tower, and an octagonal lantern tower rising from the roof of the nave. The style of architecture is the early English, and the interior contains some very handsome monuments, including the ancient ones which existed in the former structure. The eastern window contains some beautiful stained glass, and is divided into three compartments. The painting includes representations of the Saviour, the four Evangelists, and St Peter and St Paul. The aisles are separated from the naves by simple but elegant pointed arches, and the roof of the nave rests on eight pillars. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. The churchyard contains a remarkably fine yew tree of great age, and a picturesque tomb covered with ivy. There is also a splendid monument erected in memory of the family of Godfrey, which flourished for many generations in the neighbouring parts of Kent. It consists of an elegant pillar of the Corinthian order, about 40 feet in height. Here is a national school supported by voluntary contributions; it affords education to about 130 children of both sexes, of whom about 50 also receive clothing. In 1686, Thomas Foulkes presented to this parish the perpetual right of sending two boys to Christ's hospital in London. It is also entitled to send two boys to be educated gratuitously at either of the schools founded at Cligwell in 1629 by Dr Samuel Harcutt, archbishop of York. A parochial library was founded here in 1828. Distance from St Paul's cathedral, London, $8\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 1745; in 1831, 2548. A. P., £13,955.

WOODFORD-GRANGE, an extra-parochial liberty in the southern division of the hundred of Seisdon, co. of Stafford.

WOODHAM-FERRERS, or FERRIS, a parish in the hundred of Chelmsford, co. of Essex. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London, rated at £28 13s. 4d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of Sir W. B. Brydges, Bart. Church ded. to St Mary. It contains an elegant monument erected by Edwin Sandys, archbishop of York, in memory of his wife Cecilia. Here is a ferry over the river Crouch, which skirts the southern boundary of the parish. At Bikinacre in this parish, Maurice Fitz-Jeffrey founded and endowed a priory of Black canons in the reign of King Henry II., being thus released from a considerable debt which he owed to the king. It was erected on the site of an ancient hermitage, or cell, and was ded. to St John the Baptist. Its revenues were not great, and it gradually fell into decay, till in the reign of Henry VII. it was annexed to St Mary's-Spittal, London. Distance from Danbury, $4\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 667; in 1831, 826. A. P., £6,324.

Church ded. to St Michael. The parish is bounded on the north by the Chelmer and Blackwater navigation. Distance from Danbury, $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 352; in 1831, 538. A. P., £4,435.

WOODHATCH, a tything in the parish of Reigate, western half hundred of Reigate, co. of Surrey. It forms the south and south-east portion of the town of Reigate.

WOODHAY, a villa in the parish of Acton, hundred of Nantwich, co.-palatine of Chester. Here is a domestic chapel.

WOODHAY (EAST), a parish in the hundred of Evingar, Kingsclere division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a rectory in the peculiar jurisdiction of the incumbent, rated at £21 6s. 0½d., and in patronage of the bishop of Winchester. The church, which was rebuilt in 1823 at the expense of the parishioners, is ded. to St Martin, and contains monuments to bishops Kenn and Louth, both of whom held the rectory. Subordinate to this living is the perpetual curacy of Ashmansworth. Here was formerly a palace belonging to the bishops of Winchester. A national school was founded here a few years ago; it affords education to about 100 children, and the expenses are defrayed by voluntary contribution. Here is a school in which ten children are educated gratuitously on an endowment of £8 per annum, founded in 1753 by a bequest of the Rev. Joshua Wakefield. This parish is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount. Distance from Whitchurch, $10\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 803; in 1831, 1269. A. P., £5,194.

WOODHAY (WEST), a parish in the hundred of Kintbury-Eagle, co. of Berks. This was formerly a market town, but the custom of holding a market has long since fallen into disuse. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £4 4s. 3½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of R. Sloper, Esq. Church ded. to St Lawrence. The market was wont to be held on Tuesday, and was granted in 1311 to one of the barons St Amand. Distance from Newbury, 6 m. S.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 109; in 1831, 127. A. P., £1,244.

The church is an elegant structure in the decorated style of English architecture, and ded. to St Mary. On Woodnesborough-hill is an artificial mount, the origin of which is unknown. It has been variously supposed to mark the burial place of Vortimer, a temple of the Saxon god Woden, and the site of a battle, fought in 713, between Celred and Ina, kings of Mercia and the West Saxons. To the latter supposition some degree of probability is given by the Saxon Chronicle, which places the scene of the conflict at Woodness-beorth. In 1514 a beautiful gold coin was found here, having on the one side a figure of Victory, and on the other an armed man. Distance from Sandwich, 2 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 603; in 1831, 822. A. P., £7,060.

WOOD-RISING, a parish in the hundred of Mitford, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £4 18s. 4d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of John Weyland. Church ded. to St Nicholas. Pop., in 1801, 118; in 1831, 127. A. P., £1,687.

WOODROW, a hamlet in the parish of Great Hallingbury, co. of Essex.

WOODSBURY, a tything in the parish of Romsey, Andover division, co. of Southampton.

WOODSEATS, (NETHER AND UPPER), hamlets in the parish of Norton, co. of Derby.

WOODSETT, a township, partly in the parish of Auston, partly in that of Loughton-in-le-Morthen, partly within the liberty of St Peter of York, partly in the wapentake of Strathforth and Tickhill, W. R., co. of York. Distance from Worksop, $4\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 123; in 1831, 146. A. P., £1,295.

WOODSEVES, a hamlet in the parish of Drayton-in-Hales, co. of Salop.

WOODSFIELD, a hamlet in the parish of Powick, lower division of the hundred of Pershore, co. of Worcester. This was formerly a chapelry to the parish of Great Malvern, and the remains of the chapel still exist. Distance from Worcester, $5\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.S.W. Pop. included in that of Powick.

WOODSFORD, a parish in the hundred of Winfrith, Blandford (South) division of the co. of Dorset, consisting of the villages of East Woodsford, and West Woodsford, or Woodsford Strangersways. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £4 9s. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of Mrs Sturt. The church appears to be of considerable antiquity; it is of small dimensions, and has a low quadrangular tower. The northern side of the parish is skirted by the river Frome. On the banks of the river are the lofty remains of the castle of Guido de Brient, constructed of stone, and surrounded with a moat, which can still be traced. It is partly converted into a farm-house. The chapel still exists, as also the vaulted apartments of the ground story. Distance from Dorchester, $5\frac{1}{2}$ m. E. Pop., in 1801, 132; in 1831, 182. A. P., £1,600.

WOODSIDE, a hamlet in the parish of Croydon, co. of Surrey.

WOODSIDE, a township in the parish of Elsdon, southern division of the ward of Coquetdale, co. of Northumberland. This was formerly covered with wood, little of which now remains. It is bounded on the west by the Harehaugh burn, which falls into the Coquet. Distance from Elsdon, $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. N. Pop., in 1801, 193; in 1831, 131.

WOODSIDE, a hamlet in the parish of Brougham, ward of West, co. of Cumberland. Distance from Penrith, 5 m. E. by S. Pop. with the parish.

WOODSPRING, or WORSRING, in the parish of Kew Stoke, co. of Somerset. "There was at Dodelyng, in this county, an house of canons regular, of the order of St Victor, dedicated to the blessed Virginia and St Thomas à Becket, but they were removed to Worspring, by William de Courtenaye, about the year 1210. The estate of this priory—which was ded. to the Holy Trinity, St Mary, the Virgin, and St Thomas the Martyr—was valued, just before the dissolution, at £110 18s. 4d., according to Mr Speed. Its site, with the demesne lands, was granted, 30th Henry VIII., to Sir John St Lo, and, 2nd Elizabeth, to William and John Lacy."—Tanner's Not. Mon.

WOODSTOCK (New),

A borough, market-town, and parochial chapelry, locally situated in the hundred of Wootton, co. of Oxford, but having separate jurisdiction.

History.—The name is derived from the Saxon, Wudestoc, or woody place. The origin of the town is involved in obscurity, though it does not appear to have existed previous to the time of the Saxons. It has been said, indeed, that a Roman villa formerly stood on the site now occupied by the house called the manor-house, but the evidence on which this is founded appears quite inadequate. This parish became, at an early period, a favourite abode of royalty, and at present it contains the splendid demesne and residence of the duke of Marlborough, called Blenheim, a description of which will be found in a separate article under the name. It appears that Alfred the Great resided here while employed in the translation of Boetius. A parliament was holden here by Ethelred, at which several statutes were enacted, which are enumerated in Lambard's collection. The palace was in a great measure rebuilt, and the park inclosed with a stone wall, and stocked with animals by Henry I., who preferred this to his other residences. It was the residence of the celebrated fair Rosamond, in the reign of Henry II.; and here Edmund of Woodstock, second son of Edward I., was born in 1330. Here were also born the sons of Edward III., Edward the Black Prince, and Thomas of Woodstock. During the reign of Mary, Elizabeth resided, or was imprisoned here; and, after her accession to the throne, that princess often selected this as her voluntary residence.

General Description.—The town, which consists of several well built and regular streets, stands on an eminence, skirted on the west by the river Glynn, which, after expanding into a sheet of water in Blenheim park, is joined by the Evenlode, and shortly after falls into the Isis. It contains a handsome town-hall, erected after a design by Sir William Chambers, in 1766, at the expense of the duke of Marlborough. The houses are generally large and handsome, and are, for the most part, constructed of stone. This town formerly possessed a wool staple, granted by Queen Elizabeth, but there is now no trade in wool. Tuesday is market-day; an additional market, on Friday, was granted by Queen Elizabeth, but it gradually fell into disuse, and has long since been given up. The fair, which are well attended, are February 6th and April 5th, for cheese, cattle, and sheep; Tuesday in Whitsunweek, for pleasure, horses, hardware, &c. ; August 2d, for fruit, especially cherries; October 2d, for cheese, at which extensive dealings are effected; Tuesday after November 1st, for cattle, sheep, and cheese; and December 17th, for fat hogs and other cattle. A great market for cattle is likewise held on the Tuesday next after Candlemas day. The town was formerly celebrated for the manufacture of articles in fine polished steel, which was formed of the iron nails extracted from old horse shoes; but this branch of trade has nearly disappeared since the advance of Birmingham and Sheffield. The manufacture of gloves has long been the staple of the town. The number of pairs made weekly is said to average 500 dozen, and about 100 men, and 1500 women and girls, are said to receive constant employment from it.

Civil Affairs.—Woodstock was a borough by prescription, and sent members to parliament, though by no means regularly till after the 13th of Queen Elizabeth. The right of election was vested in the corporate body and freemen, about 150 in number, not above one-half of whom were resident. The mayor was returning officer, and two members were returned. By the passing of the reform act it has been deprived of one of its members. The number of electors is now about 400. The first charter of incorporation was granted to Woodstock by Henry VI. in 1453. Various alterations and additions were made to this grant by succeeding monarchs, and the town is now governed under that which was finally modified by Charles II. James II. attempted to alter the charter, but the measure having given great dissatisfaction, was abandoned, and the old charter was established by a public proclamation. The freedom of the town is acquired by birth, servitude, or gift from the corporation. The members of the corporate body are a mayor, high steward, recorder, four aldermen, sixteen common-councillors, and town-clerk. The mayor, who must have been an alderman, is chosen annually, and two of the common-councillors officiate as chamberlains. The corporate body is lord of the manor, and holds an annual court leet; they are likewise entitled to hold a borough court every month, for the recovery of debts under £15, but for some years past this has degenerated into a mere form.

Ecclesiastical Affairs.—Woodstock is a chapelry to the rectory of Bladon, and the rector may live in the parsonage house, erected by bishop Fell, if he please. The living is a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, certified at £5 5s. The chapel, which occupies the site of a chantry built by King John, is ded. to St Mary Magdalene. A portion of it was rebuilt in 1785, and unfortunately in a style not at all corresponding with the remains of the ancient structure. The remains of that structure form the south side of the chapel, and are in the Norman style of architecture. The doorway is curious, ornamented with chevron work, and supported within by three massive columns, on the capitals of which are sculptured grotesque faces.

Charities.—Here is a free grammar school,

in which gratuitous instruction in the classics is provided for all sons of freemen who may apply. It was founded by Richard Cornwall, a native of the town, in 1585, and is supported by a grant of £30 per annum to the master, from the corporation. The master is also entitled to instruct the children of freemen in reading, writing, and accounts, on payment of 15s. per quarter for each. The Rev. Sir Robert Cocks, Bart. formerly rector of Bladon with Woodstock, founded an endowment in this school for the education and clothing of eight boys and eight girls. The endowment now amounts to £60 per annum, fluctuating with the value of the property from which it is derived, and is partly expended in giving apprentice fees with the boys on leaving school. Near the southern entrance of the town are almshouses for six poor widows, founded by the late dutchess of Marlborough in 1793. The poor of the town likewise receive occasional gifts of money and clothing from the produce of various bequests. "There is mention of an almshouse built near the king's manor place here, in rot. claus. 4 Hen. III. m. 11. Querre, Whether this be the same with the hospital of St Mary the Virgin and St Mary Magdalene in Woodstock, for which a protection and license to beg were granted by patent of the 13th Edward III."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Roman coins are occasionally dug up here. This is said to have been the birth place, and occasionally the residence of Chaucer. The duke of Portland takes his inferior title of viscount from Woodstock. Distance from Oxford, 8 m. N.N.W.; from London, 62 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 1822; in 1831, 1880. A. P., £2,265.

WOODSTONE, a parish in the hundred of Norman-Cross, co. of Huntingdon. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £7 11s. 3d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of John Bevis, Esq. Church ded. to St Augustine. Here is a school, towards the endowment of which some land was bequeathed in 1728 by John and Mary Walsham. Distance from Peterborough, 1 m. S. Pop., in 1801, 143; in 1831, 243. A. P., £1,741.

WOODSTREAT, a hamlet in the parish of Wool, co. of Dorset. It is a grange, formerly belonging to the abbey of Bindon.

WOODTHORPE, a township in the parish of North Wingfield, hundred of Scarsdale, co. of Derby. Distance from Chesterfield, 6 m. E. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 201; in 1831, 231. A. P., £1,034.

WOODTHORPE, a liberty in the parish of Loughborough, western division of the hundred of Goscote, co. of Leicester. Distance from Loughborough, 1½ m. S. Pop., in 1801, 50; in 1831, 90. A. P., £1,264.

WOODTHORPE, a hamlet in the parish of Strubby, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln.

WOODTON, or WOOTTON, a parish in the hundred of Loddon, co. of Norfolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £6 13s. 4d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of Mr Suckling. Church ded. to All Saints. Distance from Bungay, 5 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 417; in 1831, 539. A. P., £2,797.

WOOD-WALTON. See WALTON-WOOD.

WOODWICK, in the hundred of Bath-Forum, co. of Somerset. "Contiguous to Freshford was another very ancient parish called Woodwick, in the Saxon days Undewiche. In the year 1448, the livings of Freshford and Woodwick, on account of their vicinity and the smallness of their income, were, with the consent of Thomas Halle, Esq. of Bradford, patron of the said churches, and John Frankleyn, rector of the church of Freshford, united; from which time the church of Woodwick seems to have fallen into decay, and now there is not the smallest vestige of it remaining, the memory of it being only preserved in the name of certain fields, called by corruption Woodwards, and in particular one called Churchfield, out of which several tombstones have been recently dug, and other ecclesiastical antiquities have been discovered at different times."—Collinson's Somerset.

WOODYATES (EAST), a hamlet and tything in the parish of Pentridge, co. of Dorset.

WOODYATES (WEST), an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of Wimborne-St-Giles, Shaston (East) division of the co. of Dorset. It consists of a single farm, and is crossed by the Roman road from Dorchester to Old Sarum. In the vicinity are many barrows, and traces of an extensive encampment, with rampart and fosse, called Grimes-ditch. Pop., in 1801, 13; in 1831, 18.

WOKEY, or WOKEY, a parish in the hundred of Wells-Forum, co. of Somerset. Living, a discharged vicarage, rated at £12 15s. 10d., returned at £800, and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the sub-dean of Wells. Church ded. to St Matthew. About two miles from Wells, in Somersetshire, on the northern side of the Mendip-hills, is situated a celebrated cavern or grotto, called Okie or Wokey-Hole; the opening is situated on the side, at about 30 or 40 yards from the base of the hill and is 20 feet high; it opens into a large vaulted chamber, from the roof of which calcareous depositions are constantly forming: the stalagmites which formerly adorned the floor had a rather singular destination, being cut off and sent to Alexander Pope, to contribute to adorn his artificial grotto at Twickenham! A narrow and uneven passage leads from the first into a second apartment, rather smaller, but very similar in appearance to the first; and from this, you pass into a third, which has a rounded ceiling and a fine stream of water running through it, about eight or ten feet wide, and two deep; this sinks through a hole at the bottom of the cave, and re-appears in the valley at the foot of the hill, being the source of the river Axe: the rest of the floor of this inner cave is composed of a fine sand. It has been said that trout and eels are occasionally found in the stream within the cave. In this parish are the hamlets of Bladney, Castle, Hinton, Kalleyhill, Oure, Turlichmead, and Yardley. Distance from Wells, 2 m. W. Pop., in 1801, 740; in 1831, 1100. A. P., £6,659.

WOOL, a parish in the liberty of Bindon,

Blandford (South) division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, not in charge, and subordinate to the vicarage of Combe-Keynes. The church, which stands on the south side of the river Frome, is ded. to the Holy Rood. A fair for cattle is held here on the 3d of May. Here are the hamlets of Great Bindon, Bovington, and Woodstreet. At Great Bindon, in 1172, Robert de Newburgh, and Matilda his wife, founded an abbey for monks of the Cistercian order. It was ded. to the Virgin Mary, and at the dissolution its revenues were rated at £229 2s. 1d. Distance from Wareham, 6 m. W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 383; in 1831, 467. A. P., £1,750.

WOOLASTON. See WOLLASTON.

WOOLASTON, a parish in the hundred of Westbury, but locally in that of Blidesloe, co. of Gloucester. Living, a discharged rectory, in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, with the curacies of Alvington and Lancants annexed, rated at £13 11s. 5d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of the duke of Beaufort. Church ded. to St Andrew. Here is a national school, supported by subscription, in which a large number of children receive gratuitous education. The petty-sessions for the forest division are held alternately here and at Newnham. It is bounded on the south by the river Severn. Distance from Chepstow, 5 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 613; in 1831, 880. A. P., £3,159.

WOOLASTON (GREAT), a township and chapelry in the parish of Alberbury, hundred of Ford, co. of Salop. Living, a perpetual curacy, in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford, not in charge, returned at £140, and subordinate to the vicarage of Alberbury. Distance from Shrewsbury, 11 m. W. Pop., in 1831, 383. A. P., £2,157.

WOOLAVINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Whitley, co. of Somerset. Living, a vicarage, which is annexed to that of Puriton, in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £9, and in the patronage of the dean and canons of Windsor. The church, which is ded. to St Mary, contains a small chantry or sepulchral chapel. A fair for cattle and sheep is held here on the 18th of October. Distance from Bridgewater, 4 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 294; in 1831, 412. A. P., £4,940.

WOOLAVINGTON (EAST and WEST), a parish divided into two tythings, in the hundred of Rotherbridge, rape of Arundel, co. of Sussex. Living, a rectory, in the archd. and dio. of Chichester, rated at £9, and in 1829, in the patronage of J. Sargent, Esq. Distance from Petworth, 4½ m. S.W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 192; in 1831, 338. A. P., £1,137.

WOOLBEDING, a parish in the hundred of Easebourne, rape of Chichester, co. of Sussex. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chichester, rated at £7 0s. 10d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Robert Spencer. The parish is crossed by the river Rother. Distance from Midhurst, 1½ m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 212; in 1831, 307. A. P., £1,607.

WOOLBOROUGH, or WOLBOROUGH, a parish in the hundred of Haytor, co. of Devon.

It contains the township of Newton-Abbotts. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, a donative, and, in 1829, in the patronage of Viscount Courtenay. The church, which consists of a nave and aisles, divided by some curiously carved screen-work, is ded. to St James. Here are almshouses founded by Lady Lucy Reynell, for the reception of four widows of clergymen. In 1788, Hannah Maria Bearne bequeathed some property for charitable purposes. This, which now yields a revenue of about £90 per annum, has been employed in founding and endowing a school, in which 90 children receive gratuitous instruction. Distance from Newton-Abbotts, 1 m. S. Pop., in 1801, 1623; in 1831, 2194. A. P., £2,903.

WOOLDALE, a township in the parish of Kirkburton, upper division of the wapentake of Airedale, W. R. of the co. of York. Here are some extensive manufactories of woollen cloth, with fulling and scrubbing mills, which give employment to a large number of the inhabitants. About fifty years ago a school was founded here by subscription, in which about 40 children receive instruction on the payment of small fees. The master has a free house, which was erected at the expense of the parish in 1821. Distance from Huddersfield, 6½ m. S. Pop., in 1801, 2620; in 1831, 3993. A. P., £2,932.

WOOLCOMBE-BINGHAM, a hamlet partly in the parish of Toller-Porcorum, and partly in that of Poorestock, co. of Dorset.

WOOLCOMBE, a hamlet, formerly a chapelry, in the parish of Melbury-Bubb, co. of Dorset. The chapel is in ruins.

WOOLER, a market town and parish in the eastern division of the ward of Glendale, co. of Northumberland. The town, which is situated on the eastern declivity of the Cheviot hills, consists of several streets, indifferently paved, and diverging from a central area used as the market place. The situation is remarkably healthy, and it was formerly much resorted to by invalids, but the want of accommodation has led to the decline of this custom. The houses are chiefly of old date, and the aspect of the town is by no means pleasing. Through the centre of it runs a good trout stream, which subsequently falls into the river Till. In 1722, an extensive destruction of property took place by fire, an event which was not followed by an improvement in the aspect of the town, as is usual under such circumstances. A good supply of water is obtained from a fountain which was erected at the expense of the public. Goats were formerly much bred here for the sake of the milk, which was used by invalids. Here is a well supported public library, also a mechanics' institution, which was founded in 1827. Courts leet and baron are held here annually by the lord of the manor, within three weeks after Easter, at which are chosen constables and other officers for regulating the internal affairs of the town. Thursday is market day, and fairs for horses, cattle, and sheep, are held on May 4th and October 27th, also a general fair on the Tuesday in Whitsunweek; this last is held on a hill near the town. A dispensary was some time ago established here, but for want of due support it appears to be on the decline. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham, rated at £5 & 14d., and in the patronage of the bishop of Durham. The ancient church was destroyed by a great fire which took place in the course of last century, and the present structure, which is ded. to St Mary, was erected on its site in 1765. It stands on an eminence which commands an agreeable and extensive view, and is rather a handsome structure. The Baptists, Burghers, Presbyterians, Scotch Relief connexion, and Roman Catholics, have places of worship here. In connexion with the established church and several of the dissenting congregations, are Sunday schools supported by voluntary contributions. Here is a free grammar school, founded and endowed by the earl of Tankerville. On the original endowment six boys receive gratuitous education; Mrs Chisholm bequeathed £100 for an additional number of scholars, but the sum lapsed to the bishop of Durham, who, however, added to the endowment a sum sufficient for the education of three boys. In the vicinity of the town is the village of Humbleton, celebrated for the victory gained in its neighbourhood by Percy, earl of Northumberland, over the Scots under Earl Douglas in the reign of Henry IV. A stone pillar has been erected on the plain in commemoration of the event. Near the town stands the remains of a tower, supposed to have been erected by the Normans; it stands on the summit of a circular, and apparently artificial mount. In the vicinity are many intrenchments. About a mile to the north-west of the town stands the most remarkable, called Humbleton-hill; it consists of a small circular hill surmounted by a cairn; the sides of the hill are cut into three terraces, each 20 feet in breadth, and affording the means of making an obstinate resistance. Distance from Newcastle-on-Tyne, 46 m. N.N.W.; from London, 318 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 1679; in 1831, 1926. A. P., £7,212.

WOOLFARDISWORTHY, a parish in the hundred of Hartland, co. of Devon. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter, certified at £20 8s., returned at £36, and, in 1829, in the patronage of the Rev. William Loggin. Distance from Bideford, 9½ m. S.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 591; in 1831, 840. A. P., £2,939.

WOOLFARDISWORTHY, a parish in the hundred of Witheridge, co. of Devon. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter, rated at £9 19s. 4½d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Brest. Church ded. to the Holy Trinity. In this parish are remains of an ancient encampment, attributed to the Romans, and commonly denominated Berry-castle. Distance from Crediton, 6 m. N. by W. Pop., in 1801, 131; in 1831, 226. A. P., £1,460.

WOOLFERTON, a township in the parish of Richard's-castle, co. of Salop. It is crossed by the Stourport canal. Distance from Ludlow, 3 m. S.E. Pop. with the parish.

WOOLFORD (GREAT), a parish in the Brilles division of the hundred of Kington, co. of Warwick. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £8, and in the patronage of the master and fellows of Merton college, Oxford. Church ded. to St Michael. Distance from Shipston-upon-Stour, 4 m. S. by W. Pop., of the township of Great Woolford, in 1801, 278; in 1831, 300. A. P., £1,497.

WOOLFORD (LITTLE), a township in the above parish, distant 3 m. S. from Shipston-upon-Stour. Pop., in 1801, 229; in 1831, 280. A. P., £1,560.

WOOLGNASTON, a hamlet, formerly a chapelry, in the parish of Penkridge, eastern division of the hundred of Cuttlestone, co. of Stafford. It is adjacent to the town of Penkridge.

WOOLGURD'S-HILL, a tything, formerly a chapelry, in the parish of Banwell, co. of Somerset.

WOOLHAMPTON, or WOLHAMPTON, a parish in the hundred of Theale, co. of Berks. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £7 17s. 6d., returned at £144, and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. Lancelot Greenhwaite Halton. Church ded. to St Peter. The Roman Catholics have a place of worship here. The parish, which contains some beautiful meadow land, is crossed by the river Kennet, here navigable. Distance from Newbury, 7 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 322; in 1831, 364. A. P., £1,846.

WOOLLASON, a hamlet in the parish of Mixbury, co. of Oxford.

WOOLLEY, a tything in the parish of Chadleworth, hundred of Kintbury-Eagle, co. of Berks. Distance from East Ilsley, 6 m. W. Here was anciently a free chapel. Pop. returned with the parish.

WOOLLEY, a parish in the hundred of Leightonstone, co. of Huntingdon. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £9 9s. 2d., returned at £134, and, in 1829, in the patronage of Henry Sweeting, Esq. At the west end of the church, which is ded. to St Mary, is a tower, surmounted by a handsome cupola. Distance from Kimbolton, 5 m. N.E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 66; in 1831, 58. A. P., £1,257.

WOOLLEY, a chapelry in the parish of Royston, lower division of the wapentake of Staincross, W. R., co. of York. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of York, certified at £21 14s. 4d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of W. Wentworth, Esq. Here is a school with an endowment, partly derived from an annuity chargeable on the parish fund, and from lands of the value of £11 11s. per annum, given by Nicholas Burley, for which 16 poor children receive gratuitous instruction. Distance from Barnesley, 6 m. N. by W. Pop., in 1801, 565; in 1831, 553. A. P., £3,701.

WOOLMINSTON, a tything in the parish and hundred of Crewkerne, co. of Somerset. Distance from Crewkerne, 1½ m. S.W. by W. Pop. with the parish.

WOOLLAS (Str), a parish in the upper division of the hundred of Wentloog, co. of Monmouth. It is adjacent to the western side of the town of Newport. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff, rated at £7 3s. 11½d., and in the patronage of the bishop of Gloucester. The chapel was lately enlarged, 170 free sittings being added; towards defraying the expense of which, £170 were granted by the incorporated society for the enlargement of churches and chapels. WOOLWICH,

A market-town and parish in the hundred of Blackheath, lathe of Sutton-at-Home, co. of Kent. It extends likewise into the county of Essex, taking in the Devil's-house, and certain lands there. It is 9 m. E. by S. from St Paul's cathedral, London. Pop., in 1801, 9836; in 1831, 17,661. A. P., £31,500.

Description, &c.—The town stands on an elevated site, close to the south bank of the river Thames, the portion of the parish which extends into Essex being on the opposite side. The principal street runs parallel to the river, and is crossed by others of smaller extent at right angles. The length of the town is about a mile, and it stands partially within the parish of Plumstead. The principal street contains many houses of considerable antiquity, with some of a more modern and substantial aspect, but the side streets are chiefly modern, and are occupied in a great measure by the artificers employed in different public works. The most agreeable part of the town occupies the upper part of the elevated site, near the Charlton road, and the scenery of the environs is of a rich and diversified character, well wooded, and containing a number of respectable villa-

The town is well supplied with water from the works of the Kent water company, and is lighted with coal gas. The streets are generally paved, and kept in repair under the superintendence of commissioners, chosen annually, according to the provisions of an act of the 47th of George III. The inhabitants are not engaged in any particular branch of manufacture, unconnected with the public works, nor is there any trade of importance. The town is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the county, who meet here at the King's Arms Hotel on Monday and Friday, and hold the petty session for the division, on the first Thursday in every month, at the Green Man Inn at Blackheath. The act of the 47th George III., authorizes the annual appointment of commissioners for holding a court of requests for the hundred of Blackheath, and other parts of the county of Kent, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5, every alternate Friday; they meet for this purpose in the Crown and Anchor Tavern. A market-house was erected a few years ago, but has never been used for the purpose for which it was built; it has lately been made a store-house. The original market is held on Friday, but additional markets are held on Wednesday and Saturday, under the sanction of the act above-mentioned. There are coaches and vans to London every half hour, also passage-boats on the river. About a mile above the town is a ferry over the river, which was removed some time ago from the town itself. Off the town are moored hulks for the confinement of convicts.

Public Buildings.—The public buildings and works are the most important and interesting objects in Woolwich. Here is the royal dock-yard; it commences on the west, near the village of New Charlton, and extends eastward, along the bank of the river, for about a mile, varying in breadth from a furlong to a quarter of a mile. The commissioner and principal officers connected with the establishment have handsome residences on the right and left sides of the great entrance, which is a stone portal, flanked by piers ornamented with appropriate sculpture. The establishment is under the control of the navy board, and consists of a master-intendant, store-keeper, master ship-wright, smith, painter, and their assistants, a surgeon, and assistant-surgeon, with various other officers. Among the most important parts of this extensive establishment may be noticed the docks and smithery. There are two dry-docks, one single and one double, with a wet-dock or basin, capable of containing ships of the largest magnitude, being 400 feet long and 290 in breadth, and embanked with strong sloping walls of brick, coped with massive blocks of stone. Here are also a mast-pond, a boat-pond, mast and boat houses; and, also connected with ship-building, several slips adapted for vessels of the first class, covered with sheds, lighted from the roof. Here are likewise extensive ranges of timber sheds, store-houses, mould loft, &c. In the smithery are manufactured anchors and other parts of a ship which are formed of hammered iron, such as breast-pieces, knees, and keelsons. An immense stock of anchors of all sizes is kept, disposed in ranges on an open space, ready for supplying the demands of the navy. In this part of the work are two steam engines, one of 20, and the other of 14 horse power, for working the immense tilt-hammers by which bars of iron of great size are forged. Besides these, there are various machines for different purposes, such as rolling and cutting machines, also blast furnaces for casting, and a small steam engine for blowing the fires. Among the vessels which have recently come from the yards of Woolwich we may mention the Lord Nelson of 120 guns; the Invincible and Venerable, each of 74; the Redoubtable, Hawk, Talavera, Black Prince, and many others of inferior grades, as frigates and third rates; also the Dec, a superb steam vessel of 701 tons burden. On the stocks are, or were lately, the Trafalgar, 120 guns; the Boacawen, 80; Thunderer, 84; Chichester, 52; Ambuscade, 36; and several sloops.

The rope yard is in the eastern part of the town. It consists of an immense building of three stories, the upper being appropriated to the spinning of yarn, the second to the manufacture of cordage and ropes, and the lower to the making of cables, in the formation of which some very complicated machinery is used. The length of the whole structure is about 1200 feet, which is about the length of the greatest cables of eight inches diameter. It is necessary to try the strength of these cables, which is done by subjecting them to a powerful strain from machinery; when they resist a certain weight they are pronounced fit for use. This establishment will shortly be broken up, and supplanted by one which is to be founded either at Portsmouth or Chatham.

Here is also the royal arsenal, which stands chiefly in that part of the town which extends into the parish of Plumstead. This establishment is under the control of the Master-general and Honourable Board of Ordnance. It extends over upwards of 100 acres of ground, and includes within its bounds a number of handsome residences appropriated to the use of different officers connected with the establishment, store-houses of vast extent, guard-houses, foundries, &c. The royal brass foundry was planned by Sir John Vanbrugh. For the casting of brass ordnance it contains three immense furnaces, one of which can fuse at once the enormous quantity of 18 tons of brass. Near this are work-houses containing the machines by which cannon are bored. Here are also places in which cannon are proved and stamped. Gun carriages are also made here, as also carts, ammunition waggon, and various carriages; connected with these workshops are several steam and saw mills. Here is the laboratory for making up cartridges, rockets, &c.; also curious collections of models of ships, arms, specimens of various branches of manufacture, &c. Along the Thames extend great wharfs, accessible to vessels of any magnitude, and a canal 35 feet in breadth bounds the establishment on the south-east. Here are vast store-houses arranged round an area in which are piled vast quantities of shot and shells. The buildings contain the stores of the navy and ordnance, and are very handsomely constructed of brick and stone, with ornaments of an appropriate character. Near the arsenal is a saw mill, wrought by an engine of 20 horse power. Not far from Woolwich—common are barracks for 270 sappers and miners; a grand depot of train artillery; and the ordnance hospital, which can accommodate about 700 patients. Here are the barracks for the royal foot and horse artillery, capable of accommodating from 3000 to 4000 men. In front is a parade, ornamented with various beautiful and curious pieces of artillery. The building contains a large chapel, library, reading room, a splendid mess room, and a drawing room; besides the residences of the men, riding school, stables, &c. On the ground in the vicinity the soldiers are exercised. The repository is a large building containing an immense collection of models of arms, machines, vessels, celebrated forts, towns, and ports, and various curiosities. Opposite to the barracks of the artillery is the royal military academy, in which are educated the gentlemen cadets, varying in number from 100 to 140. The establishment was founded in 1741, and is under the inspection of the master-general of the ordnance, as governor, and a lieutenant-governor and inspector, with professors of mathematics, fortification, and chemistry, with subordinate masters, teachers of French and drawing. Examinations are held at stated times, when the most deserving students of certain standing receive commissions. The buildings present a combination of the early English and Elizabethan styles of architecture. Not far from this are the barracks of the Woolwich division of marines.

Ecclesiastical Affairs.—The living of Woolwich is a rectory, in the archd. and dio. of Rochester, rated at £7 12s. 6d., and in the patronage of the bishop of Rochester. The church, which is ded. to St Mary Magdalene, stands on an elevated site, and overlooks the river and dockyard. It is a neat building of brick, containing some handsome monuments, and ornamented with various standards taken from the enemies of England. The church was rebuilt according to an act of the 5th George II.; the expense was £6,500, of which £3,500 were raised by the contributions of the inhabitants, and £3,000 were contributed by the trustees of the grant of Queen Anne for the erection of fifty new churches. Here are likewise the Ordinance chapel and that of the barracks, the officiating curates of which are appointed by the Board of Ordnance. The Baptists, Presbyterians, Roman Catholics, Independents, Arminian Bible Christians, and Wesleyan and Welsh Methodists have places of worship here.

Schools and Charities.—Here are two national schools supported by voluntary contributions, the one for the gratuitous education of 200 boys, and the other for 130 girls. Here are likewise an infant school for 120 children, and a British and Foreign school for 164 boys and 100 girls. Attached to Enon chapel is a school, well endowed, for the gratuitous education of 130 boys and 60 girls. Adjoining to the workhouse is a school, founded in 1750 by Mrs Mary Withers, who endowed it with £1.2^d. Old South Sea annuities, for the education of 30 girls in the parish workhouse, or, should the workhouse not contain so many, an equal number nominated by the rector. The salary of the schoolmistress arising from the endowment is about £33 per annum. In 1758, Mrs Mary Wiseman bequeathed a sum of £1,000 South Sea annuities, now producing £56 5s. per annum, for the purpose of educating and clothing six orphan sons of shipwrights in the royal dockyard, and afterwards binding them apprentices to the same occupation. The number of boys has been increased to ten. In 1560, Sir Martin Bowes founded and endowed five almshouses for an equal number of widows upwards of 50 years age, belonging to this parish, and placed them under the control of the Goldsmiths' company, London. The endowment arises from lands and tenements, and yields to each widow £11 10s. per annum, with a chaldron of coals and a certain quantity of candles. The buildings were removed in 1771 by the Goldsmiths' company.

WOOPERTON, a township in the parish of Eglingham, northern division of the ward of Coquetdale, co. of Northumberland. Distance from Wooler, 6½ m. S.E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 56; in 1831, 107.

WOORE, or WORE, a chapelry in that part of the parish of Muckleston which is in the Drayton division of the hundred of Bradford (North), co. of Salop. Living, a perpetual curacy, certified at £18, returned at £27, in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Worcester, and in the patronage of the rector of Muckleston. The chapel was lately enlarged, on which occasion the incorporated society for the enlargement of churches and chapels contributed £10 towards defraying the expense of the new free sittings, 80 in number. Here is a Sunday school, in which 30 children receive instruction on an endowment consisting of £10 per annum, bequeathed in 1593 by William Elkins, and £5 per annum left in 1615 by Randolph Woolley. This chapelry includes the townships of Bearton, Dorrington, and Gravenhanger. Distance from Drayton-in-Hales, 6½ m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1831, 400.

WOOTHORPE, WOTHORPE, or WADTHORPE, a hamlet in the parish of St Martin, Stamford-Baron, liberty of Peterborough, or hundred of Nassauburgh, co. of Northampton. "Here appears to have been a small Benedictine nunnery, ded. to St Mary, as early as the time of King Henry I. The patronage was in the earls of Kent, and by a daughter and heiress came to Sir Thomas Holland, at whose petition this priory, wherein there was but one nun left, was united, 28th Edward III., to St Michael's, near Stamford, and as parcel of the same was granted, 32nd Henry VIII., to Richard Cecil."—Tanner's Not. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, rated at £15 2s. 8½d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of the warden and fellows of New college, Oxford. The church, which presents a combination of the Norman with more modern style of architecture, is ded. to St Mary. The inhabitants, especially those of Old Woodstock, are much employed in the manufacture of gloves. An annual court leet is held here for the appointment of constables and other officers. Twelve boys are maintained, clothed, educated, and apprenticed, on an endowment of £70, arising from the sum of £2,300 India annuities, bequeathed for the purpose in 1785 by Charles Parrott. The Roman road called Akeman-street passes in the vicinity of the village; on Chaldon hill are traces of a temporary encampment, and various relics of the Roman people have from time to time been discovered here. Distance from New Woodstock, 2½ m. N. by W. Pop., in 1801, 823; in 1831, 1060. A. P., £3,979.

WOOTTON, a hamlet in the parish of Boldre, east half hundred of New Forest, New Forest (East) division of the co. of Southampton.

WOOTTON, a parish in the liberty of East Medina, isle of Wight division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £7 16s. 0½d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of R. W. White, Esq. Church ded. to St Edmund. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. On Wootton farm is an oak of great antiquity, measuring in circumference about 47 feet. On Fern-hill is a country seat of the same name, erected by the late Lord Bolton, and now the property of Charles Chute, Esq. It is a curious structure, not a little resembling a church, from its lofty tower and peculiar form, and commanding an extensive view of the coast and neighbouring country. The parish is bounded on the north by the Motherbank, and on the east by an inlet of the sea. The latter is crossed by the high road to Newport, supported on a causeway upwards of 900 feet in length, and called Wootton-bridge. Distance from Newport, 4 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 38; in 1831, 55. WOOTTON-BASSET, a market-town and parish, formerly a borough, in the hundred of Kingsbridge, co. of Wilts. It was anciently a place of considerable importance, and began to return members to parliament in the 25th of Henry VI. At the Norman conquest it was called Wodeton, from the Saxon words wode, a wood, and tan, a town. The present name is a corruption of the ancient one, and the adjunct is derived from its having become the property of the noble family of Basset. The town, consisting of a single street, about half a mile in length, occupies an elevated site in the middle of a beautiful and fertile district, of which it commands an extensive view. The street is neither paved nor lighted, and the houses are generally of an inferior class. The supply of water is abundant and of excellent quality. The inhabitants were formerly extensively employed in the woollen trade, more especially in the manufacture of broad cloths, bet are now chiefly engaged in agriculture and the ordinary handicrafts. The woollen trade has entirely ceased, and no other has supplied its place. Tuesday is market-day, and fairs are held on the first Mondays after the festivals of Pentecost and St Bartholomew. The Wilts and Berks canal passes within half a mile to the south of the town. The free tenants of the borough formerly enjoyed a right of free common in Fasteur great park, which is about 2000 acres in extent.

The town was first incorporated under a charter granted by Henry VI. This was finally confirmed by Charles II., in the 31st year of his reign, and the town is now governed by a mayor, two aldermen, and 12 capital burgesses, with a town-clerk and subordinate officers. The mayor is annually elected by the corporate body, and has the patronage of the subordinate officers. The town-clerk, who holds his office for life, is appointed by the corporation. The town returned two members regularly to parliament since the 26th of Henry VI. The mayor was the returning officer, and the right of election was vested in the inhabitants paying scot and lot, but by the provisions of the reform bill of 1831 it was disfranchised, and the inhabitants have since taken part in the election of the members for the county. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £12, and, in 1829, in the patronage of the earl of Clarendon. The church is an ancient structure, ded. to All Saints. A few years ago, when some workmen were employed in repairing the south wall, they discovered a rudely executed but curious painting, ded. to St Thomas à Becket. The Independents have a place of worship here. Here are a Sunday and charity schools for girls. In 1688, Richard Jones founded and endowed a free school for poor children of the town. The endowment consists of lands, which now yield an income of £25 per annum, and are under the management of certain trustees; at present about 18 children are educated gratuitously. The old manor-house has been converted into a farmhouse. An ancient hospital formerly existed here, and was ded. to St John. In the reign of Henry IV. it was granted and united to the priory of Bradenstoke in this county. In the vicinity is a mineral spring much used by the inhabitants; its properties are similar to those of the Cheltenham waters. Distance from Salisbury, 36 m. N. by W.; and from London, 87 m. W. Pop., in 1801, 1244; in 1831, 1896. A. P., £9,331.

WOOTTON-FITZPAINE. See WOTTON-FITZPAINE.

WOOTTON-GLANVILLE, a parish in the hundred of Buckland-Newton, Cerne subdivision of the county of Dorset. It contains the tything of Wootton-Newland. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £12, and, in 1829, in the patronage of the devisees of the trustees of Humphrey Evans. The church—which is chiefly in the decorated style of English architecture, with a low embattled tower—is ded. to St Mary. It contains an altar tomb, with a figure in a recumbent posture, also several interesting monuments and inscriptions; the windows still retain some portions of ancient stained glass. New pews were put in, and the whole edifice underwent a thorough repair about 90 years ago. Distance from Sherborne, 7½ m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 275; in 1831, 331. A. P., £2,189.

WOOTTON (ST LAWRENCE), a parish in the hundred of Chuteley, Kingsclere division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £10 2s. 2½d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Winchester. The church is a building of some antiquity, presenting a combination of the Norman and early English styles of architecture. Distance from Basingstoke, 3 m. W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 548; in 1831, 847. A. P., £3,245.

WOOTTON (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of Sherborne, Sherborne division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, returned at £60, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean of Salisbury, and, in 1829, in the patronage of Earl Digby. The parish was formerly part of that of Sherborne, and the church was a chapel-of-ease to that vicarage. Distance from Sherborne, 2 m. S.E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 67; in 1831, 78. A. P., £834.

WOOTTON (NORTH), a parish in the Lynn division of the hundred of Freebridge, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged vicarage in the peculiar jurisdiction of the rector of Castle-Rising, rated at £10, returned at £124, and, in 1829, in the patronage of Richard Howard, Esq. Church ded. to All Saints. Distance from Castle-Rising, 2 m. W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 119; in 1831, 179. A. P., £1,726.

WOOTTON (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of Glaston-Twelve-Hides, co. of Somerset. Living, a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the precentor of the cathedral church of Wells, of the certified value of £10, and subordinate to the vicarage of East Pilton. Here is a Sunday school, for the endowment of which, John Humsfys bequeathed £104. Distance from Shepton-Mallet, 4 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 224; in 1831, 307. A. P., £2,160.

WOOTTON (NEULAND), a tything in the parish of Wootton-Glanville, co. of Dorset.

WOOTTON-RIVERS, a parish in the hundred of Kinwardstone, co. of Wilts. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £7 10s. 5d., and alternately in the patronage of the master and fellows of St John's college, Cambridge, and of the principal and fellows of Brasen-nose college, Oxford. The living must be presented to a person who has been sent from Somersetshire as a scholar at either of these colleges. Church ded. to St Andrew. Distance from Pewsey, 3 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 313; in 1831, 403. A. P., £3,764.

WOOTTON (South), a parish in the Lynn division of the hundred of Freebridge, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged rectory, rated at £8 6s. 8d., returned at £146 4s. 6d., in the peculiar jurisdiction of the rector of Castle-Rising, and in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Castle-Rising, 2½ m. S.W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 124; in 1831, 177. A. P., £1,848.

WOOTTON (VILLAGE), an extra parochial liberty in the upper division of the hundred of Dudstone and King's-Barton, co. of Gloucester. It is adjacent to the north gate of the city of Gloucester.

WOOTTON-WAWEN, a parish in the Henley division of the hundred of Barlichway, co. of Warwick. It contains the chapeltries of Henley-in-Arden and Ullenhall, and the hamlet of Aspley with Fordhall. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester, rated at £11 9s. 7d., and in the patronage of the provost and fellows of King's college, Cambridge. The church is an elegant structure, ded. to St Peter. It has a central tower, and is chiefly in the later style of English architecture, with some specimens of the early style. At the east end of the north aisle is a reading desk, on which are some old works on the gospels by various authors. These were originally intended for the use of such persons as obtained leave from the priest to study here, and are fastened by chains to the board. The parish is crossed by the Stratford and Avon canal. At Gromos, the seat of Dowager Lady Smythe, is a Roman Catholic chapel. The petty sessions for the hundred of Barlichway are held here. "Robert de Tonei, or Stafford, son to Roger de Tonei, standard bearer in Normandy, gave, soon after the Conquest, the church of St Peter, with some lands in this town, to the abbey of Castillon, or Conches, in Normandy, founded by his father, which were confirmed to them by Nicolas de Stafford, his son, in the time of Henry I., and Robert de Stafford, his grandson, in the time of Henry II.; and hereupon a cell of Benedictine monks from that foreign monastery was sent over hither, and continued here till the dissolution of the alien priories in the reign of Edward III. This was granted, 22^d Richard II., to the priory of St Ann, near Coventry, and afterward, 22^d Henry VI., to the provost and scholars of King's college, Cambridge, who still enjoy the same."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Henley-in-Arden, 1½ m. S. Pop., of the village, in 1801, 587; in 1831, 592. A. P., of the whole parish, £15,068. Total pop., in 1831, 2271.

WORBARROW-BAY, in the parish of Tyneham, co. of Dorset. "Worbarrow-bay lies near Balkington, almost at the foot of Flower-Barrow. It is a little rocky hill, almost environed by the sea; joined to the mainland by a neck of land, but not of much use. The sea has wrought in it great cavities, which are receptacles for sea birds. At the foot, a little north of it, is a circular rampart, where two or three cannons are planted in time of war. West of this bay is Copcourt-point."—Hutchins' Dorset.

WORCESTERSHIRE,

An inland county of England, extending from 52° 0' to 52° 30' North Lat., and from 2° 14' to 3° 0' West Long. It is bounded on the west by the county of Hereford; on the south and south-east by that of Gloucester; on the east and north-east by that of Warwick; on the north and north-west by those of Stafford and Salop. The form is compact, the whole being nearly square; yet the boundaries are extremely irregular, and a good many detached portions are enclosed by the county of Gloucester. The boundaries are for the most part artificial, with the exception of the line of the Malvern hills, which separates the county from that of Hereford for about 7 miles, and a few small rivulets, whose course the boundary line appears to follow in different places for several miles.

Face of the Country.—The general aspect of the county is level, and it is intersected in a direction nearly from north to south by the rich vale of the Severn, which varies in breadth from a mile to a quarter of a mile, and includes a space of about 10,000 acres. From the sides of this vale, as well as from those of Evesham and Avon, the country rises in gentle slopes, but without reaching any great elevation, except in particular points. Yet there are not many extensive plains, the face of the country being somewhat broken by valleys of little depth, and low hills. The highest land in the county is in the Malvern range of hills, which are pretty steep and rocky, and rise in some places to an altitude of 1313 feet above the level of the river Severn. From these are obtained extensive and beautiful prospects of a highly cultivated and fertile country. To the south of Pershore, and near the south-east bank of the Avon, rises Bredon-hill, to an elevation of 900 feet. The parish of Abberbury is mountainous; the hills are seen from a great distance, though not above 800 or 900 feet in elevation. The hilly district called the Lickey extends from near Bromsgrove in a north-east direction as far as Hagley, and branches somewhat to the eastward. The highest points in this range rise to the height of 900 feet above the Severn. The finest views in the county are obtained from the hill to the east of the city of Worcester. From this a most beautiful landscape is seen; the whole of the background, which at its greatest distance does not exceed 12, and nowhere approaches nearer than 8 miles, (allowing something for the openings to the south-west and north,) appears to be one continuation of noble hills, forming, as it were, the frame of the delightful picture which presents itself in the centre, diversified with all the beauties of hill, dale, wood, and water. Fine prospects may also be had from the Broadway hills, near Broadway; Stagbury hill, near Bewdley; the Witchbury hills, near the river Teme; and Woodbury hill. The least picturesque part of the county is that which lies between Droitwich and Bromsgrove.

trict called the Lickey, are cold, but not bleak, though they might be denominated so when compared with some parts of this rich county. The Malvern hills, though nothing more than sheep walks, have yet a most salubrious climate; and the north-western parts of the county, particularly about Abberley, though in elevation equal to any other district, seem to have a much warmer aspect than the Lickey or Broadway hills, which may perhaps in a great degree be owing to the shelter of the woods and plantations which abound in that district. In the middle, south, and western parts of the county, the climate is described as remarkably mild, soft, and salubrious. The vale of the Severn, but little elevated above the level of the sea, and the valleys of the Avon and Teme, nearly upon the same level, with the adjoining uplands, seldom rising above 100, or at most 150 feet above their level, have at this low elevation a warmth and softness which ripens the grain, and brings to perfection the fruits of the earth, from a fortnight to a month earlier than in more elevated countries.

Soil.—The soil of Worcestershire is various, but in general remarkable for its fertility. The most prevailing soil is a rich loamy sand, which, in the districts immediately to the north of Worcester, and throughout the central parts of the county, is mixed with a small proportion of gravel. Towards the east there are some tracts of very light sand, with a few spots of clay and peat earth. That district, however, consists chiefly of a strong clay, with a certain portion of deep black peat earth, which formerly constituted extensive wastes, but is now for the most part under cultivation. Between Worcester and the vale of Evesham, the soil is partly red marl and partly strong clay, with some sandy loam; the substratum, especially under the sandy loam, is generally limestone. In the vale of Evesham the soil is particularly deep; of a darkish coloured earth, with a substratum, in many parts, of clay with some gravel. Beyond this, on the confines of the county, and in the small detached parts, including a small part of the Cotswold hills that runs into this county, a limestone prevails on the upper land and a rich loam on the lower. Between Worcester and Malvern, the general character of the soil is a clay mixed with gravel in different proportions. To the left of this line, including Malvern-Chase, a deep surface of clay is found in many places; in others a rich loam, inclining to sand; the substratum is supposed to be marl. In the central parts of the western district a strong clay is sometimes found, becoming gradually gravelly towards the light sands in the north. In each of these districts some rocky and stony soil is met, but no traces of flints or chalk. The vale of the Severn is described as containing not less than 10,000 acres of a deep and rich stratum of alluvial deposit, formed in the process of ages by that river and its tributary streams. In some places this sediment consists of a pure water clay, adapted for the manufacture of bricks and tiles, but for the most part of a rich mud, fertile and favourable to vegetation.

Mineral Productions.—“As to the mineralogy of this county but little can be said, for, as in all the other fertile counties of England, little is to be found under the surface where the external produce is so luxuriant. Yet, if Worcester cannot boast its mines of lead or iron ore, it is not deficient in a variety of subterranean strata, which may in some measure be regarded as equally useful. There is no scarcity of clay fit for brick, nor of limestone in the hills, where considerable quantities of it might be burnt for the use of the builder and agriculturist, if coal could be more conveniently brought to the spot, the want of which prevents it from being more extensively employed as a manure. Some coal, however, is raised in the north-western district of the county, particularly about Bramble, where there is a railway leading to the Loominster canal; at Pensax there are also mines of coal, much used in the making of coke for the hop-kilns. At present, however, there is very little prospect of these mines becoming of any great value to the county, for the vein is little more than two feet in thickness, and that too at a depth of 20 yards, from whence the water must be raised in buckets by manual labour, the works not being able to support the expense of a steam engine. Worcestershire, therefore, is obliged to depend for a supply of fuel principally upon the mines of Staffordshire, the produce of which is brought down the Severn. Such, however, is the want of fuel in some parts of the county, that even in the vale of Evesham the poor are glad to burn the bean stubble. Quarts exists in abundance in the Malvern hills, and occurs likewise in the district of the Lickey. Freestone, fit for building, is found in many parts. In the parish of Cleve-Prior are quarries of very good stone, fit for barn floors and other uses; some of it bears a fine polish like Derbyshire marble, and not inferior to it. The beds lie from twelve to fourteen feet below the surface. By means of the Avon navigation large quantities from these quarries are sent to various places in the neighbourhood of the county, which have for some time opened a branch of business of some importance, as affording employment to many who might otherwise have been in idleness. A reddish stone is found also in extensive quarries on the Broadway hills. There are some considerable quarries of calcareous flagstone, which answers extremely well for the flooring of barns or even of halls and kitchens. At Droitwich there are most productive salt-pits, which are worked to a great extent. The salt springs are met with about 110 feet below the surface, after which a bed of gypsum 130 feet broad must be penetrated, when the springs, of about 22 inches in depth, are found; after which is a bed of salt rock. There are mineral springs at Malvern; also several useful chalybeates in Kidderminster parish, of which that at Landbourne is the strongest; at the Round-hill also, in the same parish, is another. On Burlish-common is a dropping well, the water of which is vulgarly considered to be excellent for the cure of sore eyes.”

of Worcester are the Severn, the Upper Avon, the Teme, and the Stour. The river Severn enters the northern border of the county from that of Salop at about three miles distant from Bewdley. Running in a direction nearly S. by E. it passes Bewdley, Stourport, Worcester, and Upton-upon-Severn, and enters the county of Gloucester close to the town of Tewkesbury. By this course it leaves on the right bank about one-third, on the left, two-thirds of the county. The tide rises into the Severn through a short portion of this course; the channel is full of sands and shoals, which during the droughts of summer, offer considerable impediments to navigation, but at other times vessels of 60 tons can pass through the county, and vessels of 80 can ascend as high as Worcester bridge. The river, in its course through the county, has a fall of about one foot in a mile, and the depth is calculated to average about five or six yards; the average breadth is from 80 to 100 yards. Within the limits of the county the conservancy of the river is vested in the magistrates of Worcestershire, according to a statute of the 30th Charles II., c. 9. The fish are not so abundant as they were wont to be in former times; the varieties of most importance are the salmon, chad, lamprey, and lampern. The Upper Avon enters from the county of Warwick, near Prior's-Cleeve, after having formed a part of the boundary of a projecting portion of Worcestershire a few miles from Stratford-on-Avon. It runs in a direction nearly S.S.E. as far as Evesham, from whence it turns northward for a few miles, then westward to Pershore, from which it proceeds by a devious course to the southward, and enters the river Severn at Tewkesbury. Its course through the county of Worcester is between 20 and 30 miles, through the whole extent of which it was made navigable by locks about the year 1637. The vale of Evesham, through which it runs, is remarkable for its beauty and fertility. Before leaving the county, it runs along the boundary line of a projecting portion of that of Gloucester for about $4\frac{1}{2}$ m.—The Teme first touches the county at the point at which the counties of Hereford, Salop, and Worcester meet; it then runs for six or seven miles along the line which divides Salop from Worcestershire, in the course of which it passes the town of Tenbury. It then enters the county and runs in a southeasterly direction as far as Martley, when it again forms part of the boundary line, and again strikes E.S.E. through the county, passing Lulsley, Cothoridge, Leigh, and Wick Episcopi, and falling into the Severn about two miles below the city of Worcester. This river passes through a remarkably beautiful country, and has a considerable fall, so that its course is rapid and its channel shallow. It is navigable for about a mile from the Severn.—The Stour rises in a portion of Staffordshire which lies detached within the northern part of this county. It flows northward by Hales-Owen, from thence it passes westward by Stourbridge, and enters the county of Stafford. A few miles to the S.W. of this point it re-enters the county, and flows in the course of the Stafford and Worcester canal, by Kidderminster, till it joins the Severn at Stourport. This river is partially navigable. The smaller streams are very numerous. Those of greatest note are the Salwarpe, which rises in the Lickey, and, after passing Bromsgrove and Droitwich, enters the Severn about 3 m. above the city of Worcester; the Rhea, which rises near Chadwick, and runs towards Birmingham; and the Ledden, which runs for a few miles along the S.W. boundary of the county.

Wood.—Worcestershire is a well-wooded county. Oak and ash are the principal timber trees; beech is also common, and there are many plantations of willow and poplar on the borders of the rivers, especially the Teme. Fir abounds on the hills, in plantations of great extent; and some of the most valuable elm timber in the kingdom is grown in the hedgerows, and cut down in great quantities to be sent to Birmingham and other places. The underwood is cultivated for the making of hop-poles and charcoal for the iron-furnaces. The oak coppices are pretty extensive, and supply much bark; trees for timber are left at proper distances. The wood, when stripped of bark, is called "black poles," and is sold for making rails, laths, &c. Of waste land, the county is said to contain not above 20,000 acres. There are but few uninclosed commons. The orchards of Worcestershire have long been famous. The quantity of cider and perry annually made is very great, and is exported, with much fruit, to all parts of the kingdom. The orchards are most numerous in the southern district, and many of the trees grow in the hedgerows.

Agriculture.—The agriculture varies very little in different parts of this county, from the general fertility of the soil. On the hills, and lighter soils, the drill husbandry is greatly practised. In 1811, of about 30,000 families, 13,818 were returned as engaged in agriculture. The whole extent of the county is calculated at 500,000 statute acres, of which 360,000 are arable, 50,000 are meadow land, 50,000 permanent upland pasture, and 20,000 are waste. About 43,500 acres are annually sown with wheat, of which four varieties are raised; about 1000 acres are sown with rye, much of which is used as spring food for cattle; about 33,000 acres are sown with barley; and about 6000 acres are laid out in hop grounds. Beans and vetches are cultivated to a great extent, the latter for feeding horses. Pease are common, but not raised in great quantities. Turnips, carrots, and potatoes, are extensively produced; and about 5000 acres are laid out in garden land, especially in the vicinity of the large towns. The artificial grasses are principally red and white clover, rye grass, and trefoil. The meadow lands are chiefly situated in the vale of the Severn and that of Evesham. Much hay is made, and sent to the less fertile parts of the neighbouring counties. In these districts are some dairy farms, in which butter and cheese are made in abundance. Marl, lime, horn-shavings, bones, ashes, and soot, are the principal manures.

Hereford and long-boned breeds; very few are bred in the county. The sheep are of various kinds, being chiefly brought from neighbouring counties to be fattened. The only breed peculiar to the county are those which are bred on the commons; they have no horns, and are supposed to have sprung from the same origin as the South Down sheep. Hogs are numerous, and much bacon is made, which is in a great measure consumed in the county. Horses are not bred to any extent. A strong black breed is in general use.

Population, &c.—The pop. of Worcestershire, in 1801, was 139,333; in 1831, 211,400: of which number, 103,867 were males, and 107,989 females. In 1811 it contained 50,462 houses: 16,855 families were returned as employed in trade and handicraft, 13,818 in agriculture, and 3441 others. The rates for the county in 1815 were £117,502; in the year ending March 25th, 1827, they amounted to £93,685 16s.; and the expenditure to £92,708 19s.; of which £76,954 6s. was applied to the use of the poor. A. P., 1815, £799,605.

Parliamentary Affairs.—This county now returns four members to parliament: viz. two for the eastern division, who are elected at Droitwich; and two for the western division, who are elected at Worcester.

Civil Government.—The county is divided into the hundreds of Blackenhurst, Dodding-tree, Halfshire, Oswaldslow, and Pershore. Oswaldslow is divided into upper, lower, and middle districts; the rest into upper and lower. It contains the city of Worcester, the borough and market-towns of Bewdley, Droitwich, and Evesham, and the market-towns of Bromsgrove, Dudley, Kidderminster, Pershore, Ship-ton-upon-Stour, Stourbridge, Stourport, Tenbury, and Upton-upon-Severn. The county is included in the Oxford circuit. The assizes and quarter sessions are held at Worcester. The number of acting magistrates in 1829 was 90.

Manufactures.—The manufacture of salt at Droitwich has existed from time immemorial. The making of malleable iron is carried on to a great extent in the villages in the vicinity of the river Stour. The carpets of Kidderminster have long held a high reputation. At Stourbridge and Dudley are flourishing manufactories of glass and iron. Worcester has extensive manufactures of gloves and porcelain.

Canals.—The Trent and Severn, or Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal, was begun in 1766, and completed in 1770. It waters the county of Worcester half way between Stourbridge and Kidderminster, and runs in a direction nearly S. by W. to join the river Severn at Stourport, following nearly the course of the river Stour. This canal is connected with the Grand Trunk, and thus opens a communication with the Trent and Mersey. It has nine locks, and a fall of 90 feet in its course of about nine miles in Worcestershire. It was constructed under the direction of the celebrated engineer Mr Brindley.—The Droitwich canal extends from that town in a S.W. direction to the Severn, which it joins about four miles above the city of Worcester. Its length does not exceed $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles, within which it has a fall of 80 feet and five locks. It was constructed under the superintendence of Brindley, at an expense of £25,000.—The Birmingham and Worcester canal was begun in 1791, and has contributed greatly to the prosperity both of Birmingham and of that portion of the county which it traverses. It is navigable for vessels of 60 tons burden. Its summit level commences at Birmingham, where it communicates with the Birmingham, Birmingham and Fazeley, and Birmingham and Warwick canals, and extends for 16 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles, to a short distance beyond King's-Norton, in the course of which it passes through two tunnels, one of which is upwards of a mile in length, and over two valleys, through which it is carried on lofty embankments. After passing through the great tunnel the lockage begins, and the fall from this point to the Severn at Worcester is about 450 feet in a course of about 13 miles. Its direction is about S.W. by S. A short distance beyond Alcechurch it passes through the parish of Tardebrigg, in a detached portion of the eo. of Warwick. Here it passes through a short tunnel. It then passes Stoke-Prior, Hartsor, and Oddington, near which last is a fourth tunnel.—The Dudley extension canal begins near Self Oak from the Birmingham and Worcester canal. It runs first in a westerly direction towards Hales-Owen, passing through a tunnel upwards of two miles in length; it then turns to the northward, and, before passing Dudley, enters another long tunnel in the limestone hills, from which it emerges in the county of Stafford, and finally joins the Birmingham and Wolverhampton canal. The whole course of this canal is about 13 miles on one level.—The Stratford-on-Avon canal leaves the Birmingham and Worcester canal on its highest level, near King's-Norton, and after passing a short tunnel enters the county at Warwick a few miles to the eastward. A small part of the canal, which, in 1791, was projected between Kingston, Leominster, and Stourport, lies in this county near Tenbury.

Roads.—The principal roads within the county are those from London to Welchpool, Aberystwith, Worcester, Shrewsbury and Holywell, Kidderminster and Birmingham.

Ecclesiastical Affairs.—The whole of the county, with the exception of 15 parishes and eight chapelries, is in the dio. of Worcester, and province of Canterbury. It forms also an archdeaconry, and is divided into the deaneries of Blockley, Droitwich, Evesham, Kidderminster, Kingston, Pershore, Powick, Warwick, Wick, and Worcester. It contains 271 parishes: of which 92 are rectories, 55 vicarages, and 24 perpetual curacies.

Antiquities.—At the period of the Roman invasion, Worcestershire is supposed to have been occupied by the British tribes of the Canovii and Dobuni. By the Romans it was placed in the division called Flavia Caesariensis. There are traces of the Ikniel-street and the Ridge-way. Upton and Worcester are supposed to have been Roman stations. Of ancient campments, traces exist near Bredon, Kempsey, Malvern, and Overbury. Near Witchbury are five barrows, popularly attributed to the Romans. About 28 monastic establishments existed here. The most remarkable churches are the cathedral of Worcester, and the churches of Church-Lench, Droitwich, East Ham, Holt, &c. Of ancient castles, may be mentioned those of Dudley, Ham, Hartlebury, and Holt. The earl of Coventry is lord-lieutenant of the county. The following noblemen have seats here:—The earls of Coventry and Plymouth, Earl Beauchamp, the marchioness of Downshire, Lords Northwick, Foley, and Littleton.

WORCESTER,

A city and county of itself, the capital of the co. of Worcester, in which it is locally situated, but has separate jurisdiction.

History.—The city of Worcester boasts of an antiquity as high as any in the island. In the time of the ancient Britons, according to the list of their cities given by Nennius, it was a place of considerable consequence, and was called Caer Guoramong. Perhaps it owed its consequence to its situation, being protected on the one hand by an impassable forest, and, on the other, by the river Severn, besides having the advantage of an adjacent ford over the river. It was taken possession of by the Romans at an early period of their dominion in Britain, and, although some doubts exist as to whether it was a principal station of that people, yet it seems certain that a fortress was erected here to protect the passage of the Severn, and secure the conquests in the neighbourhood. After the departure of the Romans, the native inhabitants resumed their rights, but were shortly after conquered by Penda, king of Mercia, who made this county, with that of Gloucester, and part of that of Warwick, into a province called Hwiccia. The city was soon after fortified by Osric, viceroy of the province, and called by its Saxon owners Wigornaceastre. After the general union of the small Saxon kingdoms, Alfred the Great gave the government of Mercia to his son-in-law, Ethelred, who took up his residence here, and, in 894, rebuilt the city, which the Danes had in a great measure destroyed. In a short time after this the bishop obtained certain royal grants, which enabled him to fortify the cathedral and close; of these fortifications, one portion, called Edgar's tower, yet remains. An insurrection of the inhabitants took place in the year 1041, in consequence of an unpopular tax imposed by Hardicanute. An army, which was sent by the king to punish the inhabitants, succeeded in driving them from the city, which they plundered and burned, but the insurgents having fortified themselves in the island Bevere, offered so vigorous a resistance, as to obtain honourable terms of capitulation. After the Conquest, a royal castle was founded here, the buildings of which were extended by the constable, Urso d'Abiot, sheriff of the county. In 1088 the citizens embraced the cause of William Rufus, and in consequence sustained an assault from some of the most powerful partizans of Robert, but succeeded in repelling them with great loss, with the aid of the bishop and his adherents. In 1113, the city, cathedral, and castle, suffered extensively from fire, which was supposed to have been caused by the Welsh. In the reign of Stephen, the constable, William de Beauchamp, was deposed for his adherence to the Empress Matilda, and Waleran, count of Meulan, was created earl of Worcester and constable of Worcester-castle, but William de Beauchamp succeeded in retaking the town, when his honours were restored by the empress, and subsequently confirmed by Henry II. The city was burnt in 1149 by Stephen, in revenge for the opposition which the inhabitants made to his cause, and soon after the same outrage was attempted by Eustace his son; meanwhile the castle resisted all efforts to take it. Accidental fires of great extent occurred in 1189 and 1202. In the last the cathedral was unroofed by the flames. During the reign of John, the city of Worcester took part with the refractory barons, and in 1216, Mareschall, son of the earl of Pembroke, held the castle in the name of the dauphin of France, the ally of the barons. The fortress, however, being taken by surprise by Ranulph, earl of Chester, the city was soon obliged to yield, when the conquerors exercised many cruelties upon the citizens in order to make them surrender their wealth. A heavy fine was likewise imposed upon the city, in the payment of which even the church plate and the ornaments of the various altars and shrine of St Wulstan were expended. In the same year King John died, and was interred in Worcester cathedral. A fire of considerable extent took place in 1233, when the buildings of the cathedral were greatly damaged. The city was taken and plundered, and other excesses were committed in 1263 by Robert Ferrers, earl of Derby, Robert, earl of Leicester, and other confederate barons. An army was raised here by Prince Edward, son to Henry III., after his escape from the castle of Hereford, where he and his father had been confined for some time by the earl of Leicester. It was with this army that he gained the celebrated battle of Evesham over the earl and the confederated barons. Another fire of some extent took place in 1299, when a whole street and the wooden bridge over the Severn were destroyed. In 1401, Owen Glendwr ravaged the city and surrounding country, but was obliged to retreat into Wales on the advance of Henry IV. at the head of a powerful army. After the battle of Bosworth field, Worcester was taken by the adherents of Henry VII., who, finding some of the partizans of Richard in the city, took them prisoners, beheaded them at the high cross, and inflicted a fine of 500 marks on the city. The city was besieged in 1486 by Sir Henry Stafford and Lord Lovell at the head of 4000 men, but the siege was raised by the duke of Bedford. During the civil wars in the reign of Charles I., the city of Worcester embraced the royal cause, and was in fact the first city which openly did so. The gates were opened to Sir John Byron and Lord Coventry, but the force being too small, they were put to great straits by the arrival of Colonel Fynes with 1000 dragoons and other troops. When the city was on the point of being taken, Prince Rupert arrived and drove off the parliamentary forces, who thereupon prepared to give battle in the vicinity. The arrival of the earl of Essex, however, caused the royal army to retreat, when the city fell into the hands of the parliamentary forces, who were quartered in the cathedral. A vast quantity of plunder was taken, and a fine of £5000 imposed on the inhabitants, besides a forced loan of £3000. These measures did not subdue the spirit of the citizens, who, after the removal of the army, continued to exert themselves in the cause of the king. In consequence, it was again besieged in 1646, when, after an obstinate resistance of four months, the garrison capitulated on honourable terms. The city still remained favourable to the royal cause, and on the 22d August, 1651, the gates were opened, notwithstanding the opposition of the garrison, to a Scottish army under Charles II. From various untoward circumstances, the king, on arriving at Worcester, found that his forces, fatigued by a long and harassing march, were not more numerous than when he rose from his camp at Torwood. On the other hand, he found all the militia and regular forces of the country every where opposed to him, and in consequence his situation was one of great difficulty. With an army of about 80,000 men, Cromwell fell upon Worcester, and attacking it on all sides, and meeting with little opposition, except from the duke of Hamilton and General Middleton, broke in upon the disordered royalists. The streets of the city were strewn with dead. Hamilton, a nobleman of bravery and honour, was mortally wounded; Maffey wounded and taken prisoner, and the king himself, having given many proofs of personal valour, was obliged to fly. The whole Scottish army was either killed or taken prisoners. The country people, inflamed with national antipathy, put to death the few that escaped from the field of battle. The king left Worcester in the afternoon, and travelled to Boscobel in Staffordshire. After the escape of the king, the citizens made their last stand in the town-hall, but were finally overwhelmed by superior numbers. In commemoration of this victory, Cromwell caused a 60 gun ship, shortly after launched at Woolwich, to be named the Worcester.

General Description.—The city of Worcester stands on the eastern bank of the river Severn, on ground which is partly level and partly rising with a gentle slope. The river is here crossed by an elegant bridge of stone, erected in 1780, on the site of another stone bridge which had replaced the ancient wooden one burnt in 1299. The present structure was erected at an expense of £29,843, and consists of five elliptical arches. The members of parliament for the city, John Walsh and Henry Crabb Boulton, Esqrs. gave £3,000 towards defraying the expense. On the opposite side of the river is the suburb of St John. The streets are spacious and regular, well paved, and lighted with gas, having been lately greatly improved under an act of parliament passed in 1823, for more effectually paving, watching, and lighting the city. An ample supply of water is obtained from the Severn, and is raised by a steam engine, erected in 1810, on the east side of the river, at a place called Little Pitchcroft. The neighbouring country is very beautiful, and the distance is bounded by pleasant hills. The street called the Foregate is the finest in the city, and consists of very handsome houses; at the end is St Nicholas' church. Here is a theatre, founded in 1780 by a tontine subscription, in shares of £50 each. It is a handsome building, and is occasionally open by companies of respectable performers. The town hall is a handsome brick building, ornamented with stone, and decorated with arms and statues, among which are three representative of Justice, Peace, and Plenty, as also those of Charles I. and II. on the sides of the entrance, and one of Queen Anne in a niche occupying the place of the central window of the principal story. In the tympanum of the pediment, which is circular, are the arms of England. The principal parts of the interior are the town-room and grand-council chamber. The former contains the Crown Bar and Nisi Prius court, and is 110 feet in length by 26 in breadth. Among other ornaments, it contains several curious suits of ancient armour. The grand-council chamber occupies the principal story, and is of the same size as the lower room. It is lighted with handsome lustres, and contains a full length portrait of George III., presented by that monarch on the occasion of his visit to the city in 1788. This room is chiefly used for civic entertainments. Assemblies and concerts are also occasionally held in it. It has been in contemplation for some time past to erect a more commodious building than the present town hall. In this city is the county jail and house of correction. It was erected in 1809, at an expense of £19,000, and is well adapted for the classification of prisoners. Here is a treadmill for grinding corn, also a chapel, airing yards, &c. The expenses of the prison are in some measure defrayed by the labour of the prisoners. The city jail and bridewell is a well constructed building, with eight wards, day-rooms, and airing yards, having a chapel, and separate accommodation for debtors. The water with which the establishment is supplied is raised by the treadmill. The building was erected in 1824, at an expense of £12,578 12s. 11d. Here are two medical societies, founded in 1796 and 1813, also a society for the encouragement of native artists. Here is a subscription library, founded in 1790, and now containing more than 5000 volumes. In the same building is a reading and newsroom. Musical festivals for the benefit of orphans and widows of poor clergymen are held every third year in the cathedral by the choirs of Worcester, Hereford, and Gloucester. Races are held in August and November on Pitchcroft meadow.

Civil Government.—Worcester first became a city under Wulfhere, the sixth king of Mercia, and various privileges were bestowed upon it by succeeding monarchs, particularly Offa and Edgar, but the first charter of incorporation appears to have been granted to the inhabitants by Henry I. This charter received confirmation, or various alterations, from Henry II., Richard I., John, Edwards I., II., and III., Richard II., Henry VII., Henry VIII., and Edward VI. By James I. the charter was entirely remodelled, and the city erected into a county by itself, by the style of "The city and county of the city of Worcester," in 1621. By this charter the government was vested in a mayor, recorder, sheriff, six aldermen, 24 common-councilmen, and 48 capital citizens; subordinate to whom are a town-clerk, two chamberlains, two coroners, and subordinate officers. The mayor is chosen annually from among the common-councilmen, vacancies in whose number are filled up from among the capital citizens. The freedom of the town descends to the eldest sons of citizens, and may be acquired by purchase or servitude. The mayor, recorder, and aldermen, are justices-of-the-peace within the city and county of the city. A court of record for the recovery of all debts is held every Monday, and quarterly courts of session are held for all offences not capital, committed within the city and county of the city.

Parliamentary Affairs.—From the 23d of Edward I. the city regularly returned two members to parliament. The right of electing these was held by the freemen, resident or not, not receiving parochial aid, in number about 3000. Under the reform act it continues to send two members. The number of electors is about 4000, and the mayor is returning officer. This is the county town, and here are held the assizes, general quarter sessions, and elections of the county members.

Population, Trade, &c.—The population of Worcester, as returned under the several parishes, was

Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday, are market days; fairs for cattle, horses, and linen cloth, are held on the Saturday before Palm-Sunday, and Saturday in Easter-week, August 15th; for hops, on September 19th; for cattle, horses, cheese, lambs, hops, and linen, on the first Monday in November; and toll-free fairs for cattle on the second Monday in February, and the first in May, June, July, and November. The market place, which was enclosed in 1804 at an expense of £5,050, is a spacious area opposite the town hall, containing excellent accommodation for the sale of butcher-meat, vegetables, poultry, &c. Here is likewise a commodious corn market, also a hop market, in which extensive sales are effected. The prinicipal manufactures are those of gloves and porcelain. Here are also extensive foundries and distilleries. The trade is greatly facilitated by the Severn, and the Worcester and Birmingham canal. Here was anciently an extensive manufacture of broad cloth, employing upwards of 8000 persons, this has long ago declined. The carpet manufacture, which flourished for a time, has been transferred to Kidderminster.

Ecclesiastical Affairs.—“Upon the division of the over-great bishopric of the whole kingdom of Mercia,” says Bishop Tanner, “an episcopal see, with a chapter of secular clerks, was placed here by King Ethelred and Archbishop Theodore, in the year of our Lord 680, in a church ded. to St Peter, which in the next century came to be more generally termed St Mary’s. Upon the pretended reformation of these ecclesiastical societies, by the expulsion of the seculars, in the time, and by the command of King Edgar, Bishop Oswald, before A. D. 964, founded a new cathedral in the old churchyard to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and placed therein a prior and monks. Soon after the Conquest, this convent, from the number of 12, increased to 50 religious of the Benedictine order, by the zeal and munificence of the good Bishop Wolstan, who built for them a new and larger monastery, A. D. 1068. Thus it continued till the general suppression, when its possessions amounted to £1,386 12s. 10d., according to Mr Speed, or £1,290 10s. 6d. clear, most of which were regranted by King Henry VIII., in the 33d year of his reign, towards the endowment of a dean, ten minor canons, ten prebendaries, ten lay clerks, ten choristers, forty king’s scholars, two schoolmasters, and the other members whereof his new foundation in this church consists. The temporalities and spiritualities of the bishopric were valued, 26th Henry VIII., at £1,106 17s. 8d. in the whole, and at £1,049 17s. 3d. clear after reprises, but they were since settled at £944 17s. 9d.” The deanery is in the patronage of the crown. The jurisdiction of the see extends over the county of Worcester, except 15 parishes and eight chapelries, nearly one third of Warwickshire, the parishes of Broms and Clent in Staffordshire, and that of Hales-Owen in Shropshire.

“The cathedral is a noble specimen of Gothic simplicity; the outside is extremely plain, and devoid of all laboured ornaments. Its beauty consists in its height, space, and the lightness of its architecture, which is greatly aided by the lofty pinnacles rising from every termination of the building. The cathedral was first erected by Ethelred, king of Mercia, in 680, when it was a convent of secular priests. It was burnt down and rebuilt before the conquest, and was again reduced to ashes in 1118. It was again burnt down in 1202, with all the adjacent offices of the monastery, and part of the city; but being again rebuilt, and King John buried there, it was, in the presence of Henry III., his son, and of many bishops, abbots, and nobles, solemnly consecrated in 1218. After this, a general repair took place, and a complete new front was given to it. The greatest part of the buildings, consisting of the hall, refectory, cloister, watergate, &c., were all built between 1320 and 1386, by Bishop Wakefield, who also lengthened the body of the church—the north aisle having previously been vaulted by Bishop Cobham—by adding two arches to the west end; he is recorded also to have built the north porch, an elegant specimen of the architecture of the times. From this period until the unhappy contest of Charles and the parliament, no particular alterations took place; but great dilapidations then took place, while the place was occupied by the parliamentary forces. These have been in a great measure repaired, particularly of late years, when great improvements have been made, not only in the exterior architecture, but in the interior regulations and arrangements. After all the damages which it has suffered, and notwithstanding the unavoidable varieties of architecture which have taken place, this memorable cathedral is now an object of great interest to the man of taste. Its form is that usual one of a double cross, displaying the grand features of the Gothic style, which consist in extent and strength, and to which we may add the solemnity of the high pointed arch, and the beauty of diminutive ornament. The proportions of the exterior are on a grand scale; it is in length 514 feet; in breadth 78; and in height 68; and the tower, which rises from the centre of the cross aisle to the altitude of 200 feet, is ornamented at the corners by four lofty pinnacles, and with elegant battlements of light open work. This tower has been reckoned heavy, particularly in the upper tier of ornamental windows. Much curious work may be seen on its various sides, as well as some ancient statues: these are, the Virgin with the infant Christ, St Walsten, St Oswald, and other religious worthies of the days of old. The whole of the interior is highly interesting, not only from the singularity as well as beauty of its architecture, but also from the numerous monuments erected to many eminent characters. On entering through the beautiful north porch, the great nave and side aisles present a most elegant admixture of the Anglo-Norman and Gothic orders; the two western arches added by Bishop Gifford being of the former, whilst the remaining seven are of the latter; and the visitor will be struck with the beauty of the ornamented capitals of the pillars that support them, being sculptured with the nicest flagee work, each differing from the other, though it is to be lamented that these have in some places been destroyed during the occupation of the edifice by the parliamentary army. The effect produced by the modern painted windows, contrasted with the pure white of the walls, is also very striking. In the interior are many elegant monuments of distinguished persons and families. Nothing can be imagined more august, and yet more simple, than the choir, in which the best effect is produced by its clustered pillars, the exquisite open worked mouldings of its pointed arches, and its general arrangement. The stalls in the choir, which are in the best state of repair, are of Irish oak, as old as 1397; the carvings are well done, and the turn up seats are, as usual in old cathedrals, ornamented on the reverse with ludicrous, satirical representations, emblematical of the mendicant orders of friars, between whom, and the lay inmates of the cloister, there was perpetual war. The effect of the east window over the altar is very fine; and the octagonal pulpit deserves attention; of this the front and sides are of stone, and the back of curious wooden oak, and the whole is curiously carved with emblems of the past and present dispensations, a representation of the New Jerusalem, the evangelic hieroglyphics, &c. The altar-piece is a simple screen, constructed of oak, but rather inappropriately ornamented with Corinthian pillars; the centre has a painting of the 'Descent from the Cross.' Opposite to the pulpit is the bishop's throne, which is a specimen of very antique workmanship, with the olive branch, as an emblem of peace, and some other symbols, such as the mitre, &c., designative of the episcopal functions. The organ, which stands over the western entrance, is possessed of a very fine tone, and is supposed to excel all others in the kingdom in the trumpet stop. The attention of the spectator, in passing up to the altar, is arrested by an altar-tomb in the centre, and near to the east end. This is the tomb of King John, the most ancient one that is existing, in England at least, of all the ancestors of the present royal family, since the time of the Conquest. His effigy lies on the tomb, crowned; on which was written, but now almost illegible, 'Johannes Rex Anglia.' In his right hand is a sceptre; in his left a sword, whose point is received in the mouth of a lion couchant at his feet. The figure is as large as life; and on each side, on a level with the pavement, are two sepulchral images of a smaller size, of the Bishops St Oswald and St Wolstan, between whom he had desired to be laid, in order to secure the absence of evil spirits. It was for many years supposed that the body was not interred here, but in the Lady's Chapel. In 1797, however, an investigation took place, when a stone coffin was found, containing the decayed bones of the royal corpse. On the south side of the altar is Prince Arthur's sepulchral chapel, a most curious piece of antique workmanship. This chapel is surrounded on all sides, except the east, with highly ornamented open work, in the fashion of the Gothic screens, and contains the tomb of Prince Arthur. It may now be justly reckoned as the most curious and elaborate part of the cathedral, particularly since it has been cleaned and repaired, and those ornaments exposed to view, which were formerly covered, and indeed completely hidden, by repeated coats of white-wash. The top terminates in an arched roof, with open-work battlements and pyramids; the inside of the roof is fretted very curiously with the prince's arms in the centre; and there are various coats of the royal arms at each end. In the centre is the tomb of white marble, with an inscription. The ornaments of the outside deserve particular notice; on the north are several statues of saints, and escutcheons sup-vorted by angels; the south side being of a greater altitude, has several pillars, with five ranges of images of virgins, bishops, kings, confessors, &c. There is also a representation of our Saviour crowned; and the arms of England, as then borne, with the quarterings of De Burgh for the earldom of Ulster, and of Mortimer, earl of March; the supporters being then a greyhound collared, and a lion gardant. Here are also many symbols of the contending parties. There are also several other handsome monuments. The cloisters where the monks formerly resided, and which are now inhabited by the dignitaries of the cathedral, are 125 feet by 120, and 16 feet in width. The vaulted roof is adorned with a variety of sculptures. In the north side, on the keystone of the centre arch, there is, in good preservation, a well wrought figure of the Virgin, with the infant Christ in her lap, but the heads of both are gone. It contains many curious manuscripts. The bishop's palace stands near the cathedral, in a most commanding situation, on the banks of the Severn, which flows at the bottom of the garden. It has been greatly altered by modern improvements, which are but indifferently suited to the antique character of the edifice. Originally it was surrounded with embattled walls, by Bishop Gifford; but its present modern front is the work of Bishop Stillingfleet. This eastern front is of plain white stone, without any extraneous ornaments; but the western side still retains much of the ancient style, very incongruously mixed with modern additions, so that it presents a disagreeable admixture of modern repairs, with the ancient Gothic. Yet upon the whole the structure is commodious, and the different parts of the ancient building, in the interior, have been arranged so as to unite comfort with elegance. The most modern renovation took place in 1788, when it was prepared for the reception of his present majesty, who, together with the queen and several branches of the family, made it their residence during their visit to this city."

The city comprises the parishes of St Alban, All Saints, St Andrew, St Clement, St Martin, St Nicholas, St Peter, and St Swithin. Of these, the parishes of St Clement, St Martin, and St Peter, extend beyond the limits of the city, and are partly within the lower division of the hundred of Oswaldslow. The living of St Alban is a discharged rectory, rated at £5, returned at £60 14s., and in the patronage of the bishop of Worcester. The church is a plain structure, requiring no particular notice. The living of All Saints is a discharged rectory, rated at £13 12s. 4½d., returned at £138, and in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. The living of St Andrew's is a discharged vicarage, rated at £10 5s. 10d., returned at £120, and in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Worcester. The church is an old building, but has been extensively altered and repaired within the present century. The tower and spire, which form one of the most striking objects in the city, rise to the height of 245 feet. The tower was cased with freestone in 1814, and the spire was the work of Nathaniel Wilkinson, a stone mason of this city. The living of St Clement's is a discharged rectory, rated at £5 5s., returned at £100, and in the patronage of the dean and chapter. The church—which was erected in 1822 at an expense of £6000—is in the Saxon or Norman style, containing 802 sittings, of which 407 are free, the incorporated society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having contributed £1000 towards defraying the expense. This building was erected instead of an ancient one which stood on the opposite side of the river, and was extremely inconvenient, from its being exposed to the inundations from the river. The living of St Helen's is a discharged rectory, rated at £11, returned at £103 11s., and in the patronage of the bishop. The living of St Martin's is a rectory, rated at £15 3s. 4d., and in patronage of the dean and chapter. The living of St Nicholas is a discharged rectory, rated at £16 10s. 7½d., returned at £127 9s. 5d., and in the patronage of the bishop. The church is an elegant structure, looking along the Foregate. The living of St Peter's is a vicarage, rated at £12 4s. 2d., returned at £131 6s. 5d., and in the patronage of the dean and chapter. The living of St Swithin's is a rectory, rated at £15 15s., and in the patronage of the dean and chapter. These livings are all in the archd. of Worcester. The Baptists, Society of Friends, Connexion of Lady Huntingdon, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics, have places of worship here.

Schools.—Connected with the cathedral is the royal grammar school, founded by Henry VIII. Ten boys are chosen by the dean and three by each of the prebendaries, who remain in the school for four years. They receive gratuitous instruction, and £2 6s. 8d. each for the purchase of a surplice and payment of a writing master. An examination in Latin must be gone through by all the scholars at a certain period of the course, when, if due progress have not been made, a fine of £10 must be paid to the head master of the school. Scholars of this establishment are entitled to compete for two exhibitions to Baliol college, Oxford, founded by Dr Bell, formerly bishop of Worcester. In 1561, Queen Elizabeth founded a free school for the classical education of 12 boys belonging to the city, with an annual sum of 13s. 4d. to the three senior scholars for the purchase of books. In 1665, the Rev. John Meek founded two scholarships in Magdalene college, Oxford, for boys from this school, and endowed them with estates yielding £100 per annum. This school stands third in claim to six scholarships, leading to an equal number of fellowships, in Worcester college, Oxford, founded, with the college, by Sir Thomas Cookes, Bart. In 1642, Mr Joseph Worfield bequeathed to the corporation certain property, now yielding about £240 per annum, to be applied to the maintenance and education of fourteen poor boys belonging to the city, or to the parishes of Powick, Leigh, Wick, and Bransford, in the county of Worcester, and for the subsequent support of a certain number of them at either of the universities; at present, seven scholars are sent to the university, and with a stipend of £80 each per annum. Six boys are educated, clothed, and maintained, in the Trinity free school, founded and endowed in 1558 by Mr Thomas Wilde. The endowment now yields £800 per annum, part of which is expended on the support of the Trinity almshouses. Here are various Sunday schools, and a British and Foreign school supported by subscription. In 1713, Bishop Lloyd founded a school for the gratuitous instruction of sixteen boys and eight girls, and endowed it with an estate which now yields an annual income of about £80. A free house for the master and mistress, with a new school-room, were bought by subscription in 1782.

Charities.—Here is the infirmary for the city and county. It was founded in 1770, at an expense of £6,085 9s. 9d., and is liberally supported by subscriptions. Here are also a dispensary, lying-in-institution, and female penitentiary, supported in a similar manner. In 1792, a house of industry was erected at an expense of £7,318, the ground costing an additional sum of £2,273. The mayor is governor ex officio, assisted by twelve directors. The building is handsome and well laid out, and is intended for the accommodation of all the parishes except St Peter's. Here are numerous bequests for charitable purposes, such as for distribution among the poor, apprenticing poor children, and assisting tradesmen when in difficulties. Here is St Oswald's hospital, an establishment of high antiquity, but which was spoiled of its possessions at the dissolution, and given to the dean and chapter. By the exertions of Dr John Fell, bishop of Oxford, and master of the hospital, the property was partly recovered, and a charter was obtained from Charles II., authorizing the re-establishment of the hospital for ten men. An endowment of £50 was added in 1681 by Thomas Haynes, Esq., for six additional inmates, for whose accommodation he extended the buildings. Sixteen aged men and twelve women are now supported here, the revenue having risen to £350 per annum. The almshouses, called Trinity, contain 29 apartments for the accommodation of aged inhabitants of the city, each of the inmates receiving 6s. per month and half a ton of coal annually. In 1619, Mr Ingleshorpe founded almshouses for six aged men and a nurse, with an endowment of £53 per annum; there are now nine inmates. Seventeen alms-people are now supported on £360 per annum, founded by John Nash, alderman of the city in the beginning of last century, each of whom receives an annual allowance of fuel and clothing, with 6s. per week. In 1725, six almshouses for aged freemen were founded under the will of Mr Michael Wyatt, and endowed with £40 per annum. In 1692, Robert Berkeley, Esq. of Spitchley in Worcestershire, founded an hospital for twelve aged men and one woman, and endowed it with £6,000. Each of the inmates receive £10 per annum, and £20 are paid to a chaplain. Four aged women reside in Geary's almshouses, which are endowed with £80 per annum; each inmate receives 2s. 6d. per week. Six aged women reside in the hospital, founded in 1702 by Mr

Thomas Shewringe, and endowed with property now producing £150 per annum. The inmates must belong to the parishes of St Sewithin, St Helen, All Saints, St Andrew, St Clement, and the tithing of Whistons, and each receives an allowance of 6s. weekly. In 1772, Mr William Jarvis established a fund for the support of three aged freemen and one widow belonging to St Andrew's parish; the annual income is now £120, from which each pensioner has 5s. weekly, with a free residence; a portion of the endowment is appropriated to the apprenticing of boys. In 1567, eight almshouses were built for poor persons of St Andrew's parish, by Mr John Walgrove, whose son and grandson conferred on them a small endowment; the buildings have lately been rebuilt. "An ancient hospital was built here on the south-east part of the city, to the honour of St Wulstan, sometime bishop there, for the maintenance of two chaplains, five poor men, two poor women, &c. It was in the patronage of the bishop of Worcester, was valued, 26th Henry VIII., at £79 12s. 6d. in gross, and £63 18s. 10d. clear, and granted, 39d Henry VIII., to Sir Richard Morysine, who exchanging it again with that king, it became part of the endowment of the cathedral church in Oxford. Here were also houses of Black and Gray friars, friars de penitencia, and Trinitarian friars."—Tanner's Not. Mon. At the time of the Conquest there existed here a convent of White Benedictine nuns. At the dissolution its revenues amounted to £53 13s. 7d. The duke of Beaufort takes the title of marquess from this city. Among the eminent natives were Edward Kelly the astrologer; John, Lord Somers; and Thomas White the sculptor. Drs Latimer, Prideaux, Stillingfleet, and Hurd, held the see at different times. WORDWELL, a parish in the hundred of Blackbourne, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged rector, rated at £7 7s. 3d., returned at £129 4s. 3d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of R. B. de Beauvoir, Esq. WORFIELD, a parish in the Hales-Owen division of the hundred of Brimstree, co. of Salop. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £16 15s., and, in 1829, in the patronage of W. Y. Davenport, Esq. Church ded. to St Peter. Thirteen poor children receive instruction gratuitously in the school here, on an endowment of £46 per annum, arising from lands bequeathed for the purpose in 1613, by William Lloyd and Thomas Parker. Distance from Bridgenorth, 3½ m. N.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 1354; in 1831, 1676. A. P., £1,568.

WORGUT, a tithing and hamlet in the parish of East Stoke, hundred of Hundredsharrow, Blandford division of the co. of Dorset. Distance from Wareham, 1 m. W. Pop. with the parish.

WORKINGTON, a parish in the ward of Allerdale-above-Darwent, co. of Cumberland.

It contains the market town and seaport of Workington, the chapelry of Great Clifton, and the townships of Little Clifton, Stainburn, and Winscales. The town is situated near the sea, on the south bank of the river Derwent, from which it receives a good supply of water. The older part of the town consists of narrow and irregular streets, but a few of more respectable appearance have lately been formed. The streets are not lighted, and the paving is very inconvenient, being formed of small pebbles. Here are assembly and news rooms, and a small theatre. Races are annually held in the vicinity. On the south side of the river stands Working-ton-hall, the ancient seat of the Curwen family. It occupies an elevated site, commanding extensive views of the adjoining country and of Scotland. In this house Queen Mary resided for some time after her flight from Langside, and the chamber which she occupied is still called 'the Queen's chamber.' The river is crossed here by a handsome stone bridge of three arches, erected in 1768 at the expense of the county. Salmon is taken in the river and along the coast, but the fishery is not nearly so productive as it was anciently. In the vicinity are extensive coal mines, and the chief portion of the trade consists in the exportation of their produce to Ireland and other places. In 1828, 126 vessels belonged to the port, having on the whole a tonnage of about 20,000 tons. The quays and harbour have recently been considerably improved, and a breakwater has been erected for the defence of the latter. Here are ship builders in extensive employment, and manufactures of various kinds in connexion with shipping. About 500 persons are employed in the coal mines, and about 400 in the manufacture of imitation Leghorn hats. Wednesday and Saturday are market days, the former chiefly for corn, at which extensive dealings are effected. Fairs were formerly held on 18th May and 18th October, but they have nearly fallen into disuse. The petty sessions for the ward are held here every Wednesday by the magistrates of the county, and manorial courts are occasionally held. On an eminence near the sea, at a short distance from the town, are the remains of an ancient dilapidated building, commonly called the Old chapel; this commands an extensive view of the Solway Frith and of the coast of Scotland, and is supposed to have been used as a watch tower to guard against the incursions of the Scots.

Living. a rectory in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, rated at £23 5s., and, in 1829, in the patronage of J. P. Curwen, Esq. The church is a handsome building; in the later style of English architecture, with a square tower. It is situated at the west end of the town, and was rebuilt in 1770; ded. to St Michael. Subordinate to the rectory is the perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the rector. The chapel, which is ded. to St John, was erected in 1822, at an expense of upwards of £10,000, by his majesty's commissioners for building churches. Of 1490 sittings which it contains, 990 are free. The style of the building is the Tuscan order of Grecian architecture, with a cupola and portico. The Independents, Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, Roman Catholics, and Presbyterians, have places of worship here. Here is a dispensary, under the charge of the medical gentlemen of the town, and supported by subscription. In 1664, a free grammar school was founded by Sir P. Curwen, to which an endowment was given in 1672 by Mr Thomas Curwen, but this school has ceased to exist, it having been discovered that Mr Curwen had no right to burden his property with the endowment. In 1808, Mr Curwen founded a school house, in which 200 boys and 60 girls receive instruction at a low rate of payment. A school of industry for girls was established in 1816. Distance from Carlisle, 34 m. S.W. by W.; from London, 310 m. N.W. by N. Pop., of the market town, in 1801, 5716; in 1831, 6415. A. P., £18,946. Pop., of whole parish, in 1831, 7196.

WORKSALL, or WORSALL (HIGH), a township and chapelry in the parish and wapentake of Northallerton, N. R. of the co. of York. Living, a perpetual curacy, rated at £1 6s. 8d., in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean and chapter of Durham, and in the patronage of the vicar of Northallerton. Distance from Yarm, 4 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 108; in 1831, 133. A. P., £1,568.

WORKSALL, or WORSALL (LOW), a township in the parish of Kirkleavington, western division of the liberty of Langbaugh, N. R. of the co. of York. Distance from Yarm, 3 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 163; in 1831, 164. A. P., £1,917.

WORKSOP, a parish in the Hatfield division of the wapentake of Bassetlaw, co. of Nottingham. It contains the market town of Worksop, and the hamlets of Gateford, Kilton, Osberton, Radford, Ratchliffe, Ryton, Scofton, Shire-Oaks, and Slowsicks. In Domesday book, this place is mentioned under the name of Wirchesope, and in other ancient records by those of Wyrkscoppe and Wirkensope. Prior to the Conquest it belonged to Elsi, a Saxon noble, but it was given by William I. to Roger de Busli. In the reign of Henry I. it was in possession of William de Lovetot, who founded a priory for canons regular of the order of St Augustine. This establishment rose into importance, and the prior sat in parliament in the reign of Henry III. At the dissolution, its revenues were valued at £239, and were granted by Henry VIII. to the family of Talbot, earls of Shrewsbury, into whose possession the manor had come through the families of Furnival and Neville. It afterwards passed by marriage into the hands of the earls of Arundel, afterwards dukes of Norfolk. That family still possesses the manor, and has a noble seat here, situated in a magnificent park eight miles in circumference. The manor is held by the dukes as tenants-in-chief of the crown, by the service of a knight's fee, supplying a glove for the right hand of the king at his coronation, and by supporting the same hand in holding the sceptre. The mansion house was originally built by the first earl of Shrewsbury, and was for some time the residence of Mary Queen of Scots. The original building was burnt to the ground in 1761, and the present superb structure was since erected on the same site by the duke of Norfolk. In December, 1460, the forces of the dukes of York and Somerset met here, when a sanguinary conflict took place, in which the former was victorious.

The situation of the town is agreeable, being in a valley at the northern extremity of Sherwood Forest, near the source of the river Ryton. The principal street is of considerable length, and is crossed by another of smaller dimensions, both being paved and lighted, and consisting of good houses. The supply of water is abundant, and of good quality. The principal trade is in malt, which is made from barley grown in the adjoining country, and is chiefly sent to Manchester by the Chesterfield canal, which passes the town on the north. The vicinity is covered with wood, and, in general, picturesque, and there are several handsome seats belonging to the nobility in the neighbourhood. Among these are Workop manor, the residence of the duke of Norfolk; Clumber, that of the duke of Newcastle; Welbeck abbey, that of the duke of Portland; and Thoresby, that of Earl Manservants. The Chesterfield canal is here carried across the river Ryton by a handsome aqueduct. It is intended to erect in the town a handsome building, containing a town-hall, assembly-room, prison, &c. The lord of the manor holds an annual court leet here, at which constables are appointed for the regulation of the internal affairs of the town. Wednesday is market-day; and fairs for cattle, sheep, horses, &c., are held on March 31st, June 21st, and October 14th. About three weeks after the last is held a statute fair.

Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, rated at £12 4s. 2d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of the duke of Norfolk. The church—which forms the western part of the church of the ancient priory—is ded. to St Cuthbert and St Mary. It is 135 feet in length, and is one of the most perfect specimens of the Anglo-Norman style in England. It has two beautiful towers, one of which was formerly the great central tower of the pile, but is now at the east end of the church. It contains a curious Norman pulpit, and some ancient monuments of the families of Lovetot and Fumival. The entrance to the churchyard was originally the principal gateway of the priory. It is a beautiful specimen of the later English style of architecture, adorned with canopied niches and ecclesiastical figures. The interior is used as a school-room. Near the entrance are the beautiful, though much dilapidated remains of the chapel of St Mary, and on the north side of the church are further traces of the conventual buildings. The Independents, Roman Catholics, and Wesleyan Methodists, have places of worship here. Here is a school on the national system, in which upwards of 200 children receive education, and are partly clothed. Some ancient British tumuli exist here, and an ancient church is supposed to have stood at Osberton. Here are ruins of a castle of the Lovetot family, and of the ancient manor house of Gateford. Distance from Nottingham, 26 m. N., and from London, 146 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 3263; in 1831, 5566. A. P., £16,092.

Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, in the archd. and dio. of York, endowed with £2,400, and in patronage of five trustees. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. The inhabitants are extensively employed in the manufacture of woollen cloth, and of coarse earthen ware and tobacco pipes from clay found in the neighbourhood. Here is a school, in which poor children of the chapelry receive gratuitous education on an endowment of £40 per annum, founded in 1677 by Langdale Sutherland. To this endowment William Farren added a rood of land, in the 39th year of Charles II. The property of the charity now consists of a school-house and school-room, with a garden, two small crofts, and a close, all in the occupation of the school-master, and worth together, £16 per annum; and six cottages in Wortley, whereof five are let to the overseer of the poor at the annual rent of £10 10s., and the sixth is let for £2 8s. per annum. The cottages are let at the fair annual value. The rents of the cottages and crofts not occupied by the master are paid to him by the trustees, and he instructs ten poor children as free scholars, and other children on moderate terms, in reading, writing, and accounts. The master and free scholars are nominated by the trustees. Distance from Leeds, $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 1995; in 1831, 5944. A. P., £3,784.

WOTTON-UNDER-EDGE, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of Berkeley, co. of Gloucester. It contains the market-town of the same name, and the tythings of Huntingford, Sinwell with Bradley, Symond's-hall with Combe, and Wortley. The name is corrupted from Wotton-under-Ridge, expressive of its situation under a range of well-wooded hills. The town does not at present occupy the same site as the original one, which was burned in the reign of John, and the site of which is called the 'Brands.' It stands on a rising ground, and consists of two streets, running parallel to one another, and containing some very neat houses. The petty sessions for the division are held here. The inhabitants are extensively employed in the manufacture of woollen cloth. Friday is market-day; and a fair for cheese and cattle is held on September 25th. The internal affairs of the town are regulated by a mayor, who is chosen annually in October, but in other respects it is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the county. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £18 10s., returned at £130, and in the patronage of the dean and canons of Christchurch, Oxford. The church—which is a handsome structure—ded. to St Mary, contains some curious monuments. The Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists, have places of worship here. Here is a general hospital for the reception of the aged and infirm poor; also one for 12 persons of both sexes, founded by Hugh Perry, Esq., alderman of London, in 1630; and one for six poor persons, founded in 1712, by Thomas Dawes. There is likewise a fund for the benefit of the poor, and for the education and apprenticing of poor children, arising from £1000, given for the purpose, by Sir Jonathan Dawes, sheriff of London. Here is a free grammar school, founded under letters patent from Richard II., in 1385, by Lady Catherine Berkeley. The funds having, from some cause, become forfeited in the reign of Edward I., the benefit of the foundation was lost, and continued so, till restored by James I., on the petition of the inhabitants. It was then incorporated, under the title of "the Free Grammar School of Lord Berkeley," the corporate body consisting of the master and five or more poor scholars, the appointment of whom was vested in his lordship and heirs, or failing of them, in the lord of the manor. The revenue now amounts to £376 12s. 6d., and there are 10 boys on the foundation, each of whom receives £6 per annum, for the purchase of books and other necessaries. Connected with the general hospital is a school for boys, called the Blue-coat school. There are at present on the foundation about 30 boys, who receive clothing and education, and are afterwards apprenticed, and 10 boys who receive only gratuitous instruction. The funds amount to £136 13s. per annum, of which £60 are contributed from the funds of the general hospital. The school-house was erected in 1714, the expense being defrayed, partly by subscription, and partly by bequest from Hugh Perry. At Westridge, in this parish, are the remains of an ancient encampment. Distance from London, 108 m. W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 1587; in 1831, 5482. A. P., £10,114.

WRAGBY, a market-town and parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of Wraghoe, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. This is a place of considerable antiquity, but was an insignificant village till 1671, when it was made a market-town and received a grant of three annual fairs, through the interest of George, duke of Buckingham. It is a neat village and stands in the middle of a very fertile district on the high road from Lincoln to Horncastle. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture. Thursday is market-day, and fairs for sheep and cattle are held on Holy Thursday and September 29th. The town is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the county, and within that of a court of requests for the wapentake, for the recovery of debts under 40s. The church is an ancient Gothic structure, ded. to All Saints, and contains some curious old monuments. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. The poor children of the parish receive gratuitous instruction on an endowment of £80 per annum, founded in 1692 by William Hansard. The living of the parish is a vicarage, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £8 4s. 2d., and in patronage of Edmund Turnor, Esq. Here is an almshouse, built and endowed by Sir E. Turnor, in 1697, for twelve poor people, six to be clergymen's widows, and other six to be poor widows or widowers; adjoining to which he also erected a chapel with an augmentation of £40 per annum to the vicarage, for prayers to be read in it twice a-day. The endowment consists of a rent charge of £100. Distance from London, 139½ m. N. by W. Pop., in 1601, 410; in 1831, 601. A. P., £2,583.

WRAGBY, a parish comprising the townships of West Hardwick, Haale, Hill-top, and Hurstwick-with-Nostal, in the wapentake of Osgoldcross, and those of Ryhill and Winterset, in the hundred of Staincross, W. R., co. of York. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, and a donative in the patronage of C. Winn, Esq. Church ded. to St Michael. Here is a free school, which receives an annuity of £6 5s. from the revenue of the duchy of Lancaster. In this chapelry is Nostal priory, the seat of Charles Winn, Esq. In the reign of Henry I., Ralph Adlave, that king's chaplain, founded here a priory for canons regular of the order of St Augustine, A.D. 1121; the situation was very woody and had previously been chosen by a few hermits, where they had built themselves a little hall, and an oratory or church, ded. to St James. The priory, founded by Adlave, was ded. to St Oswald, the king and martyr, to which were granted many privileges. Robert de Lacy granted the monks the wood in which it was built, with two oxgangs of land in Hardwicke, for which reason the Lacy family looked upon themselves, and were always deemed as its founders. At the suppression its revenues were valued at £492 18s. 2d.; the site was given, 31st Henry VIII., to Thomas Leigh, LL.D., one of the visitors of religious houses; it afterwards became the property of Sir Richard Gargrave, Knt., who sold it to Mr Ireland. By him it was sold to George Whnn, Esq., who was created a baronet by Charles II. The present house was built by Sir Rowland Whnn, Bart., in the beginning of last century, near the site of the old priory. It stands on an eminence in the midst of a fertile and well-cultivated tract of country. The east front is of very great length extended by two wings of irregular form; the centre has a pediment supported by six Ionic pilasters, and containing in the tympanum the arms of the family. The interior contains some fine apartments, and amongst the paintings is one of Sir Thomas More and his family, by the celebrated Hans Holbein. Distance from Pontefract, 5 m. S.W. Pop., in 1831, 786. Other returns with the townships.

WRENTHORPE, a township in the parish of Wakefield, lower division of the wapentake of Agbrigg, W. R. co. of York. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of woollen cloth. Pop. with Stanley.

WRESSEL, a parish in the Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, E. R. co. of York. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of the E. R. and dio. of York, rated at £5 13s. 9d., returned at £90 7s. 1d., and in the patronage of the earl of Egremont. Church ded. to St John of Beverley. In this parish are the townships of Newsham with Brind and Wressel with Loftsome. On a considerable eminence are the ruins of the ancient baronial residence of the earls of Northumberland. In Leland's Itinerary is the following account of Wressel castle.—“From Houneden to Wreschill, [are] 3 miles; al by low medow and pasture ground, whereof part is enclosed with heggea. Yet is the ground that the castelle of Wreschill standith on, sumwhat hygh yn the respect of the very lough ground thereabout. Most part of the basse courte of the castelle of Wreschill is all of tymbre. The castelle itself is moted aboute in three partes. The fourth parte is dry where the entre is ynto the castelle. The castelle is al of very fair and greates squarid stone, both withyn and withowte; whereof (as sum hold opinion) much was brought owt of France. In the castelle be only fyve towers, one at each corner almost of like biggeness. The gate house is the fifth, having fyve loughinges yn high. Three of the other towers have four highes in loughinges: The fourth containeth the botery, pantery, pastery, lardery, and kechyn. The haule and the great chaumbers be fair; and so is the chapelle and the closettes. To conclude, the house is one of the most propre beyond Trente, and semith as newly made; yet was it made by a younger brother of the Percys, erle of Wiccester, that was yn high favor with Richard the secunde, ande bought the manor of Wreschill, mountting at that tyme little above 30 li. by the yere; and for lak of heires of hym, and by favor of the kiug, it cam to the erles of Northumbreland. The basse courte is of a newer building. And the last erle of Northumbreland saving one made the brew-house of the stone without the castelle waulle, but hard joyning to the kechyn of it. One thing I likid exceedingly yn one of the towers, that was a study, caullid Paradice: wher was a closet in the middle, of eight square latisid aboute, and at the toppe of every square was a desk ledgid to set bookes on cosers withyn them, and these semid as yotnid hard to the toppe of the closet; and yet by pulling, one or al wold cum downe briste highte in rabbitte, and serve for desks to lay bokes on. The garde-robe yn the castelle was exceedingly fair. And so wer the gardeins withyn the mote, and the orchardes without. And yn the orchardes were mountes Opere topiario, writthen about with degrees like turninges of cockel-shilles, a cum to the top without payn. The ryver of Darwent rinneth almost hard by the castelle; and about a mile lower goith ynto Owse. The ryver at greates raynes ragith and oversowth much of the ground there aboute, beyng low medowes. There is a parke hard by the castelle.” Three of the apartments in this castle were adorned with poetical inscriptions, which were perhaps written by Henry Algernon Percy, fifth earl of Northumberland, a great lover of learning and learned men. “1. ‘The Proverbis in the syde of the innere chamber of Wressil.’ This is a poem of 24 stanzas, each containing seven lines, beginning thus,

Beware of waste and spende by measur;
Who that outrageously makithe his dispens,
Causythe his goodes not long to endur,’ &c.

2. ‘The Counsell of Aristotill, whiche he gayte to Alexander, kyng of Massydotry; whiche ar wrytyn in the syde of the utter chamber above the house in the gadyngte at Wresyll.’—This is in distichs of 38 lines, beginning thus,

‘Fynyahe moderatly and discretly correcte,
As well to mercy, as to justice havynge a respecte,’ &c.

3. ‘The Proverbis in the syde of the utter chamber above of the hous in the gadyngte at Wresyll.’ A poem of 30 stanzas, chiefly of four lines, &c.

‘Remorde thyn eynwardly, Fix not thy mynde on Fortune, that delythe thy-verely,’ &c.

Wressil castle continued in all its splendor till the fatal civil war broke out in 1641: It was then garrisoned with soldiers for the parliament; and notwithstanding the earl of Northumberland had espoused their cause, the damage he sustained there by his own party before Michaelmas 1646, was judged to amount to £1,000, in the destruction of his buildings, leads, out-houses, &c. by the garrison; their havoc of his woods, inclosures, &c. without including the losses he had sustained in the non-payments of his rents, in consequence of the contributions levied on his tenants. On the decline of the king's party, it appears that the northern counties enjoyed some respite; but in 1648 some attempts being made, or expected from the royalists, fresh troops were sent into the north: and in May that year, Major-general Lambert ordered a small detachment of 60 men to garrison Wressel castle, of which Major Charles Fenwick had all along continued governor for the parliament, with the entire approbation of the earl of Northumberland. About the beginning of June 1648, Pomfret castle was seized for the king, and underwent a siege of ten months; to prevent any more surprises of this kind, a resolution was taken for demolishing all the castles in that part of England; and while the earl of Northumberland was exerting all his influence in London to save this noble seat of his ancestors, a committee at York sent a sudden and unexpected order to dismantle it, which was executed with such precipitation and fury, that before the earl could receive notice of the design the mischief was done. In consequence of this order, three sides of the square which formerly composed Wressel castle were entirely demolished. However, the whole south front, which was the most considerable, and contained some of the principal state rooms, still remains, and is very magnificent. It is flanked by two large square towers, and these again are mounted by circular turrets of a smaller size; on the top of one of the turrets is still preserved the iron pan of the beacon, anciently used to alarm the country. The whole building, which is of the finest masonry, still contains the great chamber or dining room, the drawing chamber, and the chapel, besides many of the inferior apartments. This part of the building was occupied as a farm house till 1796, when it was accidentally burnt to the ground, leaving little more than the shell of this once princely mansion. There are still some little remains of sculpture, of the family badges, crests, &c. In the two principal chambers are small staircases with octagonal screens." Distance from Howden, 3½ m. N. Pop., of parish, in 1831, 386; of Wressel with Loftsome, in 1801, 191; in 1831, 183. A. P., of whole parish, £3,592.

WREXHAM, a parish in the hundred of Bromfield, co. of Denbigh, North Wales. It contains the market-town of the same name, which consists of several streets, containing some handsome houses. It is a place of considerable importance, and is greatly benefited by its situation as a thoroughfare between Liverpool and Chester and North Wales. The inhabitants are partly employed in the flannel trade, also in paper-making, and carry on a considerable traffic in coal, iron, lead, &c., which are drawn from the earth in the vicinity. Here are reading and news-rooms, libraries, and a handsome town-hall. Monday and Thursday are market-days; and fairs are held on March 23d, Holy Thursday, June 6th, and September 19th. The living is a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of St Asaph's, rated at £19 9s. 9½d., and in the patronage of the bishop of St Asaph's. "The church is an elegant structure, equal in point of beauty to some of the cathedrals in England; it was collegiate before the reign of Henry VII., when the present edifice was erected on the site of the old one, which was destroyed by fire. This beautiful edifice, which is 178 feet long and 72 broad, and has a tower 185 feet high, consists of a chancel, pentagonal in shape, nave, two collateral aisles, and a lofty quadrangular tower at the west end. The windows of the aisles have a flat pointed arch, and the mullions are ornamented at top with tracery; between which are buttresses, terminating in slender crocketed pinnacles. The windows of the clerestory are narrower than those of the aisles; the arches rather approximating to the sharp pointed style, and the embattled parapet has diminishing crocketed pinnacles, corresponding with those of the aisles. The tower, elevated 135 feet, is a chef d'œuvre of architectural display. The shape is quadrangular, with handsome set-off abutments, terminating in crocketed pinnacles, and the summit is crowned by four pierced lantern turrets that rise 24 feet in height above the open-work ballustrade, to each of which is attached a circular stair-case. The three exposed sides are decorated with various embellishments. Statues of 30 saints, full in dimensions, placed in the niches of the buttresses, while they enrich the building, display the advanced progress statuary had made at the close of the 15th century. The interior is spacious, and the side aisles, separated from the nave by handsome conglomerate columns, surmounted by arches of moderate point. Over the capitals are several pieces of grotesque carving, reliques of the ancient church; the subjects ridiculously representative of vices too conspicuous in those ages of darkness, which were practised among the monastic clergy and the conventual religieuse.

The ceiling of the roof is peculiarly handsome, being composed of ribs in wainscot oak, imitative of the grained work in stone, of the antecedent period. The corbels, supporting the bearing timbers, are carved; and grotesque beads, with various shields, exhibit the arms of some few among the number of those who, by their advice or pecuniary aid, promoted the erection of the edifice. At the west end of the nave is a grand receding pointed arch, nearly the height of the building, filled by a window once ornamented with elegantly painted glass, which is now so mutilated, as nearly to mar all attempts to ascertain the subject. They have attempted to compensate the loss by a few diminutive figures that decorate the upper compartments of the windows in the aisles. The altar-piece is peculiarly beautiful, and is ornamented with a fine painting of the Lord's Supper, which is supposed to be by Rubens. There is also another picture by the same master, representing King David playing on the harp, to divert the melancholy of Saul, hung up in a massive frame against the wall of the south aisle. The inside of the church is ornamented with a number of monuments, some of them exceedingly handsome. There are also several good monuments in the church-yard, a few of which with curious inscriptions. In 1647, this church was made a prison by Cromwell, when his soldiers destroyed the organ." Here are some endowed schools for the benefit of poor children. Distance from London, 179 m. N.W. The parish extends into Flintshire. The entire pop., in 1831, was 11,515: that of Wrexham-Abbot, in 1801, was 1464; in 1831, 2043: of Wrexham-Regis, in 1801, 2575; in 1831, 3441. A. P., of the whole, £11,274. In the parsonage house is preserved a fine portrait of this celebrated man, by Sir Antonio More, given by Dr Zouch, when rector of this parish, to his successors, the rectors of Wycliffe, who are requested to preserve it as an heirloom to the rectory house. Distance from Greta-Bridge, $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 138; in 1831, 156. A. P., £2,480.

WYCOMB, a hamlet in the parish of Bothwell, co. of Leicester. Distance from Melton-Mowbray, $4\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.N.E. Pop., &c. returned with the chapelry of Chadwell.

WYCOMBE (HIGH, or CHIPPING), a parish, borough, and market town, locally within the hundred of Desborough, co. of Buckingham, but having separate jurisdiction. This place is undoubtedly of great antiquity, and is indeed supposed by some to have been built by the Romans; in corroboration of this, it may be mentioned, that numerous coins and other antiquities have been found here, as also a tessellated pavement, nine feet square, in 1774. The word 'cheaping,' is the Saxon term for a market, which proves it to have been occupied by that people, and the remains called Desborough castle are generally supposed to have been of Saxon origin, and to have been intended to keep off the invasions of the Danes. Prince Rupert made a successful attack on the parliamentary forces quartered here shortly after the battle of Reading.

The town is situated on the road from London to Oxford, and consists principally of one street, with some smaller ones branching off at right angles. The houses are in general well built. A rivulet, called Wycombe stream, flows through the town, and afterwards falls into the Thames a little below Marlow. The adjoining country is rich and fertile, agreeably diversified with hills covered with wood. Many of the inhabitants are engaged in the manufacture of paper, which is carried on here to a great extent, 12 mills being kept in active operation. On Wycombe stream are also six mills for the grinding of corn. Lace is also manufactured to a considerable extent, as also some articles of wood, such as chairs. The town enjoys great advantages from its situation, being on the high road to Bath, Bristol, &c. Friday is market day, principally for corn. A fair is held on the Monday before Michaelmas day.

The first regular charter of incorporation was granted to this town by Henry VI., although it appears to have been governed by a mayor so far back as the reign of Edward III. The charter of Henry received various modifications and extensions in the reigns of Elizabeth, James I., and Charles II., and as it now stands, the government of the town is vested in a mayor, recorder, two bailiffs, 12 aldermen, and an unlimited number of burgesses, with a town-clerk, and other inferior officers. By its charter, the corporation is empowered to hold assizes for all offences not capital, which it frequently does, and also to hold a court of record for the recovery of all debts not exceeding £40, but this last privilege has not been used for the last 50 years. The town hall was erected in 1757 by the earl of Shelburne. It is a commodious building of brick, and is used for the meetings of the corporation and for the holding of the assizes. The borough prison is capable of containing 12 prisoners, and is divided into four wards, for the purpose of separating the prisoners according to the different degrees of crime. The borough first returned members to the parliament held in the 28th year of King Edward I., since which time it has always returned two members. Before the passing of the reform act the election was vested in the mayor, bailiffs, and all burgesses not in receipt of alms, in number 104. The electors are now upwards of 850, and the mayor and bailiffs are returning officers.

Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £23 7s. 1d., returned at £80, and, in 1829, in patronage of the marquess of Lansdowne. The church is ded. to All Saints, and is an ancient structure, in the early style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower, which has been recently crowned with pinnacles. The interior is handsome, and consists of a nave, aisle, and chancel, between which last and the rest of the building is a richly ornamented oak screen. The church contains several monuments to the memory of Henry Petty, earl of Shelburne. The Independent Methodists have two places of worship, and the Baptists and Society of Friends one each. "An hospital for lepers, founded before 13th Henry III., and dedicated to St Margaret and St Giles. Here was also an hospital for a master, brethren, and sisters, ded. to St John the Baptist, founded before 20th Henry III. It was in the patronage of the mayor and burgesses of the town, A. D. 1344. And though after the dissolution Queen Mary granted it to Sir Robert Throgmorton, Queen Elizabeth granted it in the 4th year of her reign to the mayor, aldermen, and bailiffs, for four poor persons, &c. One of the hospitals at Wycombe was valued, 26th Henry VIII., at £8 6s. 10d. per annum in the whole, and £7 15s. 3d. clear, but was not for Black monks, as Speed hath it."—Tanner's Not. Mon. The revenues of this hospital having been increased in 1790 by a bequest of £1,000, and now producing £180 per annum, are now partly appropriated to the support of eight almshouses, and partly to the support of a school. The master receives a free house and garden, with a salary of £60 per annum. Here is a Lancasterian school for girls, and there are several charitable institutions for the relief of the poor. A branch of the Royal Military College of Sandhurst existed here for some time previous to 1802. Doctor Gamble, author of a life of General Monk, was sometime vicar of this parish. William Alley, one of the translators of the Bible, and Charles Butler, author of a treatise on rhetoric, were born here. Wycombe gives the inferior titles of earl and baron to the marquess of Lansdowne. Distance from London, 29 m. W. by N.; from Buckingham, 31 m. S.S.E. Pop., of the borough, in 1801, 1899; in 1831, 3101: of the rest of the parish, sometimes called High Wycombe, in 1801, 2349; in 1831, 3198. Total A. P., £8,553.

WYCOMBE (WEST), a parish in the hundred of Desborough, co. of Buckingham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £11 9s. 7d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of Sir J. Dashwood King, Bart. The church—which is ded. to St Lawrence—was erected in 1763, by Lord le Despenser; it is a handsome building, in the Grecian style, and adjoining to it, amongst other monuments, is a superb mausoleum to the memory of Sarah, Baroness le Despenser. Here is an urn, containing the ashes of Paul Whitehead the poet, which he bequeathed to Lord le Despenser. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. Here is a school, endowed with £7 per annum, by Catherine Pye, in 1713, at which a few poor children receive free education. Lace and chairs are made here to a considerable extent, many of the inhabitants being employed in the manufacture. In the neighbourhood are the ruins of Desborough-castle, which gives name to the hundred. Under the hill on which it stands, is a cave, the use of which is uncertain. Distance from High Wycombe, 2½ m. N.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 1330; in 1831, 1901. A. P., £4,898.

WYDDIALI, a parish in the hundred of Edwinstree, co. of Hertford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, rated at £16, and, in 1829, in patronage of John Heaton, Esq. The church is ded. to St Giles, and has a western embattled tower, with several monuments in the interior. On the north side of the chancel is a chapel, containing some finely painted glass. Distance from Buntingford, 1½ m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 181; in 1831, 243. A. P., £1,761.

WYE, a parish, formerly a market-town, in the hundred of Wye, lathe of Scray, co. of Kent. It lies on the river Stour, which is here crossed by a bridge of five arches. It consists of two streets, running parallel, and two acres. The houses are, in general, well built. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, rated at £55 10s. 3d., returned at £120, and, in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Winchelsea. Church ded. to St Martin and St Gregory. It was formerly a beautiful cruciform edifice, till 1572, when the spire was struck with lightning; and having been rebuilt in an unsufficient manner, fell in 1685, and destroyed a great part of the church, which was not rebuilt till 16 years after, and then on a much smaller scale. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. The market has been long given up, and fairs are held on the 29th of May and 11th October. Here is a free school, which was originally founded by Charles I., who granted the rectories of Boughton-Aluph, Benset, and Newington, with other premises, to Robert Maxwell and his heirs, on the condition of their supplying education to the poor children belonging to the parish. The master receives an annual sum of £16, but no children at present attend the school. Belonging to this school is an exhibition to Lincoln college, Oxford, originally founded by Sir George Wheeler, in 1723, by whom an annual income of £10 was given for that purpose; this has been since increased to £20 by his son, the Rev. Granville Wheeler, in 1759. In the case of candidates not coming forward from this school, the exhibition is open to all grammar schools in the kingdom. Besides this there is another free school, which is under the superintendence of trustees, consisting of the ministers of Wye and those of the four adjoining parishes, with the heirs of three other persons. This institution was founded and endowed in 1708, by Lady Joanna Thornhill, and the present income amounts to £193 10s. 6d., and 50 boys and 60 girls receive instruction, the school being open to all poor children, subject to the approval of the trustees. The master receives a salary of £40, and the mistress £25. The school is held, and the master and mistress live, in the ancient collegiate buildings, given for the use of Lady Thornhill's school, by Sir George Wheeler, in 1723. Here are almshouses for the use of six poor people, founded by Sir Thomas Kemp. "A college for a master, or provost, and several secular canons, was begun A.D. 1431, by John Kemp—then archbishop of York, afterwards of Canterbury, and a cardinal—in this town of his nativity, on the west side of the church-yard, but not finished till about A.D. 1447. St Gregory and St Martin were the saints, in honour of whom, both the parish church—which formerly was appropriate to Battell-abbey—and college were named. The yearly revenues of this last were worth £93 2s. ob. per ann., and after the surrender, the site was granted, 36th Henry VIII., to one Walter Buckler."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Ashford, 4 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 1200; in 1831, 1639. A. P., £9,394.

WYMONDHAM, or WINDHAM, a parish in the hundred of Forehoe, co. of Norfolk. It contains the market town of the same name, which forms the in-soken, and the divisions of Downham, Market-Street, Silfield, Sutton, Towngreen, and Wattlefield, which constitute the out-soken. This town owes its origin to the existence here of a priory of Black monks, founded in the reign of Henry I., who endowed it largely. About 1448 it was made an abbey, and at the dissolution its revenues were rated at £211 16s. 6d. as Dugdale, but only at £73 3s. 4d. as Speed. The two Ketts, who attempted to raise an insurrection in the reign of Edward VI., used to assemble their followers under an oak in this parish. Wymondham suffered greatly from fire in 1615, and from the plague in 1631; on the former occasion 300 houses were destroyed. The town is well built, and supplied with water from springs. Bombazines and crapes are made to a considerable extent here. Friday is market day, it being held under the charter of King John, granted in 1203; fairs for cattle, horses, pedlery, &c. are held on February 14th and May 17th, and also statute fairs occasionally. Constables are appointed at an annual court leet, and manorial courts are held as occasion requires. The inhabitants are exempt from serving on juries at assizes and sessions.

YARLINGTON, a hamlet in the parish of North Cadbury, co. of Somerset.

YARM, or YARUM, a market-town and parish in the western division of the liberty of Langbaugh, N. R., co. of York. The prosperity of this place has declined on account of its proximity to Stockton. It lies on the river Tees, which is here crossed by a bridge. The town has frequently suffered from inundation. The commerce of the place consists principally in the exportation of salmon caught in the Tees, and other provisions, to London. Thursday is market-day; and fairs are held on the Thursday before April 5th, on Ascension-day, August 2d, and October 19th and 20th; much cheese is sold on the last named day. The lord of the manor holds a biennial court for the recovery of small debts.—Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York, rated at £38 9s. 6d. Patron, the archbishop of York. The church—ded. to St Mary Magdalene—was rebuilt in 1730. The Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, Society of Friends, and Roman Catholics, have places of worship. Here is a free grammar school, the master of which receives the annual income, amounting to £21 4s., with a free house: the number of scholars is 14. Here is a national school for 160 children, supported by subscription. Here was formerly an hospital, ded. to St Nicholas, valued at the dissolution, at £5 per annum; and also a house of Black friars. Distance from York, 44 m. N. N. W.; from London, 238 m. N. by W. Pop., in 1801, 1800; in 1831, 1636. A. P., £4,207.

YARMOUTH, a market-town and parish in the liberty of West Medina, isle of Wight division of the co. of Southampton. It derives its name from its situation on the river Yare, and has suffered at various times from the invasions of the French, particularly in the reign of Richard II. It is well built, situated on the slope of a hill, and formerly occupied more ground than it now does. At its western extremity is a small fort, erected by Henry VIII. on the site of an ancient monastery. The trade is now very insignificant, and consists principally in the exportation of a fine white sand for the use of the glass-makers, and the importation of coals from Sunderland, and timber from the New Forest. Here is a ferry from Lymington-on-the-mainland. Friday is market-day, and a fair is held on the 25th of July. The market-house is a neat building, in which the corporation meet and transact business. The first charter of incorporation was granted by Baldwin de Kevvers, earl of Devon, and confirmed by Edward I. It has since been much modified, and is now governed under a charter of James I., by a mayor and 12 capital burgesses, with the power—which is not now exercised—of creating a steward, a town-clerk, and a sergeant-at-mace, with an unlimited number of freemen. The mayor and steward hold borough courts. This borough first sent members to the parliament held in the 23d of Edward I., but did not exercise this privilege again until the 27th of Elizabeth; since which time it regularly returned two members till the passing of the reform act, when it was disfranchised. The mayor returned the writs of election.—Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £50, and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St James. The Wesleyan Methodists and Baptists have places of worship here. Here are a national and a Lancasterian school, both supported by subscription. Thomas, Lord Holmes bequeathed an annual sum of £30, to be distributed amongst the poor of the parish. Distance from London, 94 m. S. W.; from Newport, 10 m. W. Pop., in 1801, 343; in 1831, 588. A. P., £206.

YARMOUTH (GREAT),

A sea-port, borough, market-town, and parish, in the eastern division of the hundred of Flegg, co. of Norfolk, but having separate jurisdiction. This flourishing sea-port derives its name from its situation on the river Yare. It is noticed in the Domesday survey as the king's demesne, and having 70 burgesses. In the reign of Henry III. it was inclosed with a wall and moat, and a castle was built in the centre of the town in 1588. This castle was demolished in 1621, and the town was, in consequence of the disturbed state of the country, strongly fortified. Yarmouth has suffered three times severely from the plague, having lost, in 1348, 7000; in 1579, 2000; and in 1664, 2500 of its inhabitants.

"It is in the form of an oblong quadrangle, extending more than a mile in length, and half a mile in breadth. It comprises 33 acres, from the shape of the peninsula on which it stands, having the sea on the east, and on the west the Yare, over which river there is a handsome drawbridge, forming a communication with the county of Suffolk. It contains four principal streets, running parallel, which are crossed at right angles by 156 narrower ones, denominated rows. These intersections give the place an appearance of regularity, observable only where a town has been built under one uniform plan. The whole is flanked by a wall on the east, north, and south sides, 2240 yards in length; which, with the west side next the river, 2030 yards, make the circumference 4270 yards, or two miles and 750 yards. The quay of Yarmouth is justly the pride and boast of the inhabitants; for it is allowed to be equal to that of Marseilles, and the most extensive and finest in Europe, except the far-famed one at Seville, in Spain. Its length, from the south gate to the bridge, is 1014 yards, beyond which it extends, for smaller vessels, 1016 yards, making a continuation of one mile and 270 yards. In many places it is 150 yards broad; and the southern part of the line is decorated with a range of handsome buildings. Yarmouth has long been much frequented as a fashionable watering-place, and furnishes every accommodation for the health, comfort, and amusement of its visitors. A bathing-house, erected in the year 1759, stands upon the beach, and commands a beautiful view of the roads. On each side of the vestibule is a bath, one appropriated to gentlemen, and the other to ladies. The sea water is raised every tide by a horse-mill, into a reservoir, about 50 yards from the baths, whence it is conveyed by pipes. There are also very commodious bathing-machines, but the sand renders them unpleasant of access. A public room was added to this building in the year 1788, where the company are served with tea, wine, &c. During the season, public breakfasts are given here twice a-week. A neat theatre was erected in the year 1778, in which plays, during the summer months, are performed four times a-week. These, with concerts and other amusements, tend to relieve the dull vacuity attendant upon lounging at a watering-place. There are various other public buildings. The fishermen's hospital is of a quadrangular form, and contains 20 rooms on the ground floor, each of which is intended for an old fisherman and his wife, who have a weekly allowance in money, and an annual allowance of coal. The hospital school, for feeding, clothing, and educating thirty boys and twenty girls, is supported by the corporation. The charity school, in which are clothed and educated seventy boys and thirty girls, is supported by voluntary subscriptions. The town-hall, situated near the centre of the quay, is a handsome building, with a portico of the Tuscan order in front. The council-room, which is also used for assemblies, is a fine well proportioned apartment. At one end is a full length portrait of King George II. in his coronation robes. The grand plan of the new harbour was executed under the direction of Joas Johnson, a Dutchman, who was brought from Holland to conduct the work. He commenced his operations by driving and hedging down large stakes and piles, to make a firm and substantial foundation. This was first done on the north side, and afterwards upon the south, for the purpose of forcing the reflux tide to run out by a north-east channel to the sea. The next step was the erecting piers and a jetty, for preventing the haven being overflowed, and preserving, at all states of tide, a sufficient depth of water for the ships to float at their moorings. The principal, or north pier, was at bottom 40 feet wide, at top 20 feet, and in length 235 yards. This was formed with large timber trees, joined and braced together by cross beams and iron-work. For the defence of this pier against the ravages of the ocean, a jetty was erected, in breadth at the base 16 feet, at the upper part eight, and in length 265 yards. The south pier, which is better built than the north pier, is 340 yards long, 30 feet broad, and 30 deep; 24 feet of the depth is generally under water, which, previous to the erection of this pier, was seldom more than three. This was intended for preventing the waters of the old haven from running out south, in their progress to the sea. These piers, &c., have been considerably improved at different periods since their erection, particularly in the mayoralty of Alderman Maship. The extent of the haven, between the north and south piers, is 1111 yards. During the late wars, the importance of Yarmouth was greatly increased, owing to its being a grand station for part of the British navy; the roads opposite the town affording safe anchorage for a numerous fleet. Here, accordingly, all the vessels engaged in carrying on the trade of the north of England, and the numerous colliers which pass from Shields, Sunderland, and Newcastle, to London, and the shipping from Scotland, resort for protection against easterly storms. The harbour is perfectly secure against every danger, and is provided with two light-houses, one at Caistor, and one at Garieston; yet the coast is the most dangerous in Britain. A melancholy instance occurred in the year 1692, when about 140 sail were driven ashore in one fatal night, and 1000 people perished. In the year 1554 also, 50 sail of ships perished in one day; and a similar catastrophe befel a larger number in 1790. The inhabitants of Yarmouth have experienced great difficulties, and incurred continual and heavy expenses, in forming and preserving the haven from decay.

The present annual expenses on the harbour, &c. amount to about £2000. For meeting this vast expenditure, various powers have been granted by 11 different acts of parliament, the last of which was obtained in the year 1800. By virtue of this, the collector has a right to charge, as a harbour tax, one shilling on every chaldron of coals, also on every last of grain and weigh of salt; the same tax is likewise levied on every ton of goods of a different description, fish excepted, which are unladen in the harbour of Yarmouth. This place is advantageously situated for commerce, particularly to the north of Europe; and lying at the mouths of the rivers Yare, Bure, and Waveney, which are navigable for keels of 40 tons, has ready communications with the interior. Besides fishing smacks, upwards of 300 vessels belong to this port; and its mariners are considered amongst the most able and expert navigators in the kingdom. Yarmouth was early distinguished, and still remains unrivalled, in the herring fishery; and the trade affords subsistence to about 6000 persons, besides those who carry the fish to foreign markets. The boats are large decked vessels, from 40 to 50 tons burden. Yarmouth has also a considerable coal trade. The modern defence of Yarmouth is by three forts, which were erected on the verge of the beach during the American war, and mounted with 32-pounders. The harbour also is defended by two bastions of a mural construction, with two smaller bastions, one at the extremity of the denes or sands, and the other on an elevated spot on the opposite side of the water. Barracks, capable of containing 1000 men, are built on the beach; and an armoury has lately been erected, under the direction of Mr Wyatt. This building stands on the western side of the town, and is calculated to contain 10,000 stand of arms, besides a large assemblage of naval stores. Among the peculiarities of this place is the use of a low narrow cart, drawn by a single horse, and well adapted for the conveying of goods through the narrow lanes of this town; but others, on the same construction, more elegantly made, are let for airing to the neighbourhood, and are called Yarmouth coaches; but on passing the sands they have more the appearance of sledges. This is a very uneasy conveyance over the rough pavement of the streets. A sessions is annually held here in the month of September, for the trial of offences committed within the jurisdiction of the corporation. They have also a court of admiralty for the protection of marine property; and a court for the recovery of debts above £2 and under £10, from the award of which there is no appeal."

Corporation, &c.—Yarmouth was governed by a provost till the reign of John, but a charter was granted by that monarch, which was subsequently extended and confirmed by Edward II., Richard II., Henry VII., Elizabeth, who granted the admiralty court, and James I., who extended to them the right of trying pirates. The town is now governed under the charter granted by Queen Anne, who altered the title of bailiff to that of mayor. The corporation now consists of a mayor, high-steward, recorder, sub-steward, 18 aldermen, and 36 common-councilmen, with a town-clerk, registrar of the admiralty court, four proctors, who also act as attorneys of the burgh court, a water-bailiff, marshal, and gaoler, six sergeants-at-mace, and a pier-master. The mayor is elected annually, on the 29th of August, by the common-councilmen, and is sworn in on the 29th of September. The aldermen are elected from the common-council, and hold their offices for life. The common-councilmen are elected from among the freemen, by the court of aldermen and the common-council. The mayor, high-steward, recorder, deputy-mayor, and all aldermen who may have been mayors at any time, are justices of the peace, ex officio. The jurisdiction of the corporation extends to capital offences, as the town is not included in the circuit. The inhabitants are exempted from serving on county juries, and from paying county rates. The freedom of the borough can either be obtained by birth, or by servitude to a freeman of seven years. Yarmouth sent two members to parliament in the reign of Edward I., and has done so ever since. The election was formerly vested in the freemen, who were about 1000 in number. By the Reform act, the boundaries comprise the old borough of Great Yarmouth and the parish of Gorleston. The number of new electors is 1113, and the mayor is returning officer.—Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, and in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Norwich. The church—ded. to St Nicholas—was erected in 1123, but greatly enlarged in 1250. It consists of a nave and a transept, and had lately a spire 136 feet in height, which was taken down in 1803. The organ is said to be inferior to none, except the celebrated instrument at Haerlem, in Holland. This church, till the year 1716, was the only place of worship for persons of the establishment, when a handsome chapel was erected and ded. to St George. A new church is about to be erected near the White Iron Gates. The Particular Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics, have places of worship here. Here is a free school, erected by the corporation in 1651, at which 150 children are educated, 50 of whom are maintained, clothed, and apprenticed. Here are two other schools, besides a Sunday school, which is attended by 90 boys and 50 girls. The hospital for 20 decayed fishermen, with their wives, during the lifetime of their husbands, is supported by a grant from government. There was a cell belonging to the Holy Trinity at Norwich; also houses for Black, White, and Grey friars. Distance from London, 123 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 14,845; in 1831, 21,115. A.P., £24,383.

YORDA'S CAVE. In the W. R. of Yorkshire, near the village of Thornton, in Lonsdale, there is a celebrated cave known by the above name. The entrance to it is by a rude arched opening, about 16 feet by 20 in size, bearing some slight resemblance to the gateway of an old castle; through this, access is soon gained to a cavern so large, that the roof and walls can hardly be discerned by the light of the torches; a small brook, which runs through it, must be crossed, and then the curious forms of the stalactites depending from the roof and walls begin to be perceivable; one is termed the bishop's throne, and another the organ, from fancied resemblances to these objects. After entering a narrow passage of five or six yards, in which the roof is apparently supported by stalactitical pillars, the cave contracts so much, that there is only room for one person to advance at a time, but the height is still considerable; here the noise of a cascade is heard, which falls from an opening in the rock, from a height of 16 or 17 feet, into a basin at the bottom of a chamber, the roof of which is like a dome. There are other compartments of the cave on the left hand, curious to visit, but not admitting of any particular description; these are called Yorda's bed-chamber, Yorda's oven, &c. from some traditional personage, of whom we can give no account. In this, as in the case of the cavern of the Guacharo, the excavation is obviously due to the action of running water, and is consequently still in progress; hence such caverns are being continually increased in size by one agency, while the same operating in another manner tends to fill them up, by the deposition of calcareous matter.

Situation and Extent.—Its situation is nearly in the centre of Great Britain; its extreme points lie between the parallels of 53° 18', and 54° 40' north latitude, and between 2° 40' of west, and 0° 10' of east longitude from Greenwich. On the north, the east, and part of the south sides, its boundary is distinctly defined by rivers and the German ocean. On the north side it is separated, in its whole extent, from the county-palatine of Durham by the river Tees; from the mouth of the same river to the entrance of the Humber, the whole east side is bounded by the German ocean; on the south side it is divided from Lincolnshire by the rivers Humber and Trent. The boundaries between Yorkshire and the counties of Nottingham, Derby, Cheshire, Lancashire, and Westmoreland, are merely conventional, being indicated by no natural feature of the country. The general form of this county is that of an irregular quadrangle; the longest diagonal extends from north-west to south-east about 130 miles, and the shortest from south-west to north-east about 90 miles. The area of the county comprehends 5,961 square miles, or above 3,814,000 statute acres. At an early period of the Saxon dominion, the great county of York was divided into three districts called ridings; these are termed north, east, and west, in reference to their relative positions with respect to each other, and to the capital city of the county. The north riding is subdivided into eleven wapentakes, the east into seven, and the west into nine. There is also a small district called the ainstay of York, separate from any of the ridings. The county contains 613 parishes, 1 archiepiscopal city, 59 market-towns, of which 17 send members to parliament; the county sends 6 members. According to the returns made to parliament in 1821, the number of houses and inhabitants in this county was as follows:—In the east riding, including the ainstay of York, the number of inhabited houses was 34,390, of inhabitants 190,449, in 1831, 204,008; in the north riding, houses 35,765, inhabitants 183,381, in 1831, 190,873; in the west riding, houses 154,314, inhabitants 799,357, in 1831, 976,415. From this statement it appears that the total number of inhabited houses was 224,469, of houses building 1613, and uninhabited 9342; the number of persons in the county was 1,173,187, or upwards of one-tenth of the entire population of England; in 1831, 1,371,696. The annual value of real property in Yorkshire, according to the last assessment, is as follows:—north riding, £1,166,948; east riding, £1,120,434; west riding, £2,396,220. The following statement will show the ratio of increase in the number of inhabitants. From 1801 to 1811, the population of the north riding increased in the ratio of 7 per cent.; from 1811 to 1821, 11 per cent.; and from 1821 to 1831, of only 2 per cent. The population of the east riding increased from 1801 to 1811, at the rate of 16 per cent.; from 1811 to 1821, 14 per cent.; from 1821 to 1831, 10 per cent. The population of the west riding increased from 1801 to 1811, at the rate of 16 per cent.; from 1811 to 1821, at the rate of 22 per cent.; and from 1821 to 1831, at the rate of 22 per cent. This statement shows that there has long been a tendency in the population of the north and east ridings to flow into the west riding.

Divisions.—“In the Domesday survey we find Yorkshire as at present divided into three ridings, called the north, east, and west, and subdivided in wapentakes, a division peculiar to this county. Riding is a corruption of the Saxon triking, which was a portion of a county that contained three or four hundreds. The name of wapentake is synonymous with hundred; it is derived from the Saxon word weapen, i. e. arms, and tac, i. e. touch; as one would say, touching or shaking their arms. “The north riding of Yorkshire is situated between 53° 57' and 54° 38' north latitude, and between 0° 19' and 2° 23' west longitude from Greenwich. The length of the riding from east to west is 83 miles; and is computed to contain 2048 square miles, or 1,311,187 acres, of which about 442,565 are uncultivated; the remaining 868,622 acres comprise the enclosed lands, open fields, woods, and roads. This riding is bounded on the north by the river Tees, which separates it from the county of Durham; on the east and north-east by the German ocean; on the south-east by the east riding; on the south by the ainstay of York and the west riding; and on the west by the county of Westmoreland. The east riding of Yorkshire is situated between 53° 35' and 54° 15' north latitude, and between 1° 10' west and 0° 10' east longitude from Greenwich. Its length, on a medium, extends 40, and its breadth 32 miles; and it contains 819,200 acres; out of this there are about 3060 acres of waste land. It is bounded on the north and west by the little river Hertford and the Derwent, which separate it from the north riding as far as the vicinity of Stamford bridge. An irregular line from the Derwent to the Ouse, commencing about a mile above Stamford bridge, and joining the latter river about a mile below York, form the rest of the boundary between the two ridings. From that place the east riding is bounded on the west and south-west by the Ouse, which divides it from the west riding. On the south it is bounded by the Humber, and on the east by the German ocean. The west riding of Yorkshire is situated between $53^{\circ} 18'$ and $54^{\circ} 23'$ north latitude, and $0^{\circ} 45'$ and $2^{\circ} 40'$ west longitude from Greenwich. The extent of this riding is about 95 miles in its greatest length, from east to west; and 46 miles in its greatest breadth from north to south; containing about 2450 square miles, or 1,568,900 acres. There are about 406,272 acres of waste lands in this part of the county. It is bounded on the east by the Humber, and the river Ouse; on the north, by the north riding; on the west, by Lancashire; and on the south by Cheshire, Derbyshire, and Nottinghamshire." The geographical features of the county of York are strongly marked, and render the whole province one of the most interesting in the kingdom. The north riding is distinguished by a coast strikingly bold and rocky, and presenting cliffs which occasionally rise to an altitude of 500, and even of 800 feet. A little farther inland, successive ranges of hills rise one above the other form the elevated tracts of the moorlands, presenting a dreary and desolate aspect of hopeless sterility. Farther westward appear the extensive vales of Cleveland and York, and beyond them the western mountains and moorlands. The east riding is the least interesting in the county, and, with the exception of the Wolds, displays no prominent variations in the appearance of the country. The west riding is exceedingly irregular in its surface—so far westward as Sheffield, Bradford, and Otley, it rises into hills and is beautifully variegated—farther westward still it becomes mountainous and rugged, occasionally intersected with beautiful valleys, and displaying, in Ingleborough, Wharfedale, Pennine, &c. the highest mountains in England, Snowden and Skiddaw not excepted.

Soil.—The variety of soils, and the different degrees of fertility of that part of the vale of York which lies within the north riding, are thus described by Tuke:—The level land near the Tees consists in general of a rich gravelly loam; upon the high ground, on the west side of the road leading from Catterick to Pterisbridge, the soil is, for the most part, strong and generally fertile. On the east side of the road leading from Groth bridge to Catterick, is much fine gravelly soil, with a considerable quantity of clay, and some peat; and on the north of Richmond a mixed loamy soil. On the east side of the road between Catterick and Pterisbridge, there is some cold thin clay upon

stratum from six inches to a foot thick. About Burton, Melsomby, and Middleton-Tyas, the soil is loamy, upon limestone; about Balzaby, and from thence in an easterly direction to the edge of Cleveland, and betwixt the Wiske and the eastern moorlands, as far south as Burrowby and Thornton-le-moor, the soil for the most part is a cold clay; though in some places less tenacious soils, mixed with considerable quantities of large cobble stones, or pebbles of various kinds are to be met with. On the west side of the road, between Richmond and Leeming, a good gravelly soil prevails; toward Hornby a good gravelly clay; at Langthorpe, a good sandy loam, and some peat. The land, on both sides of the brook, which runs from Constable-Burton past Bedale, consists for the most part of a rich loam, but in some places intermixed with a large quantity of cobble stones and coarse gravel. The country between the above-mentioned brook and the west riding, and on the west side of the road from Borough-bridge to Leeming, is generally a turnip soil, though of various qualities; consisting of a loamy soil, upon limestone, a gravelly loam, and a rich hazel loam, except that in some parts there are patches of swampy ground and cold clay land. That corner of the vale, east of Middleton-Tyas, and west of the Wiske, and north of a line drawn from Scorton to Danby-wiske, is mostly cold and wet; but, on the west side of this tract, there is some clayey loam. On each bank of the river Swale, and between that river and the Wiske, and south of Scorton and Danby-Wiske, to the junction of the Ure and Swale, is a very fertile country, consisting of rich gravelly loam and some fine sandy soil. On the banks of the Swale are many rich grazing grounds. For a few miles north of Thirk there is some fine, rich strong loamy land. On the north-west side of Thirk begins a vein of sandy soil, which runs betwixt the rivers Swale and Ure, until it comes within 10 miles of York, where, leaving the river, it passes York a few miles to the north, and extends to the river Derwent. About Myton, Brafferton, and Hetherby, the sand is of a dark colour, and remarkably fertile; but in general this sandy tract is barren and wet. About Skipton and Skelton fine sandy loam prevails; but on each side of York, south of this sandy tract, and to the boundary of the east riding, is a good strong clay, or loamy soil. The country betwixt the sandy soil above described and the Howardian hills, is in general level, the soil varying in all degrees from a strong clay to a sand. The Howardian hills, thus named by Marshall in his Rural Economy, are a high and bold range, running from west to east, and separating the vale at York from Ryedale. The soil is mostly "a good strong loam upon clay, mixed with cobble stones; about Gilling and towards Barnby, it is thin and poor, in most places near to a grit, though in some to a limestone rock; but on the southern side of these hills a good clay and sandy loam prevails. From Barnby to Sheriff-hutton the soil is generally a rich clayey loam. The valley, on the north side of Sheriff-hutton, consists of a clayey loam on a bed of strong gravel, and lower down there is some peat. The hills, rising from the northern side of that valley, are mostly of a rich strong soil, but on their north-eastern extremity, quite to the Derwent, the soil is light and fertile, upon a limestone rock." Ryedale with the east and west marishes, form one extensive vale, Pickering-beck dividing Ryedale from the marishes. The surface of the lower parts of Ryedale is flat, and a large proportion of it, probably not less than 7,000 acres, is liable to be flooded, as the extreme curvature of the river Rye, and an injudicious mode of embankment, retard the passage of the waters, which, in the time of heavy rains, or on the melting of the snow, descend with great rapidity from the moorlands. The flat of Ryedale is broken by several insulated swells, of considerable extent and elevation. On the north side of the dale the surface rises, with a moderate ascent, for three or four miles to the moors, which break abruptly from it. The soil of Ryedale is various, but generally a hazel loam, upon clay, or a deep warp or silt, upon gravel or clay. The detached swells are mostly a rich, strong clay. This dale is generally extremely fertile. In the marishes which skirt the north side of the Derwent, the soil is chiefly clay, with some sandy loam, gravel, and peat. The western moorlands differ greatly from those in the eastern part of the riding, and which have been already described. Being generally calcareous, although their altitude is much greater, they are considerably more fertile than the eastern moorlands, which consist entirely of gritstone or freestone rock. Many of the dales which intersect the western moorlands are extremely fertile. Of these, Wensleydale may be ranked as the first, both in extent and fertility; the bottom of it consists of rich grazing grounds, through which the river Ure winds with a very serpentine course, forming in many places beautiful cascades. From the bottom of the valley the hills rise with a moderate slope, though with a very irregular surface, to an amazing height, and are enclosed for the space of a mile, or a mile and a half from the river. On the south side several small dales open into the larger one of Wensleydale. The soil on the banks of the river, is generally a rich loamy gravel, and on the sides of the hills a good loam; but in some places rather stiff, and a substratum of limestone is predominate. Swaledale is next to Wensleydale in extent, but falls short of it in beauty, though it is esteemed by some as more romantic, as it is much narrower, and the hills, on each side, have a much steeper ascent. It is not much inferior to Wensleydale in fertility, as the soil in the lower parts consists chiefly of a rich loam, though clay and peat-moss appear in some places in ascending the hills. The smaller dales, which are very numerous in this riding, are mostly similar to these, and have the same general appearance of fertility. Even the mountains seldom exhibit those marks of unconquerable sterility which characterise the eastern moorlands; instead of black ling, we find many of them covered with a fine sweet grass; others with extensive tracts of bent; some indeed produce ling, but it is generally mixed with a large portion of grass, bent, or rushes. In the east riding the soil is not so various. The extensive district which stretches from the foot of the wolds to the western limits of the riding, which is commonly called the levels, is every where flat and unpicturesque. The soil is in most places clayey, with an extensive sandy, and in some places moorish tract, running through the middle; but near the banks of the Derwent and the Ouse it is entirely a clayey loam, and in some places a very strong clay: the latter chiefly predominates from Gilerdyke to Howden, and extends quite to the Ouse; the country is here overspread with villages and hamlets, but is extremely dirty and disagreeable. In the wolds, the soil is commonly a free and rather light loam, with a mixture of chalky gravel; some parts are very shallow: it also contains a deeper and more kindly loam, a lighter sandy mixture upon chalk. Throughout the whole of the tract extending along the coast, clay and loam are the predominant soils. In the west riding soils of every kind are to be found, from deep strong clay and rich loam to the poorest peat earth. Clay and loam, mingled with a portion of sand and moor, prevail in the east district of this riding, while the middle division consists chiefly of loam, on a limestone base. Similar soils extend through the west part, but they are frequently interrupted by tracts of moor of different degrees of fertility.

Agriculture.—Throughout the greatest part of the north riding agriculture has, within the last few years, advanced as rapidly as in most parts of the kingdom, considering the circumstances of climate and soil. In those parts that admit of cultivation the farmers form a very respectable class of society; they are liberal, and generally desirous of making improvements, and ready to adopt any that afford a reasonable prospect of success. In general the peasantry of this riding are sober, industrious, and orderly. In the northern part of the vale of York, the rental of farms is generally from £100 to £300 per annum; very few, perhaps, as low as £40, and some as high as £600; but farther to the southward there is a large proportion of small farms, some of which are as low as £20, with others as high as £200. On the Howardian hills, the generality of farms are under £100; very few are so high as £200. In Ryedale are many farms of £200, and several from that to £800 per annum, or upwards; nevertheless the greater proportion of it is held in farms of about or below £100. In the marishes they may generally be stated at from £50 to £150 per annum—few so high as £200. In both the eastern and western moorlands the farms are small, very few above £100 per annum, but generally from £5 to £40. Wherever there are towns or large villages, a greater proportion of small farms are to be met with. Most of the farms are let from year to year, and leases are unusual. In the vale of York it is computed that one-third of the ground is in tillage, and two thirds in grass. The western end of the Howardian hills, and from thence to Thirsk, is a dairy country, and not more than one-fourth is in tillage; on the other parts of these hills the tillage and grass are nearly equal in quantity. Ryedale, the marishes, and the northern part of the coast, have about one third in tillage; the southern part of the coast about one-fourth; and Cleveland about one-half. In the dales of the eastern moors, only about one-fifth is in tillage, and much less in those of the western moors. Wensledale is almost wholly in grass, the humidity of the climate in the western moorlands not admitting of tillage with any prospect of advantage. In the dales farther north somewhat more corn is grown, but the quantity, even there, is very small. The enclosed lands, in all these dales, are chiefly appropriated to meadow; the lower and better parts of the moors are mostly stunted pastures, on which the cattle are kept in summer. The soil, climate, and other circumstances of an extensive district, are generally so various, that the rotation of crops must be different in distinct parts. On strong soils the usual course is fallow, wheat, oats, or sometimes beans and pease mixed, or pease instead of oats; and a little to the westward of Easingwold, fallow, wheat, beans, or pease, or pease and beans mixed. On gravelly and loamy soils the courses are various; sometimes fallow, wheat, beans, pease, blendings, or early oats; sometimes turnips, barley, clover, wheat, or white pease instead of the clover. Some sow barley and turnips alternately. Near Catterick, the rotation is frequently barley, clover, and turnips; near Bedale it is sometimes turnips, wheat, beans, and then again turnips. In Ryedale, the marishes and some parts of the vale of York, the course on the higher soils is turnips, barley, red clover, and wheat. In Cleveland, and along the coast, the common rotation is fallow, wheat, oats, or, instead of the last, beans and blendings, which are a mixture of pease and beans; turnips are but little cultivated. From all these courses, however, there are various deviations, induced by different considerations and circumstances. Wheat is the staple produce of Cleveland, and no other district in the north riding produces so great a quantity, in proportion to its extent, or of so good a quality; yet the crops are not so abundant as in those parts where they are more in the practice of cultivating turnips, clover, and grass seeds. In Cleveland, three quarters per acre are esteemed an average crop; but in Ryedale, and the best cultivated parts of the vale of York, from three and a half to four quarters per acre are frequently obtained; and crops of five quarters per acre are not uncommon. Barley is not much cultivated in the north riding, nor rye, except on poor and sandy soils. Meslin, or a mixture of wheat and rye, is very common, and of this the household bread is made throughout the country; it is used in families of almost every rank, and is both wholesome and nutritious. Ryedale is as remarkable for the culture of oats as Cleveland is for that of wheat; the crops of oats in this district are abundant, and their quality is excellent. In Ryedale eight quarters per acre are a common crop; ten are often produced, and that for several years in succession; but in most other parts of the riding six quarters are esteemed a good crop. The oats are principally consumed in the manufacturing parts of this county, where the numerous population makes use chiefly of oaten bread. In the southern parts of the vale of York, on the eastern part of the Howardian hills, and in Ryedale, the harvest generally begins about the second week in August: in the northern parts of the vale, the west end of the Howardian hills, in Cleveland, and the marishes, towards the end of that month; on the coast, and in the dales of the eastern and western moorlands, where the situation is favourable, about the beginning of September, but in general about the end of that month or the beginning of October. When the extent of the north riding is considered, that of the woodlands is comparatively small. The following estimate of the quantity in each district is not far from the truth:—

The Coast,	Acres.
Cleveland,	3,000
The Vale of York, with the Howardian hills,	1,500
Ryedale, with the east and west marishes,	11,500
Eastern Moorlands,	6,000
Western ditto,	3,000
Total,	25,500

Exclusive of the above, there is a considerable quantity of timber in the hedge-rows, particularly in Ryedale, the Howardian hills, and the vale of York. Large full grown timber, however, is extremely scarce. Some proprietors have, however, of late years formed considerable plantations. The oak timber, in most parts of the north riding, though not large, is of an excellent quality, being produced on sound, and often rocky ground. Its growth is slow, which renders it extremely hard and durable, and to the use of it the ship-builders of Whitby owe their wealth, and the ships their celebrity. This port and Scarborough consume most of the ship timber produced in this riding, except such as may grow towards its western extremity.—The breed of cattle throughout this portion of the county is the short-horned, except towards the western boundaries, where some small long-horned cattle are met with. The short-horned cattle of the northern part of the vale of York, and of Cleveland, are known by the name of the Tees-water breed. This district is supposed to produce the largest cattle in England, and the breed has of late years been greatly improved. Near York, where the cattle are kept chiefly for the purpose of the dairy, the breed is less an object of attention, the milk being considered as of greater importance. In the Howardian hills, Ryedale, and the marishes, considerable attention is paid to the breed, and here, next to the banks of the Tees, are the best short-horned cattle in the riding. The cattle of the western moorlands are small; when fat, they seldom exceed forty stone weight. In the dales of the eastern moorlands, and on the coast, the cattle are clean, and fine in the bone, and good feeders, but considerably inferior in size to the Tees-water breed. In the eastern moorlands, the coast, Ryedale, the Howardian hills, and the southern part of the vale of York, the practice of working oxen prevails, although it is less general than formerly. In the western part of the riding, the northern part of the vale of York, and in Cleveland, oxen are seldom used for the draught.—The sheep of the old stock of the northern part of the vale of York, and of Cleveland, generally called Tees-water sheep, are large, coarse boned, and slow feeders; and the wool is harsh and dry. But the stock of most of the principal farmers has of late years been greatly improved by a mixture of the Disley and Northumberland breeds. The sheep of the marshes, Ryedale, and the Howardian hills, are also greatly improved; but the Disley breed is not yet grown common in Cleveland. The moorland sheep are small; those on the higher inclosed lands of the western moors will, when three years old and fat, weigh from eighteen to twenty pounds per quarter, and produce a fleece of about five pounds of tolerably fine wool. The whole of this is worked up into the knitted hosiery, for which these dales are celebrated. But the greatest part of the sheep on these moors are of the short or small Scotch breed. The sheep on the eastern moorlands are horned, with black or mottled faces; they are smaller than those of the western moorlands, not weighing, when well fed, above fourteen pounds per quarter, and their fleeces will not average more than three pounds of an open, loose, and coarse wool, some of which is little finer than goat's hair.—Yorkshire has long been famed for its horses, and the north riding is particularly distinguished for its breed. The Cleveland horses being cleanly made, strong, and active, are extremely well-adapted to the coach and to the plough; those of the northern part of the vale of York are, by the general introduction of the racing blood, rendered the most valuable breed for the saddle. The southern part of the vale, the Howardian hills, Ryedale, and the marshes, also produce a great number of horses both for the saddle and the coach. The dales of the eastern moorlands rear many horses, which, being of a smaller breed, are too low for the coach, but are a useful and hardy race. Horses also constitute a considerable part of the stock in the higher parts of the western moorlands. They are generally bred between the Scottish Galloways and the country breed, and are a hardy and very strong race, in proportion to their size; these are chiefly sold into the manufacturing parts of the west riding and Lancashire for the ordinary purposes. In the north riding of Yorkshire, landed property is greatly divided; about one-third of it is possessed by yeomanry. Much the largest proportion of the eastern and western moorlands is in possession of freeholders, the value of whose lands seldom amounts to £200 per annum. The rest of the county is divided into estates of different value, from seven or eight hundred, as high as £20,000 per annum, or upwards, but very few rise to anything near so great an amount. In the east riding greater improvements have been made in agriculture, and it has been brought to a higher degree of perfection, and conducted on a more extensive scale, than in any other portion of the county. The farms, especially on the wolds and in the southern parts of Holderness, are generally large, from two or three hundred to above a thousand pounds rent per annum; and small farms are rarely to be found. Their most frequent occurrence is in the levels, on the western side of the wolds, towards York. The rents vary from ten or fifteen shillings, to four or five pounds per acre, according to the nature of the soil, and the advantages of the situation. Near Hedon some of the ground is let at four or five guineas, and some, in the vicinity of Hull, at eight or ten pounds per acre. Even in the Holderness marshes, and Sunk island, which is contiguous, the lands are rented as high as from £2 to £2 10s., or more, per acre; yet from the goodness of the soil, and the improved mode of agriculture, the farmers are rich and live in an elegant style. In the low grounds called the Carrs, adjoining to the river Hull, such improvements have been made by drainage as less than a century ago would have been deemed impossible. Extensive tracts of land formerly flooded a great part of the year, and producing scarcely any thing but rushes and a little coarse grass, are now covered with abundant crops of grain; and the value of the soil has been increased in a tenfold proportion. On the wolds very great improvements have taken place. About a century ago wheat was almost unknown in this district; barley and oats were the only kinds of grain that were produced, and of the former was made all the bread used by the inhabitants. But at this time the valleys and declivities of the hills wave with plentiful crops of wheat, and neither servants nor labourers will eat barley bread. The mode of converting the old sheep lands on the wolds into tillage, is mostly by paring and burning, after which a crop of turnips is generally produced. This is sometimes followed by oats, and sometimes by barley and seeds, (clover, &c.) for mowing or eating; and the ground having thus lain a year or two is ploughed up for wheat. In the Carrs, the Holderness marshes, and Sunk island, when the old lands are broken up, the mode has generally been that of sowing rape for the first crop. In the Carrs, the practice of paring and burning is universal; in Sunk island, and the marshes, the sward is often ploughed without undergoing that process. The rabbit-warrens, which, in the more uncultivated state of the wolds, formed a prominent feature, are rapidly disappearing. The largest now in this part of the country is in Cowlain; but this will, in all probability, soon share the fate of many others that have been ploughed out, as warrens give an air of desolation to an estate, and are troublesome to the neighbourhood immediately adjoining. But in proportion to the extirpation of rabbits, the breed of sheep has been improved, especially by crosses from the Leicestershire. Enclosures have indeed become almost general; and probably ere long very few fields in this district will remain unenclosed. On the wold soil quick-set fences grow remarkably well, if taken care of the first two or three years. The extensive level, extending from the foot of the wolds to the western limits of the riding, has also received great improvements by drainage, enclosure, and the newest modes of agriculture. Within the last half century the vast commons of Wāllinfen and Bishopsoil, containing upwards of 9000 acres, have been enclosed and cultivated, besides several others of inferior extent; and a vast and dreary waste, full of swamps and broken grounds, which, in foggy or stormy weather, could not be crossed without danger, is now covered with well-built farm-houses, and intersected in various directions with roads, of which some are in a very good state. In the rich and strong lands about Howden, large quantities of flax, and also of beans, are produced. The whole of this level, as well as the rest of the east riding, is a considerable corn country. Although there are no extensive woods between the wolds and the Ouse, there are abundance of plantations and trees in the hedge rows of old enclosures. There seems, indeed, to be too much wood to have any good effect on so level a country, as it tends to make the air damp, and to prevent the roads from drying. In the west riding almost all the arable land is enclosed with hedges or stone walls; the former prevail in the eastern, the latter in the western parts. Within a few miles to the westward of Leeds, stone fences become general, and, except in some of the fertile valleys, hedges almost entirely disappear. But there are very few open fields, except where the land is common or waste. A great proportion of this riding is possessed by small proprietors; and there are few parts of the kingdom where this respectable class is more numerous. The dukes of Norfolk and Devonshire, Earl Fitzwilliam, the earl of Thanet, &c. are the greatest proprietors; but there are some other noblemen and gentlemen who possess extensive estates. Here are also considerable portions of land belonging to the archbishop of York and other dignitaries of the church. The majority of farms are comparatively small, and few are of that size which, in many other parts of the kingdom, would be considered as large. On the arable lands, there are scarcely any that exceed four hundred acres; and for one of that extent we meet with a dozen of less than fifty acres. In the grazing division, in the westernmost parts of the riding, the land is let in yet smaller allotments; and, in many places, the occupier of a hundred acres is called a large farmer. A great part of this riding is exclusively kept in grass, and, where this is the case, cultivation is only a secondary object. Mr Browne, in his Agricultural Survey, gives the following general sketch of the state of farming in the district under consideration:—"1. From Ripley to the western extremity of the riding, nearly the whole of the good land is kept under the grazing system, and seldom or never ploughed; while corn is raised upon the inferior or moorish soils. During the time we were in that part of the country, we hardly ever saw a plough; and a stalk of corn was a great rarity. Upon the higher grounds there are immense tracts of waste, which are generally common amongst the contiguous possessors, and pastured by them with cattle and sheep.—2. The land in the vicinity of manufacturing towns. The greatest part of the ground is there occupied by persons who do not consider farming as a business, but regard it only as a matter of convenience. The manufacturer has his enclosure, wherein he keeps milch cows for the use of his family, and horses for carrying his goods to market, and bringing back raw materials.—3. The corn district, or those parts of the riding where tillage is principally attended to, and grass only considered as the means of bringing the corn husbandry to perfection. If we run an imaginary line from Ripley, southward by Leeds, Wakefield, and Barnsley, to Rotherham, we may affirm that the greatest part eastward of it, till we come to the banks of the Ouse, which separates the west from the east riding, is principally employed in raising corn. About Boroughbridge, Wetherby, Selby, &c. there is about one-half of the fields under the plough. Further south about Pontefract, Barnsley, and Rotherham, there are two-thirds; and to the eastward of Doncaster, to Thorne and Snaith, three-fourths of the land are managed in a similar way.—4. The common fields. These are scattered over the whole of the last division, but are most numerous in that part of the country, to the eastward of the great north road from Doncaster to Boroughbridge. It is impossible even to guess at the quantity of land under this management. In general it may be said to be extensive.—5. The moors. These, besides the large tracts in the first division, lie in the western part of the riding, and, perhaps, contain one-eighth part of the district. Upon them sheep are chiefly bred, and afterwards sold to the graziers in the lower part of the country. A great part of these lands is common." To these observations it is necessary to add, that the number of open fields is considerably diminished since the time of the survey, and is continually growing less, as bills of enclosure are passing in every session of parliament. The bad husbandry, of which Mr Browne speaks, in the tract to the eastward of Doncaster, is greatly improved. That gentleman also remarks, that "betwixt Hatfield and Thorne there are great quantities of waste land, and much under water. Upon the whole the land we have seen this day stands in the greatest need of improvement, which cannot be done without a previous division." The observation is just, and the evil has been in a great measure remedied. After much pains had been taken to remove various obstacles, and reconcile jarring interests, an act of parliament was, in the year 1811, obtained for enclosing the extensive commons of Hatfield, Stainforth, Thorne, &c., which has been of incalculable benefit to the neighbourhood. By that enclosure above twelve thousand acres of land, a great part of which was of excellent quality, has been brought into cultivation: this part of the county now assumes a new aspect; the wide extent of waste has been converted into waving fields of corn, and the means of subsistence, by the increase of provisions and employment, has been greatly augmented. In the arable lands of the west riding, a greater quantity of wheat is raised than of any other grain. It is mostly of the red sort, and is sown after fallow, or turnips, or clover; and sometimes, though seldom, after pease or beans. Rye is not cultivated to any great extent, and is the most frequently seen in the neighbourhood of Doncaster. Barley is also produced in far less quantities than wheat. Oats are cultivated to a very considerable extent, but little attention seems to be bestowed on procuring the best kinds of seed, though in the western part of the riding oatmeal is the principal food of the lower classes of inhabitants. The quantity of land sown with pease is not considerable, and very few beans are produced except on the strong soils in the eastern parts near the Don and Ouse. They are chiefly sown in the broadcast way; but drilling has, of late years, come more into practice. Tares and vetches, for horse food, are sown in several places, and particularly in the neighbourhood of Sheffield and Rotherham. The turnip husbandry prevails over a great part of the riding, but the cultivation of that root is not in general attended to so carefully as good farming requires. In the eastern part of the riding toward Selby, and especially in the tract which lies along the banks of the Ouse, below its junction with the Aire, and is distinguished by the name of Marshland, the raising of potatoes is no inconsiderable object of attention. They are mostly of the kidney kind, and great quantities of them are sent by water carriage to the London market. The average crop in Marshland may be estimated at about seventy sacks, of twelve pecks per acre, but instances of crops producing 100 sacks per acre have been met with in the best soils, and under a good mode of management. Flax is also cultivated in these parts to a considerable extent. It is generally sown in the beginning of April; and if the season be favourable, it is fit for weeding about the middle of May, and for pulling in the latter end of July. The produce is generally from forty or fifty stones, of fourteen pounds, to the acre; but flax is a very precarious crop; for, on the best soils, and under the best management, it depends almost wholly upon the season. A bounty of fourpence per stone is allowed by government for growing of flax, to encourage its cultivation. Rape is not very extensively grown in this part of the county, and it is only in the eastern parts that any is seen. Wood for dyers is very commonly raised in the neighbourhood of Selby, and in some parts near Doncaster. It is generally sown among red clover, and is pulled up by women and children a few days before the clover is mowed. It grows upon all lands that are fit for turnips, and is sometimes sown alone for a crop. Clover is sometimes sown in this riding, but much less than in any other district. The quantity of oak and ashwood in the west riding is very considerable, and both meet with a ready market at the shipping and manufacturing towns. A large portion is also used at the mines and collieries. The waste land in this riding, at the period Mr Tuke made his survey, was 265,000 acres capable of cultivation, and 140,000 acres incapable of improvement in any other way than by planting; the aggregate making somewhat more than one-fourth of the whole district. The waste lands which are fit only for planting appear to have very slowly improved, although many places, which would not repay the expense of cultivation, or even of enclosing, would serve for the raising of birch, Scotch fir, and larches; and plantations of this kind would contribute both to the benefit of the proprietor and the public convenience. Draining is assiduously attended to in the west riding. Hollow draining is conducted in various modes; but that which seems to be considered as the best and cheapest, is to fill up the drain with pebbles, taking care that no mould is introduced amongst them, and to cover them with straw before the earth is drawn over them. Paring and burning the sward, at the first breaking up of old pasture lands, is in some places practised; but in others prohibited, unless with the consent of the proprietors. The advantages of this process seem to depend wholly on the nature of the soil. All sorts of manures are employed for fertilizing the land; bones, broken in a mill, are now very generally used for that purpose, especially in the southern parts of the riding towards Sheffield and Doncaster. Bones of all kinds are gathered with great industry, and vast quantities are brought both by land and water carriage from distant places. One of the greatest improvements that land can receive is by warping, where the situation is such as to admit of the process. This is done by letting in the tide upon lands adjoining to rivers, and lying below the levels of high water. The warp consists of the mud and salts deposited by the ebbing tide. Near the banks of the Ouse, one tide will leave an inch of mud. One piece of land, that was scarcely worth anything, was raised fourteen inches in the space of three years, and converted into excellent soil. By warping, the lands are so enriched that they will bring abundant crops for several successive years without any manure. They require to be kept in tillage for six or seven years before they are laid down; for the salts in the mud are highly inimical to all kinds of grass seeds. Warped land is extremely well adapted to wheat, beans, and oats; but it is too rich for barley, which it causes to grow coarse: it is also the best kind of soil for both flax and potatoes. A very considerable extent of moor-land adjoining to the new channel of the Don, commonly called the Dutch river, originally not worth five pounds per acre, has been so greatly improved by warping, that its value is increased more than a tenfold proportion. In regard to cattle, less attention has been paid to the breeds in this district, than in either of the other two ridings. The horses, in the middle and eastern districts are of a good size, and sufficiently strong for all the labours of husbandry; those employed

In the western parts are small, but hardy, and capable of enduring great fatigue. In those parts there are scarcely any horses bred for sale. The farmers and manufacturers breed a few for their own use, and endeavour to get such as they think the most suitable to their business. The horned cattle may be classed under three distinct heads:—First, the short-horned or Holderness breed, which prevails in the eastern parts of the riding;—second, the long-horned, or Craven breed, which are both bred and fed in the western parts;—and, third, a cross breed between the two above mentioned. Cows of the short-horned breed afford the greatest return of milk. But the long-horned breed give milk of a greater quality of butter. This also is a hardy sort of cattle, peculiarly adapted to the vicissitudes of a wet and precarious climate like that of Craven. The mixed breed is the most common in Niddersdale and the adjacent country. Cattle of this breed are both handsome and useful. They are somewhat inferior to the Holderness cows in regard to the quantity of milk; but they are much hardier, and more cheaply maintained, and sooner made ready for the butcher. Besides these breeds, which properly belong to the county, there are immense numbers of Scotch cattle, which, being fed in this district, are sold to the butchers. The sheep in this riding are of many different breeds, which, in most parts, have been so often crossed, as to confound all distinction. But of late years considerable attention has been paid to the improvement of this important part of the farmer's stock, by introducing a mixture of the Leicestershire breed. The sheep bred upon the western moors, which seem to be a native breed, are horned, light in the fore-quarter, hardy, and good thrivers; and when brought down at a proper age, into the pastures of the low country, they are soon fed, and make excellent mutton. The Craven sheep seem to be of the same kind, but much larger, as most of the mountains in that rugged district are covered with a sweet grass. They are all horned, and have generally black faces, with long legs, and are well made for exploring a district where hill rising upon hill seems to forbid all access to animals not endowed with a very great proportion of agility. Upon the waste commons, scattered here and there in many parts of this riding, the sheep are often the most miserable looking animals that can any where be seen, except on the eastern moors, to the westward of Whithy. This is often the case, even where the land is of the best quality; for as a great part of the sheep belong to poor people, and are in small lots, they cannot be improved; and in unstinted commons, they serve only to starve whole flocks. A considerable degree of attention is given to the management of the roads, many of which, in the manufacturing parts of the country, have foot paths on the sides. These are in most places paved, in others raised with broken granite, fine gravel, or sand. The numerous waggons, however, pass on several of these roads, cut them very much in winter, and render it difficult to keep them in repair, especially where they are at any great distance from good materials. This district is well supplied with inland navigation. Most of the large manufacturing towns have either a navigable river or a canal; and the whole riding is thus connected between Liverpool, Leeds, and Hull.

Climate, &c.—The climate of the north riding admits of a considerable variety, the natural consequence of the different elevation of various parts of the county, and other topographical circumstances. In the vale of York the air is mild and temperate, except near the moors, where the influence of the winds from those mountainous regions is sometimes severely felt. The climate of the Howardian hills, from their greater elevation, and their vicinity to the eastern moors, is cold, and the corn rather later in ripening. Ryedale and the marishes on the skirt of the Derwent enjoy a mild air; but the dampness of these flats, and the want of a better drainage, render them less healthful than most other parts of this riding. The great altitude of the eastern moorlands renders their climate extremely cold, and presents an insuperable obstacle to their improvement. The highest parts of these moors are 1444 feet above the level of the sea, an altitude, which, between the latitudes of 54° and 55°, is greatly above that at which corn will ripen. At an elevation of about 600 feet the crop becomes extremely uncertain; that, indeed, may be reckoned the greatest height at which wheat will grow, with any chance of repaying the husbandman for his labour; and there the grain will prove very light, and about a month later in ripening than at the foot of the hills. Between six and seven hundred feet may be reckoned the maximum of elevation for any other grain. Little corn, therefore, except oats and ling, are sown in the higher parts of the dales that penetrate these moorlands, and it frequently happens that the crops are still in the field when the ground is covered with snow. The vale of Cleveland having these moorlands on the east and south-east, the sea to the north and north-east, and lying open on the west to the winds, from an extensive and mountainous country, has a climate somewhat severe; but the dryness of the soil, and the frequent use of lime, concur to accelerate the harvest, which is nearly as early here as in the warmer parts of this riding; the same remark may be made on the narrow tract, which lies along the coast from Whithy to Scarborough. The climate of the western moorlands is colder than that of the eastern moorlands; although the former soil is more favourable to vegetation in consequence of their calcareous composition. The western moorlands being much more elevated than the eastern, and not like them exposed to the sea air, remain longer covered with snow, and are far more subject to rain. In Yorkshire, as well as in all the counties bordering on the German ocean, the east winds usually predominate in the spring, and during a great part of the summer, as do the west winds in the western parts of the island. Some variation of climate exists in the east riding, it being colder on the eastern than on the western side of the wolds, which break the force of the cold and raw winds from the German ocean. Near the coast the country is exposed to fogs from the sea and the Humber; on the wolds the air is much sharper, and the snow lies longer by reason of their elevation. The levels in the western part of the riding enjoy a milder climate, by being sheltered from the easterly winds. The climate of the west riding is as various as its surface; a circumstance naturally arising from the diversity of situations. In the eastern parts, towards the banks of the Ouse, the climate, as well as the face of the country, resembles that of the east riding on the opposite side of the river; and damps and fogs are somewhat prevalent. In the middle district the air is sharper, clearer, and considered as more healthful. And in the western parts the climate is cold, tempestuous, and rainy. At Sheffield the average gauge of rain is thirty-three inches; being about a medium between the quantities that fall in Lancashire and on the eastern coasts of the kingdom. Blackstone-edge, and the mountains of Craven, are the most foggy, rainy, and stormy districts in England; although from the frequent high winds which purify the atmosphere, and keep it in a state of agitation, the climate is reckoned salubrious to sound constitutions, and the inhabitants have a robust and healthful appearance. The face of the country, along the coast from Scarborough to Cleveland, is hilly and bold, the cliff being generally from sixty or seventy to a hundred and fifty feet high. Stoupe Brow, vulgarly called Stow Brow, which is on the coast, at the distance of fourteen miles from Scarborough, and about seven from Whitby, rises to the stupendous height of 893 feet. From the cliff, the country rises in most places very rapidly to the height of 300 or 400 feet; and a little farther inland successive hills, rising one above another, form the elevated tract of the moorlands. The soil along the coast is almost every where a strong clay; and the sloping position from the moors towards the sea renders the climate stormy and cold. Beyond the narrow strip of land on the coast is that wild and mountainous tract called the eastern moorlands; these occupy a space of about thirty miles in length, from east to west, by fifteen in breadth, from north to south, and are penetrated by a number of beautiful and fertile dales. "The surface of some of the higher hills is entirely covered with large free stones; on others beds of peat, which in many places are very deep, (frequently not to be passed, and never without danger), extend themselves to a great distance, the produce of which is always ling, but in some places mixed with bent and rushes. Near to the old enclosures some considerable tracts of loam and sandy soil producing furze, fern, here called brackens, thistles, and coarse grass, with but little ling, are to be met with. But wherever ling is the chief produce, the top soil is invariably black moor or peat, of a finer texture than in the boggy parts. In the sub-soil is considerable variety; in some places a yellowish, in others a reddish clay occurs; a loose, red freestone, upon either a rock or clay, is very common; in some places a kind of rotten earth, inclining to peat, and also a hard cemented reddish sand, and a grey sand are found. The basis of all this district is invariably a freestone. The western end of these moorlands, which is called Hamilton, is very different from those above described; it is generally a fine loamy soil upon a limestone rock, producing large quantities of coarse grass and bent; in some parts, particularly towards the south-east points, mixed with some ling. The uncultivated dales, situated amongst these moors, are pretty extensive, some of them containing from 5000 to 10,000 acres, and Eskdale and Blisdale much more; the level land, at the bottom of the dales is seldom more than 200 or 300 yards in breadth; but the land is generally cultivated from half a mile, to a mile and a half up the hills, though the surface is in many places very irregular. Most of the dales partake more or less of the following soils:—A black, moory earth upon a clay; a sandy soil, in some places intermixed with large gritstones, upon a shale; and a light loam upon a grit-rock. In the neighbourhood of Harkness, on the eastern parts of the moors, we find in some instances, on the sides of the hills, a somewhat stiff loam upon limestone, and a deep sandy loam upon a whinstone; in the bottoms a light loam upon gravel or freestone." The interior parts of these moorlands present a bleak and dreary aspect. The whole country is destitute of wood, except in the dales, where a few dwarfish trees may be seen among the scattered habitations. In the roads leading from Whitby to Guisborough, Stokesley, and Pickering, the traveller, after proceeding a few miles, meets with no living object, except a few small and miserable looking sheep, wandering, half-starved, through extensive wastes, where the view is bounded only by the horizon, and sees himself surrounded with a vast solitude, so lonely as to excite the idea of seclusion from human society. Some of the hills, however, near the edges of this rugged and mountainous region, command picturesque and extensive prospects. In descending the Blue bank, on the Pickering road, about five miles before we reach Whitby, we have a most delightful view of a finely variegated and well cultivated district, covered with rich enclosures, and embellished with neat farm houses and elegant villas, scattered in every direction. The beautiful vale of Eskdale bursts upon the view, and for the space of four miles displays to the eye all its various windings, while the venerable ruins of Whitby abbey form a conspicuous and striking object in the picture, which has for its back ground an extensive prospect of the German ocean. The hills on the southern edge of the moors afford a view of Ryedale, the Howardian hills, and the wolds in the east riding. Various points of the Hamilton hills command extensive views over the vale of York, as far as the western moors. Toward the north-west, the hills and declivities, especially near Upleatham, Whorlton, and Arncliffe, afford delightful prospects into the level parts of Cleveland. But the most remarkable object in this rugged district is the peaked mountain, called Roseberry Topping. By its detached position and superior elevation, it commands in all directions a prospect at once extensive and interesting, and serves as a land mark to navigators. The summit of this pyramidal hill, which rises near the village of Newton, and about a mile to the east of the road from Guisborough to Stokesley, is found by accurate admeasurements, to be elevated 1488 feet above the level of the sea. The base of this mountain is composed of immense masses of alum rock, which extends to a depth unexplored, and when decomposed by exposure to the air, excludes almost all vegetation by the ferruginous particles which it contains. Iron-ore is also contained in this and other Cleveland mountains; sometimes in detached pieces, but more frequently in a regular stratum, from six to fourteen inches thick, extending from east to west, in a line parallel to the horizon; but the strata here are found to dip to the south, which is a proof that they are not in the same position in which they were originally formed, but have been thrown up by one of those great convulsions of nature, which caused the uneven surface of the earth. About half way up the side of the hill, above the village of Newton, there is a large laminated rock, which consists of a friable and indurated ferruginous or ochre clay, of a gritty texture, and contains an innumerable quantity of petrified shells and other marine substances, such as are common in the northern seas. These petrifications are bivalves, chiefly of the cockle and oyster kinds; the former are in a good state of preservation. Besides these, jet, and pieces of petrified wood, are sometimes discovered; and also trachite, or thunderbolts, as they are vulgarly called, in great numbers; which are conical stones of various sizes, from two to five or six inches long, and from half an inch to an inch and a half in diameter at the base, and are found sticking in pieces of the rock in a confused manner, and in different directions. The vale of Cleveland is lightly interspersed with hills, and the soil is generally a clay; in some places a clayey loam prevails, and in others a fine, red, sandy soil. From the tenacity of its clays, Baxter supposes Cleveland to have derived its name, although Camden deduces it from the cliffs towards its eastern and southern extremities. The popular distich,—

"Cleveland in the clay Bring two soles, and carry one away," evidently alludes to the soil. The extensive vale of York is not confined within any determinate boundaries, but rather marked out by the face of the country. Mr Tuke considers it to begin at the Tees, and to extend to the southern borders of the county. This vale, from the river Tees, has a general slope, though interrupted by some irregularities of surface, and some bold swells, as far as York, where it sinks into a perfect flat. The northern part of this tract has the moorlands on each side, except where it opens into Cleveland, or is separated from Ryedale by the Howardian hills, 'till it approaches within ten miles of York; it then acquires a greater breadth by extending itself into the east riding, where it is bounded by the wolds on the east, and extends southward as far as the Humber. The vale of York, therefore, must be considered as comprising no small part of the east and west as well as the north riding, and extending from north to south quite through the middle of the county. This division of Yorkshire, although it displays a great variety of aspect, is far less conspicuously marked with the bold features of nature than the other parts of the county. But if it contains no scenery that can be truly called romantic, some parts of the riding are beautifully picturesque, and afford very extensive and even magnificent prospects, especially where the sea or the Humber enters into the view. From its topographical appearance, it may be considered as three different districts: the wolds, which are lofty ranges of hills, extending almost from the northern to the southern borders of the riding; and the two level tracts which lie to the east and the west of that elevated country. The level tract along the coast may be said to begin at Filey, the northern limit of the east riding. As far, however, as Bridlington, the face of the country is beautifully diversified with lofty swells, and the wolds, in places, extend to the coast, which, near the villages of Specton, Bampton, and Flamborough, rises in cliffs of 100 or 150 yards in perpendicular height. At Bridlington the country sinks into a flat, which continues for eight or nine miles to the southward, with hardly any variation. About five miles to the south of Bridlington begins the wapentake of Holderness, the eastern parts of which, toward the sea coast, is a richly variegated country; the western edge is a fenny tract of about four miles in breadth, extending nearly twenty miles in length to the banks of the Humber. The southern part of Holderness also falls into marshes, bordering on that vast river or estuary; and the county terminates in a point at Spurnhead, the "ocellum promontorium" of Ptolemy. In almost every part of Holderness the views are enlivened by a prospect of the Yorkshire, and in some places of the Lincolnshire wolds, one or the other of which, and sometimes both, make a beautiful appearance from every elevation. The wolds are a grand assemblage of chalky hills, extending, as already observed, nearly from the northern to the southern extremity of the east riding. The ascent to them is somewhat steep, except on the eastern side, where they rise in gentle and successive swells, presenting a beautiful aspect towards the flat country. But their height, which in the most elevated parts is supposed not to exceed 600 feet, is inconsiderable when compared with that of the eastern; and more especially of the western moora in the north, and the hills of Craven in the west riding. Many parts, however, of the wolds, afford magnificent and delightful prospects. The extent of the district called the wolds is variously estimated; that part called the north wolds, which may be considered as terminating in a line drawn from Driffield to Pocklington, has been computed at about 307,000 acres; but, in taking its whole extent to its southern extremity, 400,000 acres will not seem too high a calculation. The surface is generally divided into easy extensive swells and plains, with many intervening deep dales and valleys. The soil is commonly a free and rather light loam, with a mixture of chalky gravel. The third natural division of the east riding extends from the western foot of the wolds to the boundaries of the north and west ridings. This tract of land, which is commonly called the levels, is every where flat and unpicturesque; the country is overspread with villages and hamlets, and is extremely dirty and disagreeable. The face of the country in the west riding is very irregular; but in general terms, it may be divided into three large districts, gradually varying from a level and marshy, to a rocky and mountainous region. The flat and marshy part of the riding lies on the eastern side along the banks of the Ouse, and extends to the westward, in some places to a greater, and in others to a less distance, but, generally, to within three or four miles of an imaginary line, drawn from Doncaster to Sherborne. The middle part, as far to the westward as Sheffield, Bradford, and Otley, rises gradually into hills, and is beautifully variegated. Further to the west the surface becomes rugged and mountainous. Beyond Sheffield scarcely any thing is seen but black moors; which running north-west, unite with the lofty hills of Blackstone-Edge, on the borders of Lancashire; and the western part of Craven presents a confused heap of rocks and mountains, among which Pennygiant, Warnside, and Ingleborough, are particularly conspicuous, the two last being considered as the highest hills in either England or Wales; not excepting even Skiddaw Hellwelyn, or Snowden. Amidst the hilly and mountainous tracts of this riding, however, are many romantic valleys, presenting the most beautiful scenery. The most extensive of these are Netherdale, watered by the Nid; Wharfedale, and the vale of the Aire, which in many places afford views the most delightful that can be imagined.

Minerals, &c.—In the north riding the minerals consist chiefly of the alum mines, on the coast of Whitby, and the lead mines in Swaledale and the neighbouring valleys. About the middle of the last century, copper of very fine quality was produced near Middleton-Tyas, but the works have been for some years discontinued: veins of this metal are supposed to lie scattered in various parts of the western moorlands. Copper was also discovered about thirty years ago at Richmond, in a gentleman's garden near the bridge; but it does not appear that the discovery has ever tended to any profitable result. The same observation applies to the ironstone, which is found in the east moorlands in great quantities. An inepitimus, dated at York, the 26th of February, 1328, the second year of Edward III. recites a grant made on the 16th of August, 1209, by Robert de Stuteville of a meadow in Rosedale to the nuns of that place, excepting only his forge, affords proof that iron was worked in Rosedale early in the 13th century. The huge heaps, also, of iron slag, and the remains of the ancient works, with the appearance of the hearths where charcoal has been burned, show that wood has abounded here more than at present, and that iron has been wrought on a large scale in several of these dales. Ayton is the only place in the north riding where forges have been established in modern times, and even these have now totally disappeared from the difficulty of procuring fuel. There are also some beds of ironstone in the vicinity of Whitby; but the produce is carried to the works in the north. Freestone or grit, of an excellent quality for building, is found in many parts of this riding, particularly on Gatherley-Moor, near Richmond, at Ranton, near Boroughbridge, and several other places; but one of the best quarries is about four miles south-west of Whitby, where an excellent specimen is seen in the large and fine stones used in the construction of the pier. It has already been observed that the western moorland consists almost wholly of limestone, which also abounds in the Hambleton and Howardian hills. A long but narrow ridge, producing lime of a quality peculiarly excellent for agricultural purposes, extends along the edge of the eastern moorlands; for at least 30 miles in length marble of various kinds, some resembling, and others superior in closeness of texture and distinctness of colours, to that of Derbyshire, is found in many parts of the western moorlands, but is converted to no other purposes than those of making lime or repairing the roads; and in some places, towards the north-western extremity of the riding, large blocks of a light granite, much resembling that of the ancients, lie scattered over the face of the country, but are not converted to any use. Various parts of this riding produce coal, particularly the plain between Easingwold and Thirsk, but the quantity is small and the quality bad. Being heavy, sulphureous, and burning to white ashes, the coals of this riding are scarcely fit for any other use than the burning of lime. The greater part of the north riding is therefore supplied with coals from the county of Durham; and many persons who can keep a horse and cart gain a living by furnishing that supply. One horse and a cart will bring from three to four quarters of coals; and those who follow this business assert, that any number of single horses with small carts will draw a greater weight than the same horses yoked in pairs or fours, or in a team with a larger vehicle. The single-horse carts are seen in great numbers in Leeming Lane and the other roads in this riding; and the coal, advancing in price in proportion to distance, is in many places excessively dear. A correspondent of Mr Tuke observes, that "the inhabitants of this riding in general are extremely hurt by the expensive land carriage of coals from the county of Durham. The produce of their lands is continually wasted upon the public roads, and a vast sum of money annually expended in their repairs, which otherwise would be laid out in local improvements; and agriculture suffers severely by the frequent absence of our servants and horses." In the east riding chalk is the principal fossil substance. Near the coast it extends from Hemsle, on the banks of the Humber, its southern extremity to Keighton, 10 miles south of Scarborough, its northern boundary. The chalk rocks always contain large quantities of water, which may be had by boring or sinking, even at a considerable distance from the hills. Many large springs break out along the eastern edge of the chalk, generally in the gravel which covers it. The river Hull is formed by the united waters of a number of these springs; and at Spring Head, from which the town of Hull is supplied with water, 240,000 gallons are raised daily; this water contains a small portion of carbonate of lime and iron, which are separated by exposure to the atmosphere in a course of three miles. The intermitting spring of Keldgate, near Cottingham, rises upon the gravel, but it is not far distant from the chalk. In the gravel beds on the chalk are found the remains of large animals, some of them in a state of great perfection; vertebræ, eighteen feet in length, and from eight to ten inches in diameter, have been dug up in these beds; and teeth, measuring eight or ten inches in circumference, are frequently discovered here. At Hull, the gravel depository of the animal remains is about ninety feet from the surface; and the workmen employed in boring for water near the north bridge, describe their tools to have smelt as if they had been cutting fish; so that it is probable not only the bones, but also the fleshy part of the animal remain. The coast from Spurn to Bridlington forms a section of all the beds above the chalk, and as it is not in the line of dip, two beds are generally seen at the same time. A bed of dark red clay commences at Kilnsea, containing rounded boulders, mixed with pebbles, both of which are composed of granite, gneiss, mica-slate, porphyry, grauwacke, quartz, mountain limestone, containing organic remains, all the sand stones and coal shales, coal, fuller's earth, chalk, and flint. In this bed the chalk pebbles are in the greatest quantity. The mineral productions of the west riding are of peculiar value, they create and supply the manufactures; they consist of coal, iron, and stone; and lead is extracted in great abundance from the mines of Grassington and Pately-bridge. The west riding, indeed, yields in geological interest to no equal space in the kingdom. In this portion of the island four clearly marked divisions present themselves.—First, on the east a great marshy district described by the appropriate name of the 'Levels.'—Second, the range of magnesian limestone.—Third, the coal tract.—Fourth, the moorlands, and metalliferous limestone or mining district.—The Levels rest on the stratum of red sand and clay, with gypsum or alabaster in varying quantity. The sand rises in the vicinity of Snaith, Thorne, and Doncaster, above the general level, into low fertile hills. Their altitude above the sea seldom exceeds fifty feet. The great rivers

Ouse, Aire, and Don, which traverse this extensive tract, have often changed their channels, and, from the vast quantity of mud floating or suspended in them during the agitation of the tide, have rendered great service to agriculture, by the facility afforded to the profitable operation of warping. The magnesian limestone range is marked by peculiar features. Its surface is one great plain rising from beneath the Levels, and terminating toward the west in a regular, well defined edge, forming at once the limit of the horizon, and the partial summit of drainage. Its altitude seldom exceeds 400 feet from the sea. CHifton, near Rotherham, is thought to be the highest point in its course. It forms a narrow course of dry land in a northerly direction, from Tickil, by Doncaster, Ferrybridge, Wetherby, Knaresborough, and Ripon. The lime burnt from the laminated upper part is of great value as manure; that from the lower or freestone part is excellent for building. In the southern parts of Yorkshire is the great Yorkshire and Derbyshire coal field, which rivals, or even surpasses in importance, that of Northumberland. This coal field occupies an area nearly triangular, but with a truncated apex, the base or broadest part being at the northern extremity, and the apex or narrowest at the southern; its greatest length, which is from north to south between Leeds, in Yorkshire, and Nottingham, is above 60 miles. Its greatest breadth, from east to west, which is in the Yorkshire portion, is about 22 miles. Like the Northumberland coal field its strata range from north to south; dipping to the east, where they sink beneath the super-strata of magnesian limestone, and rise to the west and north-west, in which directions the lowest measures at length crop out against the rocks of the millstone grit series, which constitute the higher ridges of the Pennine chain. This tract includes a great number of alternations of sandstone, clay, shale, coal, and ironstone, and occupies the most populous part of the west riding. It is characterized by successive parallel ranges of high ground, whose longest general course is nearly north and south. These hills are most abrupt towards the west, while on the east they decline more gradually, one beneath another, and all beneath the magnesian limestone range, which among practical colliers is vaguely asserted "to cut off the coal." The minute varieties in this extensive tract are innumerable; it may be sufficient to notice the more prominent features in their order of super-position. Beneath the magnesian lime and its subjacent sand appear the blue shale and thin coal of the vale of Went, succeeded by the grit freestone of Ackworth and Kirby. Beneath occur the swift burning coals of Wragby, Shafton, Crofton, and other places in the great clay district of the Dearn below Barnsley, and of the Calder below Wakefield. These various measures rest upon the coarse grit freestone of Rotherham, Barnsley, Newmillar Dearn, and East Ardsley. Coal pits are sunk through it near Barnsley, to several thick seams of hard furnace coal, one of them 10 feet thick. The next great rock forms high ground, and frequently projects beyond the general range into detached hills. It occurs near Sheffield, Westworth park, and Bretton park, forming the high ground of Horbury and Dewsbury, and of Middleton near Leeds. Beneath are the valuable beds of ironstone, which are characterized by abundance of muscle shells, found near Rotherham, Haigh-bridge, Low-moor, and several other iron-works. Contiguous to the ironstone lie several veins of excellent coal.

These soft strata, where they occur in steep banks under the preceding rock, are often covered with woods. Still lower in the series lies the rock of Wortley chapel, Silkston, Elmley, and Whitby hall, with the valuable bituminous coals of Yorkston and Florkton, the best seams of the Yorkshire series. This rock, characterized by the smooth plain surfaces which it forms, enters the west riding from Derbyshire, and passing by Sheffield, Penistone, Huddersfield, Eiland-edge, and Clayton heights, returns in a course parallel to the Aire river by Idle and Chapel Allerton toward the magnesian limestone. The stone of this part of the district has long been held in celebrity. The Bramley Fall and the Park Spring stone is the best in England for ornamental purposes. Though easily worked when taken from the quarry, it indurates by exposure to the air and becomes almost incorrodible by time; immense quantities of it are now conveyed to London and to the most distant provinces of the kingdom. In this part of the series near Sheffield, Bradford, and Leeds, is dug the galliard stone, so much in request for the roads. Characterized by its irregular texture, and numerous quartz pebbles, and a tendency to form crags, this rock, with soft alternations above and beneath, occupies the wide and barren moors west of Sheffield, Penistone, Huddersfield, Bradford, Otley, Harrogate, Ripley, and Masham. Yet in lower ground good soil often covers its decomposing blocks. It is a most durable building stone, and great quantities are annually sent down the rivers Don and Aire. Proofs of its imperishable quality may be seen in two of the finest abbeys in Yorkshire, Kirkstall and Fountain, both constructed wholly of this stone. The mining district is, in some parts of the north, exceedingly variable in features, occupying either high or low ground, producing or not producing metallic ores. In the west riding it is chiefly confined to lower ground than the moors of the mill grit, and to the vales by the large rivers, which derive from it much of their fertility. The greatest extent of this limestone series is in Craven, where ores appear far less abundant than in the vales of the Nid and Wharfe. In Craven the series consists almost exclusively of limestone, without those numerous and clearly marked alternations of grit and plate, so useful to the miners of the northern dales. Wharfedale, Ingleborough, and Penin-gant, and other lofty mountains, which, on the western verge of Yorkshire, become part of the summit ridge of the island, though their tops are crowned with coal measures, derive much of their altitude from a limestone base. Hongill fells, on the western boundary, consist of the blue slate rock of Westmoreland, which has received from some eminent mineralogists the name of Grauwacke slate. This district has peculiar features, and rises suddenly from under the limestone of Wild Boar fell, to a height scarcely inferior to the loftiest points of the coal and limestone series—with this single exception, the limestone series are the lowest strata, or general base of the county. The general divisions before adverted to are so clearly defined by nature, as to admit of a lucid description, and a pretty correct estimate of the spaces of surface they severally occupy. The general inclination of the various strata which occur in this wide division, is toward some point near the east, or as the colliers express it, toward the "six, nine, ten, or eleven o'clock sun." There are, however, many partial declinations to all the other parts of the compass; of these local 'dips,' the most prevailing is that towards the south. This may be observed to affect all the strata near Leeds, in their eastward course to the magnesian limestone, near Abberford, and it is thought that the southern dip carries the coal-measures quite under that limestone, to an unknown extent, thereby shrouding that valuable series from the research of the collier, until past the river Tees, on the northern verge of the county.

Rivers.]—We have been thus far particular in noticing the various peculiarities of the different ridings; but in describing the rivers it will be necessary to take the whole county, as some of the principal of them bound, though few of them intersect, those provincial divisions. The Tees rises in the mountains of Westmoreland, and, taking an easterly direction, divides the north riding of Yorkshire from the county of Durham, through its whole extent. It is navigable for ships of 60 tons burden up to Stockton; but the channel is serpentine and intricate, and the current rapid. Next in geographical position is the Swale, which, rising in the western extremity of the same riding, waters the romantic tract called Swaledale; and passing by Richmond and Catterick, enters the vale of York, and flows in that level country till it receives the Wiske, a small river, which, rising near Osmotherley, at the foot of the moors, on the western edge of Cleveland, takes, first a northerly, then a westerly direction; and afterwards, turning its course to the south, runs a little to the west of Northallerton and Thirsk, and falls into the Swale below Topcliffe. The Swale, after having received this addition to its waters, continues its course till it joins the Ure at Myton, a few miles below Boroughbridge. The Ure, rising in the same mountainous region, at Lady's Pillar, between Yorkshire and Westmoreland, and within five miles of the source of the Swale, after collecting many tributary streams in its course through the romantic vale of Wensley, becomes a boundary between the north and west ridings, three miles below Masham, till it reaches the vicinity of Ripon; and having received the Swale at Myton, continues its course to about six miles below Boroughbridge, where the united rivers take the name of the Ouse, from an insignificant rivulet with which they there form a junction. Then passing on to the village of Nun-Monkton, its waters are farther increased by those of the Nid, which, rising about the north-western extremity of the picturesque valley of Netherdale, through which it directs its course, passes by Pateley bridge, Ripley, and Knarborough. The Ouse thus augmented flows gently on to York, where it is joined by the Foss, a small stream which takes its rise near Craike castle, and not far from the western extremity of the tract of country called by Mr Young the Howardian hills. From York, the Ouse, with some considerable windings, takes an almost direct southerly course, and becomes the boundary between the east and west ridings. About 8 miles below York the Wharf, which rises at the foot of Craven hills and waters the beautiful district of Wharfedale, having passed by Otley, Wetherby, and Tadcaster, and crossed the west riding in a course of more than 50 miles, discharges itself into the Ouse at the village of Nun-Appleton. After this new accession to its waters, the Ouse flows south-east, with a smooth and broad stream, by Selby, and about four or five miles below that town directs its course nearly east, till it receives the Derwent. This river, rising in the eastern moorlands in the north riding, within about four miles of the sea, and eight or nine miles from Scarborough, at first takes a southerly direction through the romantic village of Hackness and along a most picturesque valley to Aytou, running in a line almost parallel to the coast, till it comes to the foot of the wolds. It then takes a west, and afterwards a south-west direction; and, having received the Rye from Helmsley, passes by the town of Malton, to which it is navigable from the Ouse for vessels of 25 tons. It is the boundary between the north and east ridings, from its junction with the small river Hertford, till it approaches near Stamford bridge, where it enters the east riding, within which it runs till it falls into the Ouse, near the village of Barnsley, about three miles and a half above Howden. After receiving the Derwent, the Ouse continues nearly south-east, and within less than a quarter of a mile of Booth-ferry is joined by the united Calder and Aire. This junction brings to the Ouse a great accession of waters. The Aire is one of the most considerable rivers in Yorkshire; it issues from the mountains of Craven, and glides with a smooth, slow, and serpentine course, nearly in a south-east direction, along the winding valley of Airedale, which is scarcely above a mile in breadth, but extends about thirty-five miles in length to Leeds. After affording the benefit of its navigation to that large manufacturing town, the Aire flows on to Castleford, near which place it receives the Calder. This stream, rising on the edge of Lancashire, takes an easterly direction, but makes an extremely tortuous course, leaving Halifax at the distance of no less than two miles to the north, and passing by Dewsbury to Wakefield, from whence it runs nearly north-east to Castleford. From that place the Aire, augmented by the influx of the Calder, holds an easterly course, without any great deviation, till, after passing within a very short distance of Snaith, it runs nearly north-east to its confluence with the Ouse, a little below Armin. After this junction the Ouse, running about two or three miles farther towards the south-east, receives the Don, which, rising in the western moors, beyond Pennistone, flows in a south-easterly direction to Sheffield, where it turns to the north-east, and passes by Rotherham, glides along a narrow but picturesque valley by Conisburgh and Doncaster; and then entering a flat country continues its course by Thorne, where, turning to the north, it runs in that direction to Rawcliffe bridge, and then north-east till it falls into the Ouse, at the village of Goolle. The Ouse, having now received all its Yorkshire waters, becomes as wide as the Thames at London; and, after making a circuit to the south, near Swinfleet, takes a north-easterly direction to its confluence with the Trent, from Lincolnshire. Here it takes the name of Humber, the Abers of Ptolemy, and becomes more than a mile in width; at Bromfleet it receives the little river Foulness, which has its source at Goodmanham, and passing by Market-Weighton, makes a circuitous tour to the west, but answers no purposes of navigation. The Humber, rolling eastward its vast collection of waters in a stream, enlarged to between two and three miles in breadth, washes the large and commercial town of Hull, where it receives the river of that name. A few miles below Hull, and opposite to Hedon and Paul, the Humber takes a direction south-east, and widening into a vast estuary of about six or seven miles in breadth, disembogues itself into the German ocean.

Manufactures.—The principal manufactures of Yorkshire are those of woollen cloth, flax, linen, cutlery, and cotton goods. These are chiefly carried on in the west riding. A sufficient account of the woollen manufacture will be found in the articles LEEDS, HALIFAX, HUDDERSFIELD, BRADFORD, and WAKEFIELD. Of the manufacture of cutlery, enough has been said under SHEFFIELD. The cotton trade is rising rapidly in this county, but is not confined to any particular district. The linen trade has long been the principal support of the population of Barnsley, and the flax trade employs an immense capital and a great number of work people in the neighbourhood of Leeds and Bradford. The other manufactures of the county are those of blankets, gloves, carpets, and hosiery.

Parliamentary Affairs.—This county sends six members to parliament, viz. two for each riding. The polling places for the north riding are,—York, Malton, Scarborough, Whitby, Stokesley, Guisborough, Romaldkirk, Richmond, Askrigg, Thirk, Northallerton, and Kirby-Moorside: those for the east riding,—Beverley, Hull, Driffield, Pocklington, Bridlington, Howden, Hedon, and Settrington; and those for the west riding,—Wakefield, Sheffield, Doncaster, Snaith, Huddersfield, Halifax, Bradford, Barnsley, Leeds, Keighley, Settle, Knarborough, Skipton, Pateley Bridge, and Dent.

Canals.—The canals of Yorkshire are chiefly in the west riding.—1. The Barnsley canal; from the Calder near Wakefield, to the Dearn and Dove canal near Barnsley; a distance of 15 m.—2. The Bradford canal; from Bradford to the Leeds and Liverpool canal at Windhill, 3 m.—3. The Dearn and Dove canal; from the river Don near Mexborough, to the Barnsley canal, 9 m.—4. The Huddersfield canal; from Huddersfield to the Manchester and Oldham canal in Lancashire, 19½ m.; it passes through a tunnel 3½ m. in length.—5. The Leeds and Liverpool canal begins at Leeds, and leaves the county near Colne, in Lancashire. The Calder and Hebble canal on the line of the river Calder from Wakefield to Halifax.—6. The Ramsden canal; from the Calder and Hebble navigation to the Huddersfield canal, 4 m.—7. The Rochdale canal; enters from Rochdale in Lancashire, and joins the Calder and Hebble navigation near Halifax.—8. The Stainforth and Keadley canal; partly in this county and partly in the Isle of Axholme, county of Lincoln, branches from the navigation of the Don at Fishlake near Stainforth, and terminates in the Trent at Keadley, 15 m. A railway is now in progress from Leeds to the Ouse at Selby, a distance of about 18 m.; another has been projected from Bridlington to York; another from York to the Leeds and Selby railroad; and another from Selby to Hull.

History.—The limits of this work prevent us from entering on an extended detail of the historical events of which Yorkshire has been the scene. The most important are already noticed in connexion with the places at which they occurred. The original inhabitants of this noble English province were the Brigantes, the most numerous and powerful of all the British tribes. Isurium Brigantium—now only an inconsiderable village, called Aldburgh, about half a mile distant from Boroughbridge—was their metropolis; but the whole extensive region, now divided into the counties of Durham, York, Westmoreland, Cumberland, and Lancashire, was reduced under the dominion of the Brigantine capital. The Brigantes made a vigorous resistance against the Romans, defending their towns with the most desperate valour; and it was not until after many bloody conflicts that they submitted to the power of the invaders; after which their country formed a Roman province called Maxima Cæsariensis. Under the Saxon octarchy, York formed part of the kingdom of Northumbria, and was the scene of constant anarchy and war. The most appalling event in the history of Yorkshire, which demands notice even in this limited account of it, was its almost utter devastation by William the Conqueror. That inhuman monarch, irritated by the revolt of the inhabitants, dispersed his armed retainers over the whole county, and commanded them to spare neither man nor beast, and to destroy the houses, the corn, the implements of husbandry, and whatever was essential to the support of life. One hundred thousand men, women, and children, were slain, and one of the most fertile regions in Britain was transformed into a desolate wilderness. The extreme point of political depression which Yorkshire reached, was in the reign of Edward II., when the population was either exterminated or expelled by the Scots. The era of the commencement of its manufacturing prosperity may be assigned to the middle of the 17th century. The particular history of the county will be found arranged under the head of the towns as they are mentioned in this work.

Antiquities.—The following account of the Roman antiquities of the county, is extracted from the work of Mr Grose:—"As to the Roman antiquities of this county there are many, and the farther you go north the more they abound. There are three Roman military ways from the north to the south of England, or inclining towards it; upon these the first, second, and tenth journey of Antoninus are made; the fifth, indeed, is almost the same as the second, for so far as it goes, with this difference only, that it begins from London and goes northward, whereas the others go from north to south. On the first, second, and fifth journey of Antoninus, we pass through the county of York; and as three military ways lead through the city of York, it shows the importance of it. They meet at Cataractonium, (now Merton, near Greta Bridge,) and keep the same track till they are passed York, making a kind of saltire. The reason Cataractonium (now Merton) is fixed on for the beginning, is because two grand roads fall in together there, one of which comes from Carlisle, the other from Northumberland, through Durham. The numbers of the Itinerary bring us to this place, if we reckon from the north to the north-west hither, or if we reckon from York hither through Ripon. The city of York is a place so indisputably Roman, and its name Eboracum so well established and agreed upon, that we may safely measure from thence to find the stations mentioned before and after it: Cataractonium must be the distance of 40 miles from York, and so it is, if we go by the way of Ripon. Merton-on-the-Tees and Greta we fix upon for that city. The military way from Merton towards the north seems to cross the Tees at Barnard-castle, of which there is no vestigia at present remaining, but on the Durham side it is visible, and leads towards Ebchester. This is universally allowed a military way, but by some supposed to lead from Bowes, which must be allowed to have Roman remains as of a villa, but not to be Lavatris, as hath generally been received. The exact distance from York agrees with the numbers of the Itinerary. Here are most visible remains of a city, and the name is properly fixed from the cataract upon the Tees. At Cataractonium, wherever it is, the two roads part, one of which goes for Carlisle, and the other for the bishopric of Durham. Merton, near Greta-bridge, being allowed the place, all the remaining difficulties vanish, and the mangled Itinerary will maintain its exactness.

"Let us proceed on southward to Isurium (our Ripon), 24 miles, as mentioned in the Itinerary. This road ascends the hill from Greta-bridge, pointing westward to avoid some boggy ground, then turns southward, and keeping its course up another hill to Galtrey moor. In the lane, where is a strong pavement to carry us over the narrow part of the boggy ground, the curious have entertained a thought that some part of the work is Roman, and in its most ancient form. Upon the moor nothing is observable but the straightness of the way, whatever agger there has been, it is now sunk and defaced. We go over Cattarack-bridge, and, about 8 miles from Ripon, we strike out of the present Boroughbridge road and go by Barnaston to Ripon. This place is in the fifth journey called Isurbrigantium, contracted very probably from Isurium-Brigantium; which place is supposed to have been the principal town of the Brigantes in the British times.

"But whether the military way from Ripon to York lay by Boroughbridge, is very much questioned. The Romans, who dealt but little in bridges, and forded wherever the water was fordable, would hardly pass the Urus or Ure twice, to come to Ripon from York, when they were under no necessity to pass it at all. They very probably might make a deflection towards Knaresborough, that they might fall into the way from Ripon to Calcaria or Helensford. They did not multiply ways, but chose a small circuit to come into the one already made.

"Notwithstanding the second journey carries us from Ripon to Helensford by the way of York, which was visited perhaps as the Roman place of arms, and the metropolis of the country, we have no reason to doubt but there was a nearer way between the two places, for common travellers.

"The falling into this nearer way for a few miles next to Ripon, may be the reason of the superfluous mile we have in the Itinerary, which calls the distance from York to Ripon 17 miles. We do not pretend to trace the vestigia of every military way, which has had so many years to efface it; but the road from York towards Knaresborough, where it parts from that leading to Boroughbridge, would tempt a stranger to take it for Roman, rather than the other with so many windings.

"Keeping the course of Antoninus's first journey to its termination, which is in this county, before we proceed to the southern stations of this county, we go from York to Derbeutio (or Aldby), upon the Derwent, 7 miles distant. From Camden's time to the present period, the antiquarians have agreed in fixing the station here. Aldby shows only the rubbish of a castle upon the eminence above the river, and probably there was no more than a fort here, the colony lying so nigh. It probably may be the Derwentio where the Prefectus numeri Derwentienensis was stationed, sub dispositione viri spectabilis ducti Britannie.

"The next station is Delgovitia (or Godmundham), 12 miles from Aldby. The road seems to fall in with the present road from York to Beyerley upon Newton-common, leaving Pocklington on the left. From hence we are to go to Prætorium, according to the Itinerary, 25 miles. This is the end of the first journey, beginning a limite. This station we take to be the same with Caria and Petuaria. Prætorium, according to the distance, seems to have lain upon the German ocean, and in all probability has long since been washed away. Hornsey upon the coast of the German ocean, has lost, we are assured, 12 miles, within 70 years past. It is hard to determine upon what part of the coast Prætorium stood, but if we take that for the military way which leads for Delgovitia through Beyerley, it points towards Aldborough, south of Hornsey. To view the rest of the stations of Yorkshire we must return to York, from whence are the two other branches of the military way, one leading by Doncaster to Littleborough, in Nottinghamshire upon the Trent, the other over the river Wharfe into Lancashire.

"The fifth journey of Antoninus hath Legesolium 21 miles from York, the eighth journey hath Lagecium at the same distance. The next station in both is Danum. It is not doubted but these different names belong to the same place, as Agelocum and Segelocum are allowed to be, and Magiovinium and Magioviniam, as Mancunium and Manucium.

"This station we call Doncaster; first, because the distance answers to York of 21 miles, and to Danum (or Littleborough) of 16 miles. Doncaster is universally allowed to be a station, and that it stands upon a military way. That branch which leads from York to Lancashire, according to the second journey, lies 7 miles from York, by the name of Calcaria (or Helensford).*

"This road, as it points to Lancashire, must pass the river Wharfe, and most probably is upon a pass of that river. The annotations upon Camden have laid down some good reasons to find it something higher than Tadcaster up the stream, about Helensford or Newton-Kyme. Indeed, there are some remains of a bridge, but it must be more modern than the time of the Romans. The name of Ford shows the river was formerly fordable; and, if any people, the Romans would use it as such; and the distance of seven miles suits better than with Tadcaster.

"The last station of this county is Cambodunum. Every one has placed it at Almsbury,† 6 miles from Halifax. The Romans had probably a fort here, as a security to their military way, and as a proper distance between

* Accurate and complete investigation has proved that Danum was on the site of Doncaster; Legesolium, or Lagecium, was on the site of Castleford; and Calcaria beyond all doubt was Tadcaster.—Ed.

† Cambodunum was not at Almsbury, but at Slack, near the new road from Huddersfield to Manchester.—Ed.

Calcaria and Mancunium; from the first place it is distant 20 miles, and from the other 18 miles, which is, the exact distance according to the Itinerary.

"This part will trace the second journey from its beginning to Cataractonium, or Merton, from whence we have continued it hither, and from hence it appears to have gone to Manchester."

The Saxon antiquities in Yorkshire are numerous, as interesting, and as distinct, as in any other province of the kingdom. At Berwick in Elmete, are the remains of an immense Saxon fortification, which was probably the most extensive and formidable in the kingdom, and which constitute what Camden called "the royal vill of the Northumbrian kings." At Osmundthorp are the remains of the "Villa Regia" of Bede. At Bardsey is another stupendous Saxon fortification, and the antiquities of the same nature at Dewsbury, at Hertshead, and other places, have long attracted the particular attention of historians and antiquarians.

The ecclesiastical antiquities of Yorkshire are among the most interesting in the kingdom. About 106 religious houses existed here, of which seven were alien priories. Many ruins still remain, the most important of which are the abbeys of St Mary at York, Fountains, Kirkstall, Roche, Selby, Byland, Rievaulx, and Whitby; the priories of Bolton, Bridlington, Kirkham, Knaresborough, Guisborough, Mountgrace, Watton, and Wykeham. The specimens of ecclesiastical architecture of ancient date are in many instances of exquisite beauty, such as in York cathedral, Beverley-Minster, Howden church, and the churches of Addle, Guisley, Halifax, Horton, Linton, Rotherham, Sherburne, Thornton, Bowes, Danby-Wisk, Kirkdale, &c. Of ancient fortresses we may note the castles of Cawood, Conisbrough, Harewood, Helmsley, Knaresborough, Malton, Musgrave, Pontefract, Pickering, Richmond, Scarborough, Sandall, Skipton, Skelton, Bolton, Tanfield, and Wressle.

The most important modern residences are Wentworth-house, the residence of Earl Fitzwilliam; Wentworth castle, of Wentworth Vernon, Esq.; Methley park, of the earl of Mexborough; Thundercliffe-Grange, of the earl of Effingham; Sandbeck park, of the earl of Scarborough; Newby hall, of Lord Grantham; Harewood house, of the earl of Harewood; Scarthington hall, of Lord Hawke; Allerton-Manleyver, of Lord Stourton; Hornby castle, of the duke of Leeds; Stanwick, of the duke of Northumberland; Castle-Howard, of the earl of Carlisle; Mulgrave castle, of Lord Mulgrave; Londesborough, of the duke of Devonshire; and Temple-Newsam, of the marchioness of Hertford.

Y O R K,

A city and county in itself, the capital of the county of the same name, in which it is locally situated. It is situated at the confluence of the rivers Ouse and Foss, near the centre of this great county, and in one of the most rich and extensive plains or valleys in England. It is nearly midway distant between London and Edinburgh, being 198 miles from the former, and 201 miles from the latter. The origin of York and the etymology of its name are equally involved in obscurity. Sir Thomas Widdrington and some others have conjectured, that a colony of Celts from the town of Evora in Portugal, or from Ebur in Spain, flying from the swords of the Carthaginians or Romans, or a colony of Eburones, a people who, in the time of Cæsar, inhabited the town of Liege, might have found their way into this country, and given to the place where they had fixed their habitation the name of Eborac, which, with a Latin termination, was changed into Eboracum. Leland and Camden consider the name as derived from its situation on the river Ure, or Eure, which now takes the appellation of Ouse, a river below Boroughbridge. In regard to its modern name of York, a similar variety of conjecture prevails. The most probable and obvious etymology seems to rest on Eure, the name of the river, and wic, the Saxon word for a place of refuge or retreat. If it could be proved that the river had formerly retained the name of Eure as low as the city, this derivation would appear unquestionable. Alcuin, a native of this city, who wrote in the latter part of the seventh century, says, "that York was built by the Romans." From the concurrent testimony of historians, Eboracum was not a municipium, but a colony. Between these two forms of Roman government there was an essential difference. A colony was always formed of Roman citizens; a municipium consisted of the natives of a conquered country made free, and enjoyed the same privileges as the city of Rome itself. Eboracum, however, although entirely a military colony, seems, like Rome, to have been governed both by military and municipal laws; for here was the prætorium, where the emperors sometimes sat in person, and from this chief tribunal gave laws to the whole empire. We may, therefore, regard Eboracum, or York, as the picture of Rome in miniature, and as possessing a just claim to the titles of "Britannici Orbis, Roma altera, Palatium Curie, and Prætorium Cæsaris," titles with which it is dignified by Alcuin. In the reign of the emperor Severus, a temple dedicated to Bellona, the goddess of war, was standing at York; and Camden remarks that Severus, on entering the city, being desirous to sacrifice to the gods, was met by an ignorant augur, who led him by mistake to this temple, which in those days was considered as ominous of the emperor's death. Drake believes this temple to have stood without Bootham bar; but in what exact situation none can tell. History is nearly silent respecting York, from the Roman period till the year 1137, in the reign of King Stephen; when a fire, occasioned by accident, spread so extensively as to burn down the cathedral, St Mary's abbey, St Leonard's hospital, 39 parish churches in the city, and Trinity church in the suburbs. This ancient and venerable city had now been gradually reduced from the metropolis of an empire, to the capital of an earldom. The limits of the district included under this term were, for a long time, co-extensive with the boundaries of Northumbria as a kingdom. At what precise period its various subdivisions were made cannot be easily ascertained. Alfred the Great is allowed to have portioned out the kingdom of England into shires; but if the northern part of the nation was subdivided into the present counties in his reign, the earldom of Northumbria appears, long after that time, to have embraced most of its original extent. The most authentic notice of York, at the period succeeding the Norman conquest, is to be found in Domesday-book. From this valuable record it evidently appears that the city was of considerable consequence and size, and worthy the rank of being the principal city of the north.

Civil Government.—The city of York is governed by a lord-mayor, a recorder, two city council, twelve aldermen, two sheriffs, seventy-two common-councilmen, and six chamberlains. Besides these are a number of citizens, who, having passed the office of sheriff, become part of the privy council, and with the lord-mayor, aldermen, and sheriffs, compose the upper house. They are called the 'twenty-four,' though they may be more or less than that number. The lord-mayor is chosen annually from amongst the aldermen who have not been twice mayor, or borne that office within six years, and are thought to be every way qualified to undertake the duty. The election takes place on the 15th of January, and the lord-mayor elect takes the necessary oaths, and enters upon his office on the 3d of the following month; a formal procession of the corporate body, with their subordinate officers, parade through the principal streets of the city. The mayor of York assumes the title of lord in all writings or speaking to him, the same as the mayor of London. This honour was bestowed on him by Richard II. Persons, of what quality soever, living or residing within his jurisdiction, must obey his mandate or summons on any complaint exhibited against them. The judge of assize sits on his right hand in the courts of justice, himself keeping the chair; neither does he drop the ensign of his authority to any but the king, or the presumptive heir to the throne. In council he has a casting voice; and in full senate no law nor act can be made without his concurrence. The next in dignity to the lord-mayor are the two sheriffs of the city, who are annually chosen on the 21st of September, in lieu of the three bailiffs formerly appointed, and in the same manner as the lord-mayor. The sheriffs have a double function, ministerial and judicial. By the first they execute all processes and precepts of the courts of law, and make returns of the same; and by the next they have authority to hold several courts of a distinct nature. They collect all public profits, customs and taxes of the city and county of the same, and have the charge of all prisoners for debt and misdemeanors, and are answerable to the king's exchequer for all issues and profits arising from the office. The usual fine for exemption from this office is 100 guineas. The recorder is, by virtue of his office, a justice of the peace and of the quorum. He sits at the lord-mayor's right hand as an assistant to him and the bench, and is chosen by the whole corporation; but he must be approved of by his majesty before he can enter on his office. The town-clerk is elected in the same manner as the recorder, and also the prothonotary, whose office is to attend the sheriffs' courts, and enrol their proceedings. This office, like that of the town-clerk, is of considerable trust. The common-councilmen are chosen out of the four wards, which take their names from the four gates of the city, viz. Bootham, Monk, Micklegate, and Walmgate. In the city of York were formerly held several courts, although the most ancient were the sheriffs' courts. They were three in number. The sheriffs' court for inquiry into all criminal offences against the common law, the county court to hear and determine all civil causes under 40s., and the court of common pleas held in order to determine any case whatever, cognizable in a court of common law. The three courts have now become consolidated, and are held weekly in the Guildhall. The court of Guildhall and the court of Hustings, held before the lord-mayor, are of great antiquity. In the latter, deeds, wills, &c. are enrolled. The last court worthy of notice is that for the conservation of the rivers Ouse, Humber, Wharfe, Derwent, Aire, and Don, both in the city and county of York, and in the adjoining one of Lincoln. The arms of the city of York are of great antiquity. Prior to the reign of William I. they were simply argent, a cross gules. The five lions or, with which the cross is now charged, it is said, were added by the conqueror, in memory of five heroic magistrates; viz. Sir Robert Clifford, Howngate, Talbot, Lascells, and Errington, who had bravely defended the city against them, till famine obliged them to submit. The seal of the corporation is very handsome; it is of a circular form. The obverse has St Peter, with his keys, between two angels holding candles. Legend, S' B-L. PETRI. PRINCIPIS. APOSTOLIS. The reverse represents a fortified town, with a legend, SIGILLVM. CIVIVM. EBORACI.

Parliamentary Affairs.—This city sends two members to parliament. The ancient right of election was vested in the corporation and citizens; 3715 have been polled—about one-fourth of them non-resident. The number of new electors is 2140, and the two sheriffs are returning officers. The franchise was conferred upon York so early as 28d Edward I.

General Description.—York is divided into the wards of Micklegate, Walmgate, Monk, and Bootham; besides which are connected with it the liberty of St Peter, the king's manor, and the ainstey of the city. To each of these we shall devote a separate description. The ward of Micklegate embraces the principal entrance into the city, and all the south side of the river Ouse. Of the four great gates of the city, Micklegate bar is the most magnificent, and, previous to the destruction of the barbican, had a venerable appearance. It is a square tower, with a circular arch and embattled turrets at the angles. Each of these turrets are adorned with a stone figure in a menacing attitude. The lower parts are built of a grey stone of very coarse grit, whilst the upper walls and turrets are constructed of a fine white limestone, and the difference of style, as well as of materials, shows that the work is of two different periods. Drake, the historian of York, regarded the grit-stone as a certain indication of Roman architecture, and eagerly contended that the semicircular arches of Micklegate-bar were genuine remains of Roman work; in which opinion he was supported by the earl of Burlington. This was contradicted by James Essex the architect, and more fully refuted by Sir H. C. Englefield; indeed no person, who has attentively studied the peculiarities of ancient architecture, can fail to recognise the Norman style in these arches. Above the gate is a shield of arms suspended from a garter, and beneath is inscribed "Renovata A. D. MDCCXXVII." Higher on the building are the arms of old France and England, quarterly, between those of the city of York, all emblazoned in colours. Over each shield is a small Gothic canopy. Above the royal arms is a helmet, crested with a lion passant gardant, the whole gilt. These arms and crest were painted and gilt anew in 1827. On the city side are the arms of France and England, quarterly. Drake, in his Eboracum, (speaking of Micklegate-bar,) says, "It appears by a record in the pipe-office, that one Benedict Fitz-Engelram gave half a mark for license to build a certain house upon this bar, and sixpence annual rent for having it hereditary, the eighth of Richard I. But this does not ascertain the age of the present structure. Yet I observe the fleurs de lis in the royal arms are not confined to the number of three, which puts it out of doubt that they were placed there before Henry V.'s time, who was the first that gave that particular number in his bearing." The same writer says,—“The bar is strengthened by an outer-gate, which had a massy iron-chain that went across; then a port-cullis, and lastly a mighty strong double wooden gate, which is closed in every night at the usual hours. It has the character altogether as to ancient fortification, to be as noble and august a port as most in Europe. The inside was renewed and beautified anno 1716, when Mr Townes was lord-mayor, as appears by an inscription upon it.” The principal streets in this ward are the Micklegate and Skeldergate. The most important public buildings are the new gaol, and the new house of correction. The former is situated near the north side of Skeldergate postern, and is for the sole use of the city and ainstey. It is surrounded by a high brick wall, and the building is entirely of stone, erected on an elegant and extensive scale, reflecting much honour on the city, and on Mr Peter Atkinson, the architect and city steward. The erection, which commenced in 1802, was completed in 1807. The principal building consists of a centre and wings, the former finished with a pediment. On the roof of this building is an octagonal turret, with a hemispherical dome and vane. The outer wall encloses about three quarters of a square mile, and the entrance is by a neat porter's lodge. When any felon is to suffer death, scaffolding is erected without the wall, next to the Old Baile hill, near the front corner, and an opening is made in the wall to admit the culprit to pass through. The ground on which this prison stands, with that behind it, is supposed to have been the site of a very ancient castle, and is generally called the Old Baile. In ancient deeds and histories it is called Vetus Ballium, or Old Baile, signifying a place of security. The mound is ornamented with a small clump of trees, and its height and situation exactly corresponds with that on which Clifford's tower is erected, on the opposite side of the river. Not far north of Micklegate-bar formerly stood the church of St Nicholas; and near the site is an open piece of ground called Toft-field. By an ordinance still on the records of the city, dated 1451, it was then commanded that a weekly market for oxen, cows, hogs, and other animals, should be held on this ground every Friday, but in no other part of the city or suburbs. This has, however, been discontinued, and a public building, called the New House of Correction, now occupies part of the ground; the walls of this edifice form an octagon, and the governor's house and chapel is situated in the centre, with a building for the prisoners on each side, and one in the rear. All erected of a fine yellow brick. This building was designed by Mr Peter Atkinson of York, and erected by order of the magistrates of the city and ainstey: it was completed in 1814, under the joint direction of Messrs Atkinson and Phillips, architects. Prior to this time, an old building, on Peaseholme-green, was used for the purpose of a house of correction. The next object, worthy of notice in this ward, is Ouse bridge. Bridges of stone not being built till long after the Norman conquest, we find one here constructed of wood, in the year 1154, when William, archbishop of York, made his first entrance into this city. On this occasion such multitudes of people crowded on the bridge to meet him, that the timber gave way, and some of them were precipitated into the river. The stone bridge which stood until the erection of the present new fabric, was built about 1235. In the year 1564, there was a severe frost, and a heavy fall of snow, which being succeeded by a sudden thaw, an immense swell was occasioned in the Ouse. This flood drove down two arches of the bridge, when several lives were lost. The bridge remained in this ruinous state for nearly two years, when the late venerable structure was erected on the site of the old one. Amongst the contributors to this bridge, Lady Jane Hall, relict of Robert Hall, an alderman, gave by will the sum of £100; to perpetuate which, a brass-plate was placed by the city on the north side of the bridge, with the following curious inscription:—

William Watson, lord-mayor, An. Dom. 1865.
 By giving a hundred pounds this bridge for to renew.

The last old bridge consisted of five arches, and was termed by Camden a very noble erection; but the dimensions which he gave of the principal arch were incorrect. The width of the bridge on the top, between the walls, was six yards, including the causeways, which were very narrow. In addition to the carriage way and foot-paths, just described, were several buildings, on the west side of the bridge. The principal of those was St William's chapel. At the Reformation this chapel contained several chantries, the original grants of which are still amongst the records of the city. After the Reformation, we are informed that it was converted into an exchange, where the society of Hamburg merchants of York assembled every morning for the transaction of business. At length, in the year 1810, this chapel, which was a fine specimen of Norman architecture, was removed. The precarious state in which the old bridge had long been considered, induced the corporation of York to take the subject into serious consideration, in the autumn of 1808; and it was concluded that a new bridge, or a considerable alteration and addition to the old one, had become necessary. To defray the expense, a foot-toll was proposed by some, as one means of revenue; but this being opposed, the idea was abandoned, on condition that £8000 should be raised by voluntary subscription, which was soon effected. Mr P. Atkinson was unanimously chosen by the corporation, as architect of the new bridge, and arrangements were accordingly made. Houses in the vicinity of the bridge were purchased and taken down, and Tuesday, the 27th of November, 1810, was fixed upon for laying the foundation stone of the structure. A grand procession was intended on the occasion, and preparations were made; but the river having risen very rapidly that morning, the design could not then be carried into effect. On Monday morning, the 10th of the following month, the corporation assembled in the guildhall, and being joined by the provincial grand lodge of freemasons, proceeded to the ground where the ceremony was to take place. Mr Atkinson, the architect, then presented to the lord-mayor a plan and drawing of the intended bridge. After the usual formalities, his lordship proceeded to lay the stone, in which he deposited the different and latest current coins of that reign, with a handsome medal, struck in commemoration of his majesty having entered the fifty-first year of his reign. The purchasing of houses, commencement of the bridge, and various other expenses, soon incurred a debt of nearly £30,000. To redeem such a sum, and defray succeeding expenses, by the bridge toll alone, would have been almost impossible; it was therefore proposed to have a toll at each entrance to the city; but this was warmly opposed, and soon relinquished. The rates of the city, ainstey, and county, were then represented, as the most proper source for assistance; and, after much opposition, an act of parliament was ultimately procured for that purpose by a coalition of many of the contending interests; and commissioners were appointed to carry the measures into effect. The act specified, that £30,000 should be paid to the commissioners by the justices of the peace, for the three ridings of the county, out of the county rates, by five equal yearly instalments of £6000, the first of which should be paid on the 1st of December, 1815, and the other on the first of each succeeding December;—the west riding paying £2,787 10s.; the north riding £1,862 10s.; and the east riding £1,350, being the usual proportions of all their county contributions. The commissioners had likewise the power, if they chose, of demanding a sixth annual sum or instalment, of £6000, from the three ridings, in the same proportions. The act also obliged all distant districts to pay a small rate. In addition to these payments, the lord-mayor and commonalty of the city were obliged to contribute, for the same period, the annual sum of £400. The bridge consists of three elliptical arches, with a battlement on each side of a plain parapet wall, breast high; the span of the centre arch is 75 feet, and the rise 22 feet 6 inches; the span of each side arch 65 feet, and the rise 20 feet; soffit of the arches 43 feet; and the total width of the bridge, within the battlements, 40 feet. The flagged footways are each 5 feet 6 inches broad, leaving a carriage way of 29 feet. At each end of the bridge on the south-east side, a handsome series of steps leads down to the staiths, or wharfs, for landing and unloading of goods, &c. The whole bridge was completely finished in March, 1820, and, by a singular coincidence, during the second mayoralty of Mr Alderman Peacock, who laid the first stone. The toll, which had been peculiarly obnoxious, and indeed injurious to the city, was finally abandoned on June 18th, 1829. The ward of Walmgate lies at the opposite end of the bridge from Micklelegate ward. The street, at the end of the bridge, is called Low Ousegate. It is open, and contains some good houses. At the east end of the bridge commences the king's staith, a convenient strongly walled quay, for lading and unloading of goods. Being out of repair, it was raised, and new paved, in 1774. Here is the castle, which is extra-parochial. Previous to the alterations now in course of execution at the castle, a stone, with the city arms carved thereon, might have been seen within twenty yards of the gates, or entrance to the court-yard of the castle. They were thus placed to mark the boundary of the city; and on the opening of the assizes, the sheriffs of York waited here to receive the judge, and accompany him to the guildhall. The exterior of this prison has now a very imposing appearance; the great gate of entrance, which is pointed, is flanked by the massy circular towers, with embattled parapets, loopholes, &c. Over the doorway, in a small panel, are the royal arms of George IV., carved in imitation of those of the period of Edward IV. Above are machicolations and battlements. From the top of this structure rises a subordinate square building, with small turrets at the angles. The whole has a very bold, yet chaste appearance. The walls, which circumscribe a large area, inclosing Clifford's tower and the old gaol, are rebuilding in a style uniform with that of the gateway, having numerous buttresses at regular intervals, with an embattled parapet. The gatehouse, which is fire-proof, was erected from the designs of P. F. Robinson, Esq., F. S. A.; the first stone having been laid on March 20th, 1826, by the Hon. M. Langley, high sheriff. The interior of the left hand tower is fitted up for a record-room, the offices of clerk of indictments, clerk of arraigns, and clerk of assize. The right hand tower is the porter's residence. A semicircular walk leads to the present entrance to the castle; on the left this walk abuts on the mound of Clifford's tower, which is protected by a massy wall of stone, sloping with the declivity of the mound. The entrance to the yard, until lately, was by folding doors and a porter's lodge, from Castlegate: the interior walls are 1100 yards in circumference, inclosing a pleasant and open area of about one acre, with a large grass plat in the centre, and a gravel walk entirely round it. The whole of the buildings, the area, and Clifford's tower, and the outer walls, cover nearly eight acres. The buildings are three in number, occupying three sides of the yard. The county-hall stands on the west of the entrance. This part of the castle, built at the expense of the county in 1673, and rebuilt by the same means in 1777, is a handsome erection of the Ionic order, 150 feet in length, and 45 feet in breadth. Here the business of various courts is transacted throughout the year, and the assizes for the county are held in March and July, or the beginning of August. For these occasions there is a court at the south end for the trial of criminal offenders; and at the north end is one for nisi prius, or civil causes. The interior height of the walls is about 30 feet, and each court is nearly 30 feet square, being crowned with a dome 10 feet high, supported by twelve Corinthian columns. Adjoining these courts are handsome rooms fitted up for the use of grand and petit juries, the council, &c., and in the room occupied by the grand jury is a small library of law-books, and a MS. list of all the high sheriffs of Yorkshire, with the dates of the years in which they served the office, from William the Conqueror to the present time. Near the grand jury room is the place for the execution of criminals, where a temporary scaffolding is erected for the purpose; felons, condemned to die, having formerly undergone the sentence of the law at Tyburn, out of Micklegate-bar. The present place of execution is called the new drop. Behind the grand jury room the remains of a Roman wall was discovered in 1805, or 1806, by workmen who were preparing to erect the wall which now meets the eye of the observer, and which was built upon this old foundation. A block of freestone, inscribed 'Civitati,' in Norman characters, was also found at the same time whilst the men were digging a drain. It was supposed to have been a boundary stone, placed there in the reign of William the Conqueror; and it may now be seen in the cathedral, where it was immediately deposited amongst the monuments. The second building which claims our attention is nearly opposite to the entrance into the yard, and is the prison for debtors and felons, comprising also the governor's apartments, and the chapel. It has two projecting wings, which, with iron palisades in front, form an airing yard for the felons. A handsome turret surmounts the centre of the edifice, with a clock and bell. The right wing of this building is occupied by debtors and the governor. The entrance is by a double flight of stone steps, on the top of which is a door that leads into a long passage. On this floor, besides the gaoler's rooms, are eight others for debtors, each 16 feet square, by 12 feet high; and above these are 12 rooms for common side debtors which are all free wards, airy, and wholesome, the passage being through lofty and spacious galleries. Adjoining the right wing are the felons' apartments, with the court-yard in front, already mentioned, as formed by the two wings. The dimensions of the yard are 54 feet by 55, and into it is a descent of 5 steps. It is separated from the general area by a double row of iron palisades, inclosing a sufficient space between them to prevent all communication with strangers. This precaution is but of modern institution, and was occasioned by repeated attempts of the felons to escape. The day-room for male felons is 24 feet by about 15, and contains a fire place. There are two galleries in proceeding from this room, in which are 19 sleeping cells, well ventilated, nearly six feet square, with lofty arched roofs, and floors of oak wood. A passage leads out of the felons' court-yard to the chapel, and contains 8 airy and dry sleeping cells, 9 feet long by 6 feet broad; and another passage from the yard also contains 5 sleeping cells. There are 2 solitary cells, and 3 condemned cells; one room, entirely devoted to condemned prisoners, is called 'Pompey's parlour'; it is 18 feet square, and is sufficiently light to enable its miserable inhabitants to read, and possesses a convenient fire-place. Every cell in this building is provided by the county with an iron bedstead, a flock-bed, and rugs; on each of which beds 2 felons generally sleep. At the west end of the gaol is a small semicircular court-yard, with a day-room for transports. They are capable of accommodating 20 prisoners. The chapel is in the left wing. The ascent to it is by a handsome double flight of stone steps, which are uniform with those of the right wing, and the chapel, which is well calculated for the purpose of religious worship, is so constructed that each prisoner knows his own proper seat. The women sit upon forms in the area, and in front of the pulpit. The convicts, felons for trial, and prisoners for misdemeanours, nearly encircle the chapel, on seats close to the wall; and there is a gallery, which is occupied by the keepers, by debtors, and by occasional visitors. A seat opposite to that of the keepers, is devoted to those prisoners who are under sentence of death. Besides the daily prayers, a sermon is preached every Thursday morning by a clergyman of the church of England. The or-building which now remains to be noticed, is one on the left entrance. The approach to it is by a flight of five stone steps, leading to a portico of four Ionic pillars, twenty-six feet six inches in height, supporting a pediment similar in appearance to that of the court-house, on the opposite side of the area, but without sculpture of any kind, if we except vases of the angles. This building was erected in the year 1780, to supply several accommodations, which were thought requisite by the county magistrates; but considerable additions were made to it in 1803, under the direction of Mr Atkinson, the architect. The whole now extends in length 150 feet, and the wing next the porter's lodge contains, on the ground floor, offices for the clerk of assize, for the depositing of records, &c., behind which there is a day-room, 24 feet by 15, for prisoners charged with misdemeanours. In it is a fire-place, with benches, &c., and the room is well lighted, and opens into a court-yard, 40 feet wide by 24 in depth. There are also four sleeping cells on the ground floor of this wing. The first and second stories of it have each a day-room, with sleeping cells, and accommodations as below. The other wing of the building is generally appropriated to female felons. The day-room, on the ground floor here, is also conveniently fitted up, and opens into a spacious yard, containing a wash-house and other requisites. There are likewise six sleeping cells, the smallest of which is 12 feet long by 10 broad. On the first story is a day-room, with the same number of cells, and a flight of stone steps leading from the day-room into a court-yard, 50 feet by 27. On the second, or attic story, are two rooms with a warm and cold bath, and adjoining dressing-room, used entirely for the sick; and consequently to be considered as constituting the infirmary, or hospital of the castle. The roof of this part of the building is flat, and covered with lead, to the extent of 45 feet by 25; and is so constructed for the purpose of admitting convalescents to take the air; the edge being secured by iron palisades, five feet in height. In the centre, and some other parts of this building, the debtors are confined during the period when the assizes, or any public meetings, are holding within these walls; though at all other times, they have full liberty to enjoy the air and exercise, which the open area of the castle is abundantly capable of affording. In 1826 the magistrates of the county decided on erecting another gaol, as near as possible to the castle; they therefore purchased and inclosed a considerable space north-east of Clifford's tower, encircling at the same time that picturesque and antique edifice. In the space above-mentioned, a new prison, forming the semi-diameter of a circle, with the governor's house in the centre, has been erected from the plan of Mr Robinson. The elevation of the governor's house and the prison is of the pointed style of architecture, and undoubtedly the most handsome gaol in England. The site of the castle is of very high antiquity, and the history meriting notice. Mr Drake, after alluding to Old Baile, already described, says, "I believe this was built a s.d., probably on a Roman foundation, by William I. and made so strong in order to keep the citizens and Northumbrians in awe, and to preserve his garrisons better than they were in the former. It continued to be in his successor's hands, the kings of England, and was the constant residence of the high sheriffs of the county, during their shrievalty for some ages after." In the reign of Richard III. this fortress was found so much out of order, that it was considered requisite very materially to repair, and in part to rebuild it. Leland, however, in the time of Henry VIII. found it in a very ruinous condition, and observes, "The area of this castle is no very great quantity—there be five ruinous towers in it." The next object worthy of notice within the walls of the gaol is Clifford's tower. This mount and ruin, which are a great ornament to the city, exactly correspond with Baile hill, on the opposite side of the river. Drake supposes that the mound on which the ruins of the "keep of the castle" are now seen, was cast up by the Romans, and that a tower was standing on it during their residence in this city, though it might be rebuilt by the Conqueror. It has already been observed, that the old fortress, the site of which is occupied by the present prison, was formerly encompassed with a moat, supplied with water from the river Foss. It is also equally certain, that Clifford's tower was surrounded in the same manner; and it appears that though it was the keep of the castle, it was totally distinct, the moat having completely separated them. The entrance to the tower, however, was from the castle, by means of a drawbridge and a flight of steps up the side of the mount. These steps were remaining till within the last few years, when they were removed to repair the wall near the spot. The place which they occupied is yet clearly marked by a row of hazle-nut trees on each side of it. Opposite the site of these steps are the evident remains of a doorway, in the old wall of the castle yard, now walled up. The bottom of this doorway, being about three feet above the present level of the castle yard, induced an inquiry as to the cause, when it appeared that the ground on that side, has, within the last half century, been lowered equal to such a difference. The arch of this doorway, on the inner side, next to the tower, has been tastefully converted into an arbour, adorned with mantling ivy; and in front of it is a gravel walk, shaded by the luxuriant foliage of hanging trees and shrubs. The architecture of Clifford's tower bears evident marks of a date much later than the reign of William I. There is no record of its being rebuilt, but the present structure cannot be older than the time of Edward I., and Mr Britton thinks it was probably executed in the reign of his warlike successor Edward III. This fortress derived its name from the circumstance of one of the noble family of Clifford having been appointed the first governor by the Conqueror; and Sir Thomas Widdrington remarks, that the Lords Cliffords were very anciently called castleyns, wardens, or keepers of the tower. This family have repeatedly claimed a right of carrying the city's sword before the king when he visited York, but the ground of it appears to be unaccountable, as the lord-mayor certainly cannot have any superior in dignity to him within the walls of the city, except the king himself, or the presumptive heir to the British crown. Adjoining High Ousegate in a direct line is the Pavement, a well built, pleasant, and airy street. "Whence it derived the name is doubtful," says Mr Hargrove, "but we may, with some degree of certainty, consider it a token of the ancient and original superiority of this street, over others of the city; for to designate one street 'The Pavement,' must naturally imply that the others were not paved at the time this name was given; and we do not find that it has borne any other for time immemorial." In the open area of this street a market is held for the sale of all sorts of grain, wild fowls, sea-fish, poultry, butter, eggs, herbs, and various other articles. The corn-market is well supplied, and is an excellent one for oats in particular, great quantities being brought from all the neighbouring towns and villages. It does not appear that this street was first used as a market-place by any official regulation; but we find that, in 1671, Mr Mar-maduke Rawden, a merchant of London, who was born in this city, amongst other benefactions to his native place, devoted £400 to the erection of a cross, at the end of All Saints' church, for the accommodation of the public. It was a small square building, with a dome, ascended into by winding stairs, and supported by twelve pillars of the Ionic order. The following year the corporation raised the cross higher, and placed a turret and vane on the top of it. The expense of this alteration amounted to £100, and the appearance of the building was greatly improved. Thus the cross stood till the month of January, 1818, when it was considered as unnecessary, and was accordingly taken down, and the materials sold by auction. The next object of notice in Walmgate ward is Fossegate, a long narrow street extending from the Pavement to Foss-bridge. In this street is situated the merchants' hall, or Gilda Mercatorum of York, which is the property of a numerous, respectable, and affluent body of men, termed 'The Merchants' Company,' originally established in this city at a very early period, to encourage the trade of York, which was then considerable. This company has, however, survived all the fluctuations and final decline of the foreign commerce of this city; but its funds having been extended by several considerable donations, it yet confers many privileges on the members, whose engagements are now chiefly respecting domestic regulations. The hall is situate on the right side of the street, is of great antiquity, and is stated by tradition to have been built out of the remains of a religious house, called Trinity chapel, which stood here in the earliest ages of Christianity. A piece of ground behind the building, and now occupied as a garden, is supposed to have been used as the place of interment, and evinces, by corroborating circumstances, the correctness of the supposition; for digging in it at various periods, quantities of human bones have been thrown up. The outer entrance to the merchants' hall from Fossegate, is by an old stone archway, over which are the corroded arms of the merchants of the staple. Passing through this doorway into a small yard, the entrance to the upper and principal story of the building is by a flight of stone steps, at the top of which a short passage leads to the rooms occupied by the merchants' company. On each side of this passage, or landing, are small rooms originally intended for the immediate purposes of the company; but at present they are let, as are also two below, one on each side of the steps, to poor families. Entering a second door, there is a small room on the right, called the court of assistants' room. The first room is 65 feet long, 20 feet wide, and about 14 feet in height. It is well lighted, and furnished with fixed seats against each side of the room. The inner-room, called the court-room, is of the same dimensions as the other, but is kept in neater condition, being the room in which the merchants' company assemble. Here they hold four quarterly courts in each year, and dine together half-yearly; on which occasions the governor presides. This officer should be chosen annually by a majority of the members, but he is generally allowed to occupy the station three years. Over a fire-place on the right of the entrance to this room, is a table of benefactions, and disposed in different parts are several good paintings, viz. a full length portrait of George L. 1722; Sir H. Thomson, Knt. and alderman; J. Saunders, Esq., lord-mayor, 1818; R. Thomson, Esq., lord-mayor, 1708, and 1721; and W. Hart, "sometime pastor of the English church at Embden." The ground floor consists of a chapel belonging to the company; and of an hospital. The entrance to the chapel is by a passage through a spacious area, leading into another room of very ancient appearance, in which are several massy oak pillars supporting the upper part of the building. A door out of this room, formed under a stone arch, opens into the chapel. It was built in 1411, and improved in 1667, and is a neat square building, well suited for devotional exercises, and furnished with the usual appendages. The seats for the members are placed in a double row on each side of the chapel, and are calculated to contain more than 100 persons.—At the termination of Fossegate is Foss-bridge, built on the site of a very ancient structure of three arches, erected in the reign of Henry IV. Walmgate bar is the entrance into York from Beverley, Hull, &c. and is supposed to derive its name, by corrupt pronunciation, from Watling-street, one of the great Roman roads. It is built in the same manner as the others, being square, with embattled turrets at the angles. Towards the foundation are some large blocks of grit; but the arches, &c. are modern, having undergone a thorough repair in 1648, after the gate had been almost demolished in the siege by the parliamentary army, as appears by an inscription over the outer entrance. Attached to the city front is an extraneous erection of wood an plaster of two stories; the lower is supported by two Tuscan columns; the front of the first story is also adorned with two columns of the same order; the second has Ionic pillars with an architrave and cornice. The old gate is perfect, with a wicket, and above is the portcullis. On the east side is a modern way for foot passengers. The barbican is evidently of later date than the gate, having a pointed arch, probably of the time of Edward III. On the front are the royal arms of Henry V. The whole has a venerable appearance.—Monk ward commences on the north side of the city at a short narrow street between Collingate and Fossegate, called Whipmawbopmagate. In this ward is Aldwark, a mean street, but probably of great antiquity. Ald certainly implies Old, and wark, a building; therefore we may consider the name of this street as a mark of its antiquity. If we call to mind that the Roman imperial palace is supposed to have extended from Christ church to this street, we shall not be surprised that our Saxon ancestors gave it this name. The principal object worthy of notice in this street is the Merchant Tailors' hall, an old brick building. Here the company of merchant tailors of York, who are an ancient and very respectable body of men, meet quarterly for the transaction of business. The principal room, which is spacious and convenient for the purpose, and which was formerly occupied as a theatre, is at present used as a national school for about 200 girls. This room had formerly an arched wooden roof, now concealed with one of plaster. In the window is a piece of stained glass representing two angels supporting a bust of Queen Anne, and beneath are the arms of the company, with the following inscription:—"This company had been dignified in the year 1679 by having in their fraternity eight kings, eleven dukes, 30 earles, and 44 lords." There are some other small rooms adjoining, in one of which the merchant tailors now assemble; and they also kindly allow the York female friendly society, established in 1801, to hold their general and committee meetings here, free of expense. All requisite conveniences are attached to this building, and a garden on the adjoining city walls belongs to the company, which is ascended by a large flight of stone steps. In this ward is Thursday-market, or Sampson's square, a large open area, 100 feet broad, by 180 feet in length. Here formerly was held the principal market in the city; and, as the ancient name of the square implies, it was always held on Thursday. It has, however, long been the great mart in which the country butchers are allowed to expose their meat for sale every Saturday. In the year 1688, when the prince of Orange landed in England, there was a market cross and a guard-room in Thursday market. The former stood in the midst of the square, and was removed in 1704. It was a stone-building, with an ascent on each side, of five steps, protected from the inclemency of the weather by a shed or penthouse, supported by eight wooden pillars, upon one of which was placed an iron yard-wand, as the standard of the market. A new cross was built at the charge of Elizabeth Smith and George Atkinson, who farmed the market of the corporation, and, on consideration of this charge, had their lease renewed for the term of 21 years, paying £22 per year. This building became of little use, and was in reality only a harbour for idle and dissolute persons, and a source of continued disturbance in the neighbourhood. This consideration induced a number of the inhabitants in that part of the city to procure its removal, and for that purpose they raised, by subscription, £100, in order to purchase from the corporation their market right in the cross, and to take it down. They consequently had the pleasure of seeing the building totally removed in July, 1815. The brutal and degrading practice of bull-baiting used often formerly to be exhibited here; and near the centre of the market-place, there yet remains a large bull ring which constitutes a privilege to every freeman who is a householder, and resides within the sight of it, to right of stray over Knavesmire, and over all the common land belonging to Micklegate ward. Monk bar is a handsome gate, situated on the north-east side of the city, on the road to Scarborough, &c. dividing Goodramgate and Monkgate. The foundation is of grit-stone, the arch circular; and on its exterior front are the arms of old France, quartered with those of England, which circumstance bespeaks its antiquity. Above the shield is a helmet beneath a Gothic canopy. On the battlements of the turrets are placed small figures in a menacing posture. The portcullis is still remaining, and a portion of the barbican was only taken down about 14 years ago. In other respects the gate is very perfect, and Mr Britton considers it as probably the most curious and perfect specimen of this sort of architecture in the kingdom, and, therefore, very interesting to the antiquary and architect. This bar was formerly made use of as a prison for freemen of York; and there are two stories of vaulted chambers in the tower formerly used for that purpose. The gateway roof is groined, and the city front displays several windows, with munnions and plain arched heads. There is a thoroughfare for foot passengers on the south side, which was made in 1825. From the top of this edifice the eye is gratified with the most enchanting scenery, and the weariness occasioned by the ascent is fully compensated by delightful prospects of the surrounding district.—Bootham ward includes the great north entrance to the city. In this ward is the mansion-house, a large and handsome building, appropriated to the service of each successive lord-mayor, and situated in front of the guild-hall. The front has a rustic basement, which supports four Ionic pilasters, with an angular pediment, in which are placed the arms of the city. In front of the house are iron palisades, with sunk areas to give light to the basement story; and a handsome flight of steps leads up to the entrance, which is by folding-doors, into a hall or spacious passage. On the left of the entrance is the drawing-room, a neat apartment, not very spacious, but lofty and well-adapted for the purpose. Above the chimney-piece, is a half-length portrait of Alderman Carr, who was a considerable contributor to the stock of plate belonging to the mansion-house. Behind the drawing-room is a small dining-room, divided from the other only by a temporary wooden partition, which can be removed at pleasure, and the two rooms may thus be thrown into one. From the hall, a broad and elegant staircase in front, and a smaller back staircase on the right, lead up to the state-room. Here the lord-mayor entertains the members of the corporate body, and occasionally gives a public treat to the citizens. The entrance is by folding-doors, under a music gallery, supported by two large fluted columns; and the room is 49 feet by 27 feet. On one side of the upper fire-place, is a full-length portrait, in oil colours, of George the Second, beautifully framed; it was presented by the marquess of Rockingham to the Rockingham club, at York, in the year 1757, and with their approbation was placed in the state-room of the mansion-house, the 3d of February, 1783. On the other side of this fire-place is a corresponding likeness of William III. also presented by the marquess of Rockingham, and suspended in this room at the same time. At the lower end of the room, on the sides of the fire-place, are full length portraits of Sir John Lister Kay, who served the office of lord-mayor in 1737, and of Lord Bingley, who was lord-mayor in 1707; and on the left of the entrance is a full-length likeness of his present majesty, when prince of Wales, habited in the robes of the Garter, and accompanied with his black valet. Near this is a full-length likeness of the duke of Richmond, who, with several other noblemen, left his seat in parliament, and came to York to pay his duty to Charles the First. On the right of the door is a painting of the marquess of Rockingham, which was presented to the corporation by Earl Fitzwilliam in 1783. Adjoining this painting is one of Sir William Mordaunt Milner, Bart., painted by Hoppner, at the expense of the corporation, and a full-length portrait of Lord Dundas, painted by John Jackson, Esq., R.A., in 1822. Behind the state-room are two lodging-rooms, and over them, on the next floor, are three lodging-rooms, with other conveniences, from which a flight of steps ascends into the attic story. On the left, about half way up, is a small chamber for the butler, which contains a strong painted case or cupboard, in which is deposited all the plate of the corporation. It is a most valuable and elegant collection, and the greater part of it has been presented, at various times, by members of the corporate body. The situation of this residence for the chief magistrate of York is now very open and airy, but part of the open space in front of the house was formerly occupied by several old and high houses, which rendered the rooms of the mansion-house very dark and damp. To remedy this evil the corporation purchased the houses, and commenced taking them down, May 17th, 1782. On the north side of the mansion-house is a passage to the Guildhall. The chapel of the guild of St

Christopher formerly stood where the present mansion-house has been erected, and the guildhall was erected by the mayor and commonalty, and the master and brethren of that fraternity, the 24th of Henry VI. or anno 1446. The guild was founded by the authority of letters patent from Richard the Second, granted to Robert Dalhey and other citizens, and dated at York, Martii 12, anno regni 19. Another brotherhood, called the Guild of St George, was afterwards added to the above; and by letters patent, from Henry VI., dated at Westminster, in the 25th year of his reign. Those two fellowships being however dissolved, Edward VI. in the third year of his reign, granted all their messuages, tenements, &c. in York, and other places, to the mayor and commonalty of the city of York and to their successors. Thus was the common-hall of those ancient religious guilds converted into the guildhall of the legislators of the city. The entrance to the building is by folding-doors, and over them is a large pointed window, in the centre of which is a stone effigy, as large as life, of George the Second. Entering the hall, which has been termed one of the finest Gothic rooms in the kingdom, the stranger will naturally be struck with its loftiness and extent, being 96 feet in length, 43 feet in width, and to the centre of the roof 29 feet 6 inches in height. The roof is supported by 10 octagon oak pillars, on stone bases; each pillar 21 feet 9 inches high, by 5 feet 9 inches in circumference. From their capitals spring the arches to the roof, which is of wood, panelled, and displays several shields of arms, supported by angelic representations, with many grotesque figures and very singular heads; all of which have been most shamefully defaced by paint. Here was held formerly the court of the lord-president of the north, during his residence at the manor; and the judges of assize still attend, and preside on trials relative to the city and ainstey; for which purpose the further end of the hall is fitted up for crown cases and occasional business; and there are also, near the entrance, an official seat, table, &c. for Nisi Prius causes. Adjoining the further end of the hall are several rooms for the grand and petit juries, one of which is termed the inner-room, and in it are held the several courts of the lord-mayor and sheriffs. It was neatly wainscotted during the mayoralty of Mr Richard Shaw, in 1679, at the expense of Sir John Hewley, one of the representatives of this city in parliament, and there is yet an inscription over the fire-place to that purport. Here are deposited the musketry of the city, calculated to equip four companies of 70 men each; and in one of the windows is a piece of painted glass, executed by Mr Peckitt. A part of St William's chapel on Ouse bridge, having formerly been occupied as the council chamber of the city, when that building was taken down in 1810, an addition was made to the guildhall, in order to supply the deficiency thus occasioned. A spacious apartment was built adjoining the inner room already described, under the direction of P. Atkinson, Esq., architect, and over it is a chamber, both admirably calculated for the purpose. In the lower room the common council assemble, for which purpose, at the upper end of it, is an official chair for the foreman, with a long oak table, and seats down the middle for the members of each ward. The room is lighted by five windows, which display the royal and city arms in painted glass. A broad flight of stone steps leads up to the chamber where the lord-mayor, recorder, city-council, aldermen, sheriffs, and gentlemen of the twenty-four assemble. Adjoining the mansion-house is the house in which the business of the post-office has been attended to for nearly a century; it is the first building in Lendal, formerly called Old Conyng-street, afterwards altered to Lendal. It is airy and well built, extending at present from the post-office down to the water works. Opposite the post office is a neat brick building, called the Subscription Library. This institution owes its origin to a few intelligent and spirited individuals, viz. Sir William Strickland, Bart.; S. W. Nicoll, Esq.; Rev. Charles Wellbeloved; Anthony Thorpe, Esq., and others; who, about the year 1784, formed themselves into a society, under certain rules and regulations, for the express purpose of purchasing the pamphlets and other light occasional literary productions of the day. The interior is neatly fitted up, the lower floor being used as a news-room, and the upper or first floor as a library of reference, and one of circulation. On the same side of Lendal as the library is the judges' lodgings, a large and handsome house, with a double flight of stone steps in front, and before it a neat court, with trees and shrubs. It is built on the site of a church dedicated to St Wilfrid, and in doomsday-book mentioned as an ancient rectory prior to the conquest. The ancient place of residence in Coney-street for the judges of assize has already been mentioned; but it was very inconvenient and unfit for the purpose. The county magistrates, therefore, took the subject into serious consideration, and in 1806 this building was purchased out of the county rates, and appropriated to the use of the judges. The York water-works are situated at the lower part of Lendal; the engine tower was formerly one of the towers of defence for the city. The water-works were first established in the year 1682; the engine being then placed in the tower, and wooden pipes, now partly substituted by others of cast-iron, being laid in the streets of the city, the inhabitants were supplied with water by the further assistance of two horses to work the engine. It was, however, afterwards purchased by Colonel Thornton, father of the present gentleman of that name, and he considerably improved the whole, introduced a steam-engine, enlarged the building, and added bathing-rooms to the tower, which yet remain, and are supplied with hot and cold water from the water-works. The whole descended to the present Colonel Thornton, and in 1799 it was purchased from him in 28 shares, in which state it now remains. The tower has been raised by the present proprietors, and is considerably higher than that on the opposite side, being 58½ feet above the level of the ground.

Bootham bar stands on the north-west side of the city, on the road to Durham, Newcastle, Edinburgh, &c. This bar is chiefly built of the grit-stone generally used by the Romans, and has a circular arch similar to Micklegate bar. The architecture is Gothic, and is at present tolerably perfect, with portcullis, barbican, &c.; but it has a more modern appearance than any of the other bars. On the outer front of the bar are placed two shields, with the arms of the city, over which is a shield within a garter greatly defaced. On the turrets, which are circular without battlements, are placed figures similar to those mentioned at Micklegate. The barbican is the most perfect in York, and has embattled turrets at the angles. In the year 1719, the inside of the gate was rebuilt with freestone. On the inner front facing the city is a large niche over the arch, containing the stone figure of a king, supposed by some to represent Ebrauc, the presumed founder of the city, but it is evidently of more modern costume. It is represented in armour, such as was used in the fifteenth century: the more general opinion, therefore, is, that this figure originally belonged to the fine stone screen conveyed from St Mary's abbey to the cathedral, in the reign of James I. The idea is confirmed by the circumstance of one of the figures is that screen having been removed to make room for the statue of the royal donor. On one side of this bar is a watch-house for delinquents, and on the other is a modern passage for foot passengers. The liberties of York form the extensive suburbs of the city. These were anciently much more populous than at present, and extended as far as some villages, now above a mile distant. These were all destroyed by fire in 1644. The suburbs, however, are now resuming their importance, and contain many fine buildings. Here is the race-course, at which meetings are held in May and August. The cattle market stands outside of Fishergate postern, and covers four acres of ground. Not far from Walmgate bar is the Retreat, a lunatic asylum belonging to the Society of Friends. It was established in 1794, and has been attended with remarkable success. The York gas works are situated near Monk bridge, and are constructed with great ingenuity on an extensive scale. The streets of York were first lighted with gas on March 22d, 1824. The only public building of importance within the district called the King's Manor, is the museum of the Yorkshire Philosophical Society, erected on part of the site of St Mary's abbey. It is a remarkably chaste and elegant Grecian structure. The district which lies on the western side of the city forms part of the county of the city, and cannot with propriety be included in any of the ridings. This district, which is now called the ainsteiy, or county of the city of York, was formerly a wapentake of the west riding. But in the 27th year of the reign of Henry VI it was annexed to the city, and placed under its immediate jurisdiction. The circuit of the ainsteiy is computed at 32 miles. Some have supposed the word ainsteiy to be derived from anciently, denoting its antiquity.

Camden conjectures that its etymology may be more plausibly referred to the German word antossen, implying a boundary or limit. Drake derives it from the old northern word asent, which signifies opposite or contiguous, and says, it was called the ainstey long before it was annexed to the city. The whole district was anciently a forest, but disforested by the charters of Richard I. and his successor, John. For the first of these grants the inhabitants paid £19 0s. 11d., and for the latter, which declared that the men of this wapentake, and their heirs, as the charter expresses it, should be for ever free from forest laws, account was made to the king of the sum of 120 merks, and three palfreys. It appears from Sir T. Widdrington's account, that the city of York has, from a very early period, laid claim to this jurisdiction by a charter from King John. Drake observes, that Sir Thomas Widdrington considered it as a matter of doubt, whether the citizens of York had any good warrant for holding the ainstey, saving for the 'leet' and some other liberties, till the 27th year of the reign of Henry VI., by whose charter or patent it was annexed to the city; since which time it has been confirmed by the sanction of an act of parliament. This district, which constitutes part of the extensive vale of York, has the same natural features. In the western part, the surface is diversified with gentle swells, but in the eastern part, adjoining to the Ouse, it is a perfect flat, abounding in excellent pasturage and meadow. The ainstey of York contains the following parishes:—Acaster Malbis, Acomb, Askham Bryan, Askham Richard, Bilbrough, Bilton, Bishopthorpe, Bolton Percy, Healough, Long Morston, Moor Monkton, Nether Poppleton, Rufforth, Thorpe Arch, Walton, Wighill. These parishes are all described in their proper places in this work. The liberty of St Peter comprehends all those parts of the city and county of York which belong to the church of St Peter. The jurisdiction is separate and exclusive, and it has its own magistrates, steward, bailiff, coroner, and constables. Among its privileges, the inhabitants and tenants of this liberty are exempt from the payment of all manner of tolls throughout England, Ireland, and Wales, on the production of a certificate, which the under steward is always ready to supply. This liberty consists of the following places, or portions of places. In the east riding—Flaxfleet, North Newbald, and South Newbald, in Hunsley Beacon division; Bramby-on-the-Moor, in Wilton Beacon division; and Dunnington, Healington, and Langwith in Ouse and Derwent wapentake. In the north riding—Carleton and Husthwaite, in Birdforth wapentake; Clifton, Haxby, Gate, Helmsley, Helperbi, Murton, Osbaldwick, Skelton, Stillington, Strensall, and Warthill, in Bulmer wapentake; Brawby, Salton, and Nawton, with Wambleton, in Ryedale wapentake. In the west riding—Dring houses, in the ainstey of the city of York; Brotherton and Ulleskelf in Barkston Ash wapentake, and Knaresborough; in Claro wapentake. In the city of York, the Minster yard and Boddern. Besides the 27 places, and parts of places, above noticed, as being entirely within the liberty of St Peter of York, detached parcels are found in most of the wapentakes of Yorkshire to the number of 97. Here are numerous libraries, reading-rooms, and other places of recreation. The theatre is a handsome structure, enlarged in 1822. In Blake-street are elegant concert and assembly-rooms. Musical festivals, on a magnificent scale, are held in the minster, for the benefit of the York county hospital, and the general infirmaries of Hull, Leeds, and Sheffield. In the vicinity are extensive barracks for cavalry, erected in 1796, at an expense of £30,000.

Commerce, &c.—York was anciently a port, and as such it furnished in 1298 one vessel to the fleet of Edward I. The trade of York was anciently very considerable. In 1354, York obtained the staple for wool; many of the York merchants were subsequently members of the "Corporation of the staple at Calais," and the woollen manufacture abundantly flourished in that city so late as the reign of Henry VIII. The preamble of an act passed in that reign describes York as being the centre for the manufacture of coverlets and coverings for beds, and for spinning, dyeing, weaving, &c. These manufactures continued to flourish in York until the commencement of the eighteenth century, when its trade completely left it, and removed to the west riding. The manufactures of York are now of small extent. Glass, carpets, white and red lead, linens, and ironmongery, are manufactured to a moderate extent. The trade is small, and consists chiefly in the importation of coal. Vessels of 80 tons can sail up to the bridge. Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, are market-days; and fairs are held on Whit-Monday, St Peter's day, and Lammas day, for cattle; every Thursday, from Lady-day to Michaelmas, for wool; on the Saturdays before Michaelmas, Martinmas, Christmas, Lady-day, St Peter's day, Lammas, and Whit-Monday, for flax; also, a great horse fair on the week before Christmas.

Ecclesiastical Affairs.—The ecclesiastical establishment in the minster of York consists of an archbishop, dean, chancellor, precentor, subdean, four archdeacons, 28 prebendaries, a sub-chantor, five priests vicars; seven lay-clerks, six choristers, and servants. The revenues of the archbishop were valued, 26th Henry VIII., at £2,035 3s. 7d.; those of the canons residentiary at £439 3s. 6d.; of the dean at £308 10s. 7d.; those of the other members may be seen in Ecton's Valor. The deanery has the rectories of Pocklington, Pickering, and Kilham, of which the dean is patron and ordinary; he likewise presents to Thornton, Ebberston, Ellerburne, Barnby moor, Givendale, and Hayton vicarages. He appoints also the residentiaries, but must choose them out of the prebendaries; and the first prebendary he sees after a vacancy, has a right to claim the residentiaryship. The dean and four residentiaries constitute the chapter; and the value of the residentiaryship is estimated in the king's books at £200 per annum. At the Reformation, the yearly tenths of the deanery were rated at £30 17s. 0½d. The Bedern was a college of vicars choral belonging to the cathedral. Though in Goodramgate, it also extended to Aldwark, and St Andrewgate, and consequently was not within the close, yet it is always classed with that district on account of its connexion. It is on the presumed site of the imperial palace of the Roman emperors, or of the baths connected with the palace, and is of great antiquity, as it appears from an inquisition taken in 1275, the fourth of the reign of Edward I, to have been given "to God, St Peter, and the vicars serving God, in pure and perpetual alms," by one William de Lassa, canon of the church. The whole college and site of Bedern were sold in the second year of Edward VI. to Thomas Goukling and others for £1924 10s. 1d., but this sale was annulled, and it was given to the dean and chapter of the cathedral. The vicars choral were formerly 36, agreeing in number with the prebendal stalls in the cathedral; and, besides attending to their duty in the choir, one officiated for each canon, receiving for their services the annual sum of 40s. each. The chantries and obits from which the vicars choral derived their support being dissolved, their number is greatly diminished. The treasurership was dissolved and made a lay fee by Edward VI.

These parishes are in the archd. of York, except those marked with an asterisk, which are in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean and chapter of York. The Baptists, Society of Friends, Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, Sandemanians, Roman Catholics, and Unitarians, have places of worship here.

Ecclesiastical Buildings.—"Among buildings in what is called the Gothic style, York Minster has generally been regarded as without a rival in England, or perhaps in Europe. The city, of which it is the chief ornament, has been famous in this island from the most ancient times. Under the name of Eboracum, it appears to have been one of the principal settlements of the Romans. Here the Emperor Severus died in the beginning of the third century, and the Emperor Constantius, the father of Constantine the Great, in the beginning of the fourth. In the time of the Saxons it was the capital of the kingdom of Deira, and afterwards of the powerful kingdom of Northumberland, formed from the union of Deira and Bernicia, and occasionally enjoying the pre-eminence both in power and in acknowledged rank over all the other states of the heptarchy. Our old historians maintain that York was the seat of a Christian bishopric long before the arrival of the Saxons; and they mention three or four prelates, who, they pretend, occupied the see in succession after its foundation by the British king, Lucius, who flourished in the second century. But very little dependence can be placed upon these traditions; and it is even doubtful if such a prince as Lucius ever existed. The establishment of the present see of York dates from a considerably more recent era. Augustine, the apostle of the English, arrived in the isle of Thanet, which formed part of the kingdom of Kent, in the year 597. He was soon after consecrated archbishop of Canterbury, and, according to the generally received account, died in 605. Kent, however, was a yet, and for some time after, the only portion of the island into which the light of the Gospel had penetrated. Pope Gregory, indeed, to whom Augustine and his companions had been deputed, had commanded that an archbishop should be established at York, to exercise the same jurisdiction over the northern parts of the country as Augustine was authorized to exercise over the south. But it was not till the year 624 that any attempt even seems to have been made to introduce Christianity into the northern district. In that year, Edwin, the able and powerful king of Northumberland, married Ethelburga, the sister of Ebal, king of Kent, a convert, like the rest of her family, to the new religion, and a lady of great worth and piety. He had promised to allow her the free exercise of her religion, and the company of such ecclesiastics as she chose to take along with her. Among these was Paulinus, one of the original associates of Augustine, who, before he set out for his new residence, was consecrated bishop of the Northumbrians, by Justus, then archbishop of Canterbury. Paulinus, however, for some time made very little progress in the work of conversion which he had thus undertaken. Neither his eloquence, nor that of Ethelburga, could prevail upon Edwin to forsake the faith of his fathers; and, till their king should lead the way, very few of the people were disposed to give heed to any thing that was addressed to them on the subject. At length the conversion of the king was effected through the influence upon his mind of a vision, or dream, which gave a miraculous kind of interest to the exhortations of Paulinus. Bede, the ecclesiastical historian, has related this circumstance with minute particularity. The baptism of Edwin gave occasion to the erection of the first Christian temple at York—the original mother of the present cathedral. The ceremony was performed on Easter-day, the 12th of April, 627, in a wooden building which was hastily raised, and placed, it is said, on the same spot on which the Minster now stands. But soon after Edwin took down this temporary structure, and commenced the erection of a new church of stone, which, however, he did not live to complete, having been slain in a great battle fought at Hatfield, in the West Riding, in 633, against Penda, king of Mercia, aided by Cadwalla, the British king of Wales. Paulinus left his diocese on the occurrence of this disastrous catastrophe, and was afterwards appointed bishop of Rochester. Penda subsequently having slain Oswald, king of Northumbria, reduced to ruins the building of Edwin, A. D. 642. After some time, however, tranquillity was in some degree restored in Northumberland, and the building of the church begun by Edwin was carried on by one of his successors, Oswald, a son of his uncle, Adelfrid. But it was not completed till long after his death, by Wilfrid, the archbishop of the see, a most haughty and turbulent prelate. The edifice, thus at last brought to a close, is described as having been of a square, or at least of a rectangular form. It did not stand long, having suffered so much by an accidental fire in 741, that archbishop Egbert, assisted by Albert, a learned native, took it entirely down. Albert, who was promoted to the see in 767, rebuilt the Minster in a much more magnificent style. It was again burnt by the Danes in 867, and was soon afterwards rebuilt; but in 1069 it was a second time reduced to ruins in a similar manner; the Norman garrison, who occupied the city while it was besieged by the insurgent population of the surrounding country, having, in order to drive away the enemy, set fire to a part of the suburbs, from which the flames overspread and laid waste near half the city. On this occasion there perished a famous library which was deposited in the cathedral, collected by archbishop Egbert, who possessed the see from 750 till 786. Of this library Charlemagne's preceptor, the celebrated Alcuin, who received his education at York, speaks both in his letters and poems in terms of the highest admiration, enumerating in one place a long list of authors contained in it, some of which are now no longer extant. The year after this event, the Conqueror appointed to the see of York, Thomas, a canon of Bayeux in Normandy, who had been his chaplain and treasurer; and the new prelate was not long in setting about the restoration of his metropolitan church. He rebuilt it on a larger scale than before, and for the first time formed the establishment into a regular chapter, endowing it with prebends and other dignities. The fabric, however, was again accidentally burnt down, in 1137, along with the greater part of the city. In 1171 Roger de Bishopebridge, who was archbishop from 1154 till 1181, again began a new edifice by the erection of a choir, where that of the present building now stands. But, as we shall presently see, no part of Archbishop Roger's work remains in the existing cathedral.

"The choir being completed by this prelate, one of his successors, Archbishop Walter de Grey, commenced the building of the south part of the cross aisle or transept about 1227. The north transept was erected by John le Romayne, treasurer of the cathedral, about 1260. Over the centre of the whole he raised a steeple, but not the noble lantern tower which now occupies that position. The first stone of the nave, or body of the church, to the west of the transept, was laid by his son, the archbishop of the same name, on the 7th of April, 1291; and the nave was finished, as well as the two towers which crown its western extremity, in 1330, in the prelacy of William de Melton. The building, therefore, was now once more complete; but the comparative plainness of the more ancient portions of it being felt to suit ill with the magnificence of those last erected, Archbishop John de Thoresby, who came to the see in 1354, determined to take down the choir of his predecessor, Archbishop Roger, and to replace it by another more in harmony with the rest of the structure. He commenced this great work in 1375; but it is not perfectly certain when it was finished, some parts of the choir exhibiting the arms of Archbishops Scrope and Bowet, Thoresby's successors, the latter of whom succeeded to the see in 1405. Meanwhile, it had also been resolved to take down the central steeple erected by John le Romayne; and in its place the present lantern tower was begun to be built in 1370. The whole was probably finished, and the Minster brought to the state in which we now see it, about 1410 or 1412.

"From this account it appears that the successive parts of the building, in the order of their antiquity, are the south transept, the north transept, the nave, the central tower, and lastly, the choir, proceeding from the west end to the east. Reviewed in this order, the cathedral of York forms a most interesting and instructive architectural study. It is perhaps the most perfect example to be any where found of the history and progress of the Gothic style during the period of not much less than two centuries, which its construction occupied. In this place we can only remark generally, that a continued and regular improvement in grace and lightness of form, and a more and more lavish profusion of minute and elaborate ornament, will be found to form the leading characteristics of that progress in England, during the whole of the period in question.

"York Minster, as may be understood from what has been already stated, is built in the form of a cross, the longer bar, forming the choir and nave of the church, lying, as usual, east and west, and the shorter, called the transept, north and south. Over the centre of the building, supported on four massive pillars, rises a grand tower to the height of 213 feet from the floor. This is said to be only a portion of the altitude originally designed by the architect, who intended to surmount this stone erection by a steeple of wood covered with lead, had he not been deterred by a fear lest the foundation should prove insufficient to sustain so great a weight. Over the west end of the building are two other towers or steeples rising to the height of 196 feet. The whole length of the building from east to west is 524½ feet, and that of the transept, from north to south, 222. The length of the choir is 157½ feet, and its breadth 46½; in addition to which, the east end of the choir contains a chapel behind the altar dedicated to the Virgin, making an entire length of 222 feet. The length of the nave is 261 feet; its breadth—including the aisles—109; and its height, 99. These measurements—with the exception of the height of the towers at the west end, which is not given in that work—are taken from the last edition of Dugdale's Monasticon Anglicanum, by Caley, Ellis, and Bandinel, in 6 vols. folio, London, 1830.

"York Minster has not the advantage of standing upon a height; yet its enormous mass makes it a conspicuous object from a great distance, and nothing can be grander or more imposing than the aspect which its lofty buttresses and grey towers present, as they are seen rising over the surrounding houses of the city, which look like the structures of a more pigmy generation beneath the gigantic and venerable pile. Excepting on the north side, where an open space of considerable extent has been formed by clearing away the old archiepiscopal palace, it is every where closely encompassed by other buildings, several of which approach within a few yards of its walls. There is scarcely, therefore, a spot from which any one of its fronts can be completely or satisfactorily seen, except from a distance, where, of course, only the upper parts of the building are visible. The formation of a large open square around the noble old edifice, so that the whole might be viewed as perfectly as the north side, would exhibit the gigantic pile in all its surpassing magnificence. For the present the grandeur of the Minster must be sought for principally in its interior. The effect of the whole prolonged and lofty extent, as seen on entering from the great west door, is perhaps as sublime as any ever produced by architecture. Under favourable circumstances, such as the rich illumination of a setting sun, the impressions of awe, and veneration, and we may add delight, produced upon the mind by the grandeur and beauty of this wonderful building, are perhaps superior in intensity to the effects of any other work of man's hands. We doubt whether the finest Grecian temple could ever so touch the hidden springs of enthusiasm in our nature. The choir is divided from the nave by a stone screen; but this ornamental partition is so low as not to intercept the view of the portion of the roof beyond, nor 'the dim religious light,' streaming from the magnificent 'storied window,' that fills the east end of the building. This screen and the great east window are two of the proudest ornaments of the cathedral. The former is a work in the very richest style of ornamental carving; and fortunately it is in almost perfect preservation. It is divided into compartments by fifteen niches, which contain the statues of the English kings from the Conqueror to Henry VI. inclusive. The place of the last-mentioned monarch used to be occupied by a figure of James I., which it is said was substituted for that of Henry, after the latter had been displaced, in consequence of the disposition manifested by the people to pay it a sort of idolatrous reverence, in memory of the holy king. It seems to have been thought there was no danger of their falling into the same excess of observance towards James's effigy. James, however, was not many years ago taken down from a situation where he was certainly out of place, and a new statue of Henry, carved by a York sculptor, put in the niche. The great east window is of the vast dimensions of 75 feet in height, by 52 in breadth. It is formed of above 200 compartments of painted glass. According to Mr Britton, in his 'Cathedral Antiquities,' the figures are generally from two feet two, to two feet four inches in height. The heads in particular are many of them drawn with exquisite beauty. The fabrication of this noble specimen of art was begun in 1403, by John Thornton, of Coventry, whose agreement was to complete it in three years, during which time he was to have a salary of four shillings a week, with 100 shillings additional per annum, and £10 more on finishing the work, if it should be done to the satisfaction of his employers."

Entering at the west door of the cathedral, the whole extent of a perspective of upwards of 500 feet is before the spectator, the continuity of the vaulting, broken in a pleasing manner about the centre by the lantern tower. The pavement, constructed by Kent the architect, after a design by Lord Burlington, is a mosaic pattern, on the grandest scale; and, however beautiful in itself, is utterly at variance with the architecture of the church. The old pavement was marked with circles to point out the stations of the dignitaries and canons of the church in the ancient processions. The architecture of the nave is made in elevation into three heights or stories, as is usual in most cathedrals; the large piers are circular, and surrounded by 12 attached cylindrical columns, with uniform foliated capitals, and octagonal bases; three on each side support the archivolts mouldings of the principal arches, the three fronting the aisles sustain the springings of the vaults, and the remaining three are carried up to about the middle of the third story, and in like manner uphold the groined ceiling of the nave. The capitals are ornamented with leaves; the mouldings of the principal arches which compose the first story of the elevation, are not so numerous as are met with in earlier specimens of pointed architecture. The second or gallery story is in a manner united with the third, being formed of five compartments, having trefoil heads under acutely pointed canopies, occupying a portion of the height of the same number of munnions, which compose the third or clerestory; the heads of the arches of these windows are occupied by circles filled with quatrefoil tracery. The whole of the windows in this story are filled with stained glass, principally shields of arms, &c. In the spandrels of the principal arches are shields carved with various coats of arms in relief. Each of the centre compartments of every division of the second story formerly contained a statue; very few now remain. The most perfect is in the fifth division from the west, on the south side, which represents St George; and on the opposite side is a large wooden dragon which served as a lever to lift the cover of the old font. The vaulted ceiling is constructed of wood; its section shows a graceful pointed arch, and the soffit is enriched with ribs springing from the columns before noticed, and diversified by minor ones, uniting the principal ribs with each other; at every point of junction is a boss carved with some scriptural history or device in relief. The aisles are ornamented in a style equally splendid with the nave; the windows are not remarkable for their dimensions, each is made into three lights, and a like number of quatrefoils fill the arches; on each side the window is a perpendicular niche, covered with an angular canopy; the most interesting species of ornament is however displayed in the stall work which embellishes the dado of the windows; below each are several upright compartments, generally six in number, divided by buttresses ending in pinnacles, and each made into two minor divisions by a munnion, with arched head, enclosing a trefoil; above another arched head, having three sweeps; a trefoil in a circle is sustained in the point of these small arches, and the whole is enclosed in one larger pointed arch, which in its turn is surmounted by an acutely pointed pediment, crocketed and crowned with a finial. A triple cluster of columns uniform with those of the main pillars is attached to the piers between the windows, and these in part sustain the vaults, which are of stone, and of a more simple kind than are met with in the works of the period, being groined only with arches and cross springers. In the second compartment of the north aisle, from the west, is an arched doorway; over which are two shields, charged with the arms of Old France and England, and between these a statue of the blessed Virgin, standing on a pedestal formed of a crowned head, and fixed on the point of the arch; an angular canopy encloses the head of the arch, and this is accompanied with two other statues in alto relievo, apparently angels; above the head of the Virgin is a triple canopy of great beauty. This doorway formerly led into the chapel of St Sepulchre, built by Archbishop Roger, and long since destroyed. In the succeeding division is an altar tomb, attributed, but without foundation, to Archbishop Roger. The principal doorway is covered with a canopy resembling its exterior frontispiece; and on the pier which divides the entrance is a niche, which is a restoration in the repairs before noticed. On each side of this door are two series of niches, resembling the stall work in the aisles, which, with the doorway, entirely fill up the dado of the great window; two series of niches with pedestals for statues, and angular canopies, occupy the jambs of the window; the spandrels, and the rest of the wall below the vault, are occupied by upright panels; so that every portion of the wall, from the pavement to the ceiling, is covered with ornament, but so chastely and tastefully applied, that no complaint can be made of its redundancy. The side divisions, which occupy the towers, partake of the same kind of ornament; the doorways have reliefs above their arches, representing on the south door a combat between a knight armed with sword and target, and an uncouth looking animal, between quatrefoil panels, in one of which is oddly told the story of Sampson; he is represented tearing open the jaws of a lion, whilst the faithless Delilah, behind him, is cutting off his hair; the relief which accompanies it is unintelligible. The transept, according to the perfect cathedral arrangement, is clear of the choir: although it is entirely built of pointed architecture, the work of Archbishop Walter Gray, it displays, in the simplicity of the ornaments, and the acutely pointed lancet arches, a contrast to the more elegantly finished architecture and munnioned windows of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries in the nave and choir. The present vaulted and groined ceiling of wood, was constructed a considerable period after the remainder of this portion of the edifice, and is ornamented with a greater profusion of intersections and bosses than the nave: an indication of a vaulted roof of stone, of the same age as the main building, appears in the middle story, but it was probably abandoned as being too low, and the third story subsequently added, the roof being open to the timbers. When the new ceiling was added, the architect carefully avoided its interfering with the splendid circular window in the south end. The aisles have lancet windows without tracery, in pairs, the dados being ornamented with trefoil arches in blank; the vaulted roof of stone resembles that in the aisles of the great nave. At the north end of the western aisle of the south transept stands the baptismal font, a large circular basin of dark shell marble, not remarkable for any curious workmanship. The lantern tower forms a magnificent vestibule to the choir. Four massive piers, surrounded by smaller columns, sustain an equal number of elegantly pointed arches, with shields in the spandrels; to these arches succeeds a gallery in design closely resembling the stall work in the aisles of the nave, and this is surmounted by eight lofty windows, two in each wall, above which is a groined ceiling of wood, assimilating with the nave; the centre boss containing small statues of St Peter and St Paul, with a church betwixt them. The effect of the whole design is very grand and imposing, but a settlement has taken place in the legs of this massive tower, which has injured the transept, and in consequence the second arches on the east and the second arches on the west, in the north transept, are walled up. The screen to the choir has been much admired at all times, for the beauty of the workmanship and the numerous niches with which it is embellished. The principal doorway, which is unfortunately not exactly in the centre, is a pointed arch, the jambs have attached columns with leaved capitals, and the archivolt mouldings are relieved by hollows in which are flowers; an ogee canopy bounds the whole, and encloses a niche formed above the point of the arch. On the north side of the doorway are seven niches, and on the south side eight; they are hexagonal in plan, and the pedestals, which are richly ornamented with carving, are of the same form, as are also the canopies, which in height are made into two stories, the upper story of each forming three small niches, containing statues of angels playing on musical instruments; the canopies all unite in forming a grand and harmonious design. Above every one is a small demi-angel, in the act of adoration, over which an entablature consisting of a moulded architrave, a frieze charged with foliage, and a cornice ornamented with trefoils set on the points of small arches, forms the finish of the design. In the grand niches are the famous series of the kings of England, from the Conqueror to Henry VI. These statues, says Dr Milner, are of the natural size, in ancient regal dresses, enriched with singular ornaments, and in high preservation. The same learned writer contends that the costume and features of these effigies have been executed from satisfactory authorities; yet he remarks that the Normans, both before and after their invasion of this country, shaved their faces and their upper lips, and cut their hair short, whereas the statues of the four Anglo-Norman monarchs, are represented with long beards, mustachios, and long curled hair. The dresses of all except one are apparently robes of state. They cover the whole body and hang over the leg, excepting that of Stephen, whose tunic reaches no lower than the middle of his thigh. William I. holds a sword in his right hand and a sceptre in his left; William Rufus holds a sword in his right hand, and Henry I. has a sceptre in the same position. The robes of the two latter statues are richly ornamented with embroidered work, &c. Each of the remaining statues has some slight variation in costume and in appendages. Above the screen, and occupying the site of the ancient rood is the organ, which was most untastefully placed here in the latter part of the 17th century, having been previously removed to a less obtrusive situation by the order of King Charles I. The architecture of that portion of the church which is eastward of the transept is more ornamental in its character than that of the nave, although the general style of the decoration is similar; the variations in the design show a more regular but at the same time a more tame and formal style of ornament than the earlier work of the nave. In lieu of the graceful stall work of the nave, the dados are panelled with upright compartments; the jambs of the windows, however, have handsome niches and canopies. The same simple stone-roof, which covers the aisles of the nave, is used in this place. The introduction of the smaller transept does not break the continuity of the great arcade, but the only part in which it enters into the design is at the clerestory, the window with its gallery being omitted, and a panelled breast-work placed on the cornice over the point of the arch, thus allowing of a view of the lofty window and handsome groined ceiling of this singular appendage to be obtained from the choir. The shields of arms in this part of the church are as follows:—South side, cross of St George, Edward the Confessor; Edwin and Oswald, Saxon kings; Mortimer, Ulphus, Percy; the same quartering Lucy, Scrope, Skirlaw, Roos, Neville, earls of Westmoreland; city of York, Montague, earls of Salisbury; Beauchamp, earls of Warwick, Lucy, royal arms of England anterior to Henry V.; north side, Vavasour, Neville, earls of Westmoreland, Danby or Fitzhugh, St William, badges of the see, St Wilfred, emblems of the passion, Greystock, Latimer, Clifford, earls of Cumberland, Bohun, earls of Hereford, royal arms of England, a prince of Wales, Longespee, earls of Salisbury. South small transept, Dacre, Beauchamp, Percy, and Vavasour. North small transept, Clifford, Latimer, Danby, Pollington, Neville, and Scrope. The fittings up of this part of the cathedral are of the most magnificent description. To the extent of three arches on each side it is occupied by 27 stalls of oak, and at the west end, under the organ, are 12. The dean occupies the first on the right, the precentor the first on the left. Each stall has a splendid hexagonal canopy of a spiral form in two stories, each of which is richly carved with arches and canopies. The upper story consists of a union of three niches, each having its independent canopy, and the whole being crowned with a lofty crocketed pinnacle, terminated with a rich finial. The seats or misericords are curiously carved. The desks below the stalls, for the singing clerks and choristers, are panelled in unison with the upper works. At the upper end of the southern range of stalls is the archbishop's throne. Opposite to it is the pulpit, which is also modern, and resembles the throne. In the middle of the choir is a reading desk, and on the north side a brass eagle on a pedestal. The two succeeding arches to the altar screen are to about half the height of the pillars with stone work, finished with a cornice enriched with trefoils placed on the points of reversed arches. A triple flight of three steps leads to the altar, which is enclosed in an iron railing. The screen, which forms the division from the chapel in the rear, is of stone, and is one of the most beautiful specimens of pierced stonework in England. The space behind the altar screen, and occupying the remainder of the church, is usually styled the Lady chapel; it is bounded by the magnificent eastern window. This elaborate design is strengthened internally by a series of munnions, placed at a short distance from, and exactly agreeing with those which contain the glazing; this is peculiar to the present church. Upon the second transom runs a gallery, fronted by a parapet, pierced with upright cinquefoil divisions, and from which an excellent view of the church may be obtained. The dados of this window, as well as of those at the extremities of the aisles, are richly panelled, and the jambs ornamented with niches. Below the central window is the ancient altar-screen, composed of three semi-hexagonal canopies, in breadth occupying a space rather greater than the three middlemost divisions of the window, and the canopies ranging with the sill.

"Attached to the northern transept of the cathedral is the chapter house, an octagonal building, with a conical roof, the interior of which consists of one apartment of great magnificence. It is 63 feet in diameter and 67 feet 10 inches in height, the arched roof being supported without pillars. Around are arranged the stalls, forty-four in number, formed of the finest marble, and having their canopies sustained by slender columns. A window occupies each of the eight sides, except that in which is the entry from the transept.

"York Minster contains a good many tombs, some of them of considerable beauty; but these we cannot here attempt to describe. Among the curiosities preserved in the vestry we can notice only the ancient chair, said to have been used at the coronation of some of the Saxon kings, and on which the archbishop is still on certain occasions accustomed to seat himself; and the famous horn of Ulphus, one of the most curious relics of Saxon antiquity which have been preserved to our times. A learned dissertation respecting this horn, by Mr Samuel Gale, may be found in the first volume of the 'Archæologia.' It was presented to the cathedral by Ulphus, a lord of Deira, whose drinking horn it probably had been, along with, and in testimony and confirmation of, a grant of certain lands, still said to be in possession of the chapter, and known by the name of the Terra Ulphi. They lie a short distance to the east of the city. The horn, which is in perfect preservation, is of ivory, and among other sculpture on the outside, is ornamented with figures of two griffins, a lion, a unicorn, and some dogs and trees cut in bas-relief. Mr Gale is of opinion that it was probably presented by Ulphus soon after the death of King Canute, which took place, A.D. 1036. The horn was carried away at the time of the Reformation; but long after fell into the hands of the celebrated Thomas, Lord Fairfax, by whose son, Henry, it was restored to the cathedral in 1675.

"York Minster, it will be recollected, was very nearly destroyed on the 2d of February, 1829, by the act of an insane individual, Jonathan Martin, who, having concealed himself in the choir after service the preceding evening, contrived to kindle a fire in that part of the building, which was not discovered till seven o'clock in the morning. By this time the woodwork of the choir was every where in a blaze; but by great exertions, and especially by sawing through the beams of the roof, and allowing it to fall upon the flames below, the conflagration was in a few hours subdued. The damage done consisted in the entire destruction of the stalls of the choir, and of the 222 feet of roof by which that part of the building was covered. The organ over the screen was also destroyed, but the screen itself escaped uninjured. A public subscription was immediately commenced for the repair of a loss which was justly considered a national one, and the sum of £50,000 was collected within two months. The task of effecting the restoration was committed to Mr Smirke; and the work was admirably completed in the spring of the year 1833. The scrupulous care with which the restoration has been accomplished, so as to preserve every detail of the building, is highly creditable to the architect and his employers. The roof has been executed in teak, and the carved work of the choir is oak. With the exception that the choir looks cleaner and fresher than formerly, a person unacquainted with its destruction would be unable to perceive any change. The organ, one of the finest in Europe, was destroyed; and another is being erected in its place. Even in an unfinished state this appears to be a grand instrument; and well calculated for those fine choral services, which are heard with more effect in York Minster than in any other cathedral."

The elegant churches in the city of York are much too numerous to permit of a minute description in this place. They are, for the most part, in the later style of English architecture, with occasional intermixture of the Norman and early English.

Schools.—Here are numerous well supported schools. Among these may be named two free grammar schools, founded in 1330 and 1546; a blue coat, a grey coat, several infant, charity, and girls' schools; also some on the Lancasterian system, and others, both week-day and Sunday, in connexion with the different congregations. Here is an establishment called Manchester college, connected with the Independents, chiefly designed for the education of young men for the ministry.

Charities.—The county hospital was founded in 1740, and is liberally supported. Here are dispensaries, a well conducted lunatic asylum, and various societies for the relief of the poor particularly in sickness. The hospitals are,—Agar's, for six widows, each of whom receives £2 16s. 8d. per annum;—St Catherine's, for four widows, each receiving £18 per annum;—Colton's, for eight aged women, each receiving £5 per annum;—Ingram's, for ten aged women and a chaplain, each with a stipend of £5;—Mason's, for six widows, receiving £3 10s. per annum;—Wandesford's, or the Old Maid's, for ten maiden gentlewomen and a reader, each receiving £16 17s. 4d. per annum;—St Thomas', for twelve aged widows, each receiving £6 per annum, and many others of similar nature with various endowments. Here is a well supported hospital for the county; also a lunatic asylum. Among benevolent societies may be noted the Benevolent Society for the relief of strangers; the Charitable Society for the relief of the city poor; the Lying-in and Clothing Societies.

Antiquities.—In the ward of Walmgate are remains of several monastic establishments. Leland mentions that the Augustine friars had a monastery between the tower on "Ouse ripe and Ouse bridge;" and Drake concludes it to have been situated within the present friar walls. He, however, unconsciously clears this subject by the following remark:—"In one of the testamentary burials of Mr Torre, Joan Trollop, anno 1441, leaves her body to be buried in the conventual church of the friars Eremita of St Augustine in York. The term of Eremites to this order is what I have not before met with; the friars minors were styled Eremitæ, i. e. Eremiticæ. The Eremites, or hermits in the north, were corruptly called Cremitts; and there is an annual rent paid out of some houses in Stonegate, called Cremitt money, at this day, which undoubtedly belonged to a religious house of these orders; for some of the poorer sort of monks being called hermits, an hermitage and an hospital had one and the same signification." However, it is quite clear there were two distinct monastic establishments on this side of the river. The house of the friars of the order of St Augustine is said, by Leland, to be situated on the bank of the Ouse, near Ouse-bridge. It was established as early as 1278, and is said to have been founded by Lord Scrope. It was surrendered, November, 1539, by the prior, nine friars, and four novices, and was subsequently granted, (fifth of Philip and Mary,) to Thomas Rawson. The house of the Grey or Franciscan friars was situated near the castle. It was founded in the time of Henry III., as it is said, by the king and the city of York. Henry Lacy, earl of Lincoln, was a great benefactor. William Vavasour, S. T. P., last warden, with 15 friars, and 5 novices, surrendered this house in the 30th of Henry VIII., and in the 34th year of that king the site was granted to Leonard Beckwith. In front of the walls are the evident remains of a staith, originally belonging to the monastery, and which, in some degree, confirms the remark, that "all the religious houses that laid towards the river, had each a quay or landing place of their own on it." But the ground on which the monastery itself stood, is now chiefly converted into gardens. The castle has already been described. In Stainbow lane, Monk ward, was situated the monastery of the Friars Carmelites, which was of such extent as to occupy nearly all the ground from Whipmawhockmagate to the river Foss. Mr Drake, in his Eboracum, has the following account of this once powerful monastic establishment. "Here stood formerly the house or convent belonging to the Friars Carmelites, or Fratres de Monte Carmeli, in York, who had a chapel or church dedicated to the honour of our lady St Mary. The religious order of the Friars Carmelites was one of the four orders of mendicants, or begging friars; taking both its name and origin from Carmel, a mountain in Syria, formerly inhabited by the prophets Elijah and Eliaha, and by the children of the prophets. From them this order profess to derive their origin in an uninterrupted succession; but the method in which they attempt to prove their antiquity is too ridiculous to be rehearsed. Some amongst them pretend they are nephews to Jesus Christ. Others go farther, and make Pythagoras a Carmelite, and the ancient Druids regular branches of their order. The site of their monastery in York is particularly expressed in a charter of confirmation, granted to them by King Edward I., in the 28th year of his reign, or anno 1300, dated at York. It appears here, by inseximus, that William de Vesey gave them the first piece of ground to build on, and bestowed upon them all his land, messuages, and tenements, that he had in a street, or lane, called le Stainbogh, extending in length and breadth towards the water of Foss, to the south; and from a street or lane called le Mersk, towards the king's street, called Fossegate, to the west. In the reign of Richard II., Henry de Percy, lord of Spofford, had leave of the king to grant to these friars a piece of ground to the west, contiguous to their house, 60 feet long, and 60 broad, for the enlargement of their monastery. This piece of ground, but of somewhat larger extent, viz. 100 feet long, and 100 broad, was granted to them afterwards by John Berden and John Braythwait, to the same use as the former. Confirmed by King Richard II. at York, in the 16th year of his reign, or anno 1393." On November 27th, in the 30th of Henry VIII., or anno 1539, this house of the friars Carmelites in York was surrendered into the king's hands by the prior, S. Clarkson, nine brothers, and three novices; and in the 35th of the same king the site was granted to one Ambrose Beckwith. Part of the site of this ancient religious house, not many years ago, was occupied as a garden, and, in that state, was purchased by Mr Rusby, who, about 20 years ago, erected several buildings there. In digging up an old foundation about that time, his workmen came to an ancient arch, in which were two distinct and separate parts of a tombstone; and in another place they found a flag gravestone, with the representation of a crozier at each corner.

The former he carefully joined, and placed as a flag in front of his house. The middle of it is curiously carved, and near the edge is the following inscription:—"Orate pro domino Simone de Wytringham, sacerdote quondam vicario Sancti Martini Magni London. civis anime propicietur Deus." The most perfect specimens of Norman architecture, now visible in York, are the cloisters of the hospitals of St Leonard and St Peter in Finklestreet, Bootham ward, now occupied as wine-vaults. At the village of Clementhorpe, in the liberties of York, are traces of the nunnery of St Clement. The nuns were of the Benedictine order, and in the reign of Henry the First, 1145, Thurstan, archbishop of York, granted "to God, St Clement, and to the nuns there serving God, in pure and perpetual alms, the place wherein this monastery, with other buildings of the said nuns, was erected, together with two carucates of land in the suburbs of York, 20s. annual rent, issuing out of his fair in York, &c. which was confirmed by the dean and chapter." Nicholas, son of Adam Poteman, of Clementhorpe, also granted, in 1284, to Agnes, prioress of St Clement's, and to the nuns there, two messuages, in Clementhorpe, with a toft and a croft, and half an acre of land. These and several other grants to the nuns, were confirmed by Edward the Third at York, in the first year of his reign. It is remarkable, that though Archbishop Thurstan was so friendly to this nunnery, Geoffrey Plantagenet, who several years afterwards succeeded to the see of York, gave this religious house, contrary to the wishes of the nuns, to the abbey of Godestow, in 1192; and Alicia, then prioress, refusing to obey the order, went to Rome to appeal to the pope, notwithstanding which, the honest archbishop, heedless of the appeal, ungallantly excommunicated the whole sisterhood. Isabel Ward, the last prioress, surrendered the nunnery to Henry VIII., and had a pension allowed her of £6 13s. 4d. per annum. The church, however, continued parochial till 1585, when along with the parish of Middlethorpe, a neighbouring village, it was united to St Mary's, Bishophill the Elder. A small part of the ruins of this building yet remain, and above a pointed doorway is a shield bearing the cross of St George. Near Castlegate-bridge is a field called Stone Wall close, in which anciently stood a religious house, called St Andrew's priory. It was founded in 1202, by Hugh Murdac; who granted "to God and to the twelve canons of the order Sempringham, or St Gilbert, serving God, at St Andrew's, in Fishergate, Ebor., the church of the same place, with lands adjacent." This priory had also several other lands, rents, &c., granted to it at various times; but was surrendered the 28th of November, 1538, by the prior and three monks, at which time its annual income, according to Dugdale, was £47 14s. 3d., but Speed states it at £57 5s. 9d. Leland also mentions the priory of St Andrew, and says it stood exactly opposite to the nunnery of St Clement; and hence a tradition long existed amongst the ignorant and superstitious, that there was a subterraneous passage from one to the other, although the river Ouse runs between them. No remains of the priory are now to be seen, not even so much as to mark the site of the ancient building. The site was granted in the 37th year of the reign of Henry VIII. to John Bellow, and John Broxholme. The last ecclesiastical building worthy of notice is the abbey of St Mary. Its foundation is involved in considerable obscurity. Stephen, the first abbot, gives a detail, of which the following is an outline. He states that in 1078 he became a monk of Whitby, under Remfried, that William de Percy, a Norman baron, by whom the fraternity there had been at first patronized, finally drove them away by force, that they fled to Leasingham, from which place also they were driven by the same powerful interest with the king; that in this afflicting state their condition was commiserated by Alan, earl of Bretagne, who gave them a church near the city of York, dedicated to St Olave, with four acres of land adjoining, to build offices upon. And, having obtained a license from the king, he persuaded the monks to leave Leasingham and make this the seat of their abbey. Thomas, archbishop of York, in a suit against Earl Alan, claimed the four acres of land above-mentioned; whereupon King William I. to compose the difference, promised the archbishop other lands in lieu of them, and so the business ceased for a time. In 1088 King William II. coming to York, and visiting the new monastery, found it too straitened and narrow for the reception of the convent; he accordingly projected a larger, and, with his own hand, laid the foundation stone of another church. An ancient parchment, formerly preserved in what was called St Mary's tower, dates the foundation in 1089, when the dedication of the church was changed from St Olave to St Mary. In King William the Second's charter, various lands are enumerated, which had been bestowed upon the abbey by the Conqueror. A place called Galmon, probably the Galmanho, already noticed from Hoveden, is twice mentioned in the charter. Earl Alan gave the monks a borough without the walls of York called Earleborough; and also that its privileges might be increased, surrendered the advowson of the abbey to the king. Thomas, archbishop of York, subsequent to the increased endowment of the monastery, renewed his suit for the four acres of land. Stephen, the abbot, thereupon consulted the king; who, in a council held at Gloucester, granted to the archbishop, on condition that he waived his suit, the church of St Stephen in York, by way of exchange; besides which, Abbot Stephenson himself, that he might be perfectly reconciled to the archbishop, added, of his own free will, to the revenues of the see, one carucate of land in Clifton and another in Heslington. The immunities and privileges granted to this monastery by William Rufus, and his successors, kings of England, were very great. The early patronage of royalty rapidly increased this foundation in importance, and it soon had the following six cells or smaller religious houses attached to it, viz.: St Bees, or St Bega, and also Wetherall, in Cumberland—St Martin's, at Richmond—Romburch, in Cambridgeshire—Sandtoft and Hemes, in Lincolnshire, and St Mary Magdalene, near the city of Lincoln. This religious fraternity were black monks of the order of St Benedict, and had a psalter compiled particularly for their own devotion; but the archbishop of York, for the time being, had power once a year to visit them, for the purpose of correcting or reforming, by the council of the brethren, and by five or six of his principal canons, any abuses that might be introduced. The abbot of St Mary's was, however, little inferior to the archbishop of the province; being mitred, and having a seat in parliament, which entitled him to the dignified appellation of my lord. He, and the superior of Selby, were the only two abbots in the north of England, who were thus honoured. His retinue was sumptuous, whenever he travelled abroad; and he possessed many splendid country houses, the principal of which were at Deighton and Overton. This prelate had also a spacious park at Benningbrough, which was always well stocked with game. Considerable animosity long existed between the citizens and the monks, relative to their jurisdictions and privileges; acts of violence ensued, and by the annals of the convent, we are informed that in 1262, the citizens slew several of their men, and burned a number of their houses out of Bootham bar. A reconciliation was not effected till Simon the abbot paid £100, as a peace offering to the enraged party; but even then, he was so much alarmed by the outrage, that he absented himself from the convent more than a year. Defence and caution were now deemed requisite, and the abbot solicited the king to allow him to build a wall on each unprotected side of the abbey. The request was granted, and hence arose the high wall adjoining to Bootham and Marygate, the principal part of which yet remains. It was constructed as a complete fortification, with battlements, and a wooden gallery within, also with towers at certain distances. At the dissolution, this monastery was retained by the crown, its revenues then amounting to £2,085 1s. 5d. When Henry VIII. obtained possession of the abbey, it was dismantled, and he ordered a palace to be built out of the ruins, changing the name to the King's Manor, in order, say the historians of the city, "that the very name and memory of the abbey might be lost for ever." As that monarch, for the purpose of keeping the northern counties quiet, had established a council at York, the manor was appropriated for the residence of the lords president. King Henry visited York in 1541, and remained there twelve days, residing, most probably, at the manor. King James I. on his journey to London to take possession of the crown, after the death of Elizabeth, arrived at York on the 16th of April, 1603, resided at the manor, and was entertained with great splendour by the lord-mayor and corporation. His majesty was so well pleased with the honours paid him, that at a public dinner given him by the lord-mayor and citizens, he expressed himself much in favour of the city, seemed concerned that their river was in so bad a condition, and said it should be made more navigable, and he himself would come and be a burgess amongst them. He also ordered the manor house to be repaired, and converted it into a royal palace, intending to use it as such upon his journeys to and from Scotland; and there are many testimonials of the prince's design, in arms and other decorations about the several portals of the building: it was still, however, appropriated as the residence of the lords presidents of the north, as long as that office continued. The lords of the council met his majesty at York, and the state and dignity which he here took upon him, formed quite a contrast to the comparatively rude habits of the Scottish kings. His majesty visited York again in 1617, when the manor palace became the scene of regal pomp and court festivities. Charles I. first visited York in 1633, upon a peaceable progress to Scotland; and previous to the breaking out of the war between him and his parliament, that unfortunate prince summoned a great council of the peers to be held in this city, and he subsequently, in the latter end of the year 1641, took up his residence at the manor palace. Here he was attended by upwards of forty peers of the first rank; and the county levied a corps of 600 men, who acted as his body guard. His court, which was very splendid, was not, however, constantly held at the manor, but, for a part of the time, at Sir Arthur Ingram's, in the minister yard. The earl of Strafford, as lord-president of the north, also resided in the manor palace. During the civil war the manor was materially damaged. On the 14th of June, 1644, the earl of Manchester's forces having undermined St Mary's tower, Colonel Crayford, a Scotchman, sprung the mine, which took effect, and the tower was demolished, and a great many persons buried in the ruins. After this he made a breach in the wall, lower down in Marygate, which being practicable, was entered by the rebels, who scaled several other walls, and took possession of the manor. It happened to be Trinity Sunday, and most of the royalist commanders were at the cathedral; the republicans, however, who served in the parliament army, thought this a good opportunity for making the attack, deeming that the Lord's day was the best time for doing what they denominated the Lord's work. Their triumph, however, did not, on this occasion, last long. The explosion of the mine alarmed the royal officers, who rushed to their posts, and a party of the garrison having got out by a private Sallyport in the city walls, entered the manor, and cut off the only way the enemy had to retreat. A smart encounter took place on the bowling-green, but the rebels having 50 of their number killed, the rest—about 250—threw down their arms and submitted. Oliver Cromwell only visited York once on his way to Scotland, and it does not appear whether or not he was at the manor. In the reign of James II., a large room in the palace was fitted up, and used as a popish chapel, where mass was celebrated openly; but it was not long before the enraged populace dismantled it, and this consecrated room was some years after converted into an assembly-room, and used for the public balls, &c. till the present splendid suite of rooms were erected. After the revolution, Robert Waller, Esq., who was lord-mayor of the city, and one of its representatives in parliament, obtained a lease of the abbey or manor from the crown, for 31 years. At its expiration another lease was obtained by Tancered Robinson, Esq. second son of Sir William Robinson, Bart., and the ancestor of the Grantham family, in whose hands it still remains. A part of the palace is occupied as a school by Mrs Roddam; and Dr Camidge lives in the house formed out of another part of the once regal dwelling. An old archway, once the entrance to St Mary's abbey, from Bootham, opens into a court-yard, to the right of which is a stone-wall, probably built prior to the abdication of James II., and having in it recesses enriched with arabesque work, and apparently designed for images. A part of the palace, on one side of this wall, is occupied by a private family, but it does not present to the observer any characteristic of its former importance. The principal entrance to the other part of the building, however, is extremely interesting, displaying over the doorway the royal arms, supported by carved columns, bearing various devices, with the initials L R. near the bottom, and surmounted with a crown. A short passage leads into the inner court, now divided into two, and at this end of the passage the doorway is likewise ornamented with carved figures of justice and other emblematical devices. The first of the inner courts contains merely the modern entrances into the boarding school and an adjoining tenement, but in the second court are two ancient grand entrances into the palace. One of them, connected with the boarding-school, was formerly the entrance to the council chamber. Over the old doorway still remain the arms and the several quarterings of the unfortunate Thomas, earl of Strafford, finely carved in stone, and placed there when that nobleman resided at the manor, as lord-president of the north. One article of accusation against this earl, who was beheaded in the reign of Charles I. related to that coat of arms, stating, "he had the arrogance to put up his own arms in one of the king's palaces." This outer entrance seems to have opened into a large hall or vestibule, whence a second door led to a broad and handsome flight of stone steps, part of which yet remain. The staircase run up to the council-chamber, a spacious, lofty, and comfortable apartment, now occupied as a school-room for the young ladies, and admirably adapted to the purpose. The only entrance at present is from another part of the house, and there is no antique work in this room except round the door. An adjoining passage, however, exhibits a carved moulding on the wall near the ceiling, in which is represented a dancing bear and several other grotesque figures. To the doorway on the opposite side of the court-yard, the ascent is by a large flight of stone steps out of the court, and over the door are the royal arms in fine preservation, with the initials C. R. This door, which is now blocked up, opened into an apartment 27 yards long and nine broad, by some persons deemed the banqueting room, but where tradition states that several of the parliaments held at York were assembled. In the centre of the room is a large ventilator; and formerly there was a communication between this apartment and the council chamber, by a long gallery, now occupied as workshops by Mr Wolstenholme, carver and gilder. Beneath the reputed banqueting-room seems to have been a spacious kitchen, as an immense fire-place and chimney yet remain.

History.—The length to which this article has already extended forbids the introduction of a history of the city, of a length at all adequate to the importance of the subject. In the time of the Roman dominion York was an important station, and the chief residence of the princes who ruled over the conquered country. In the year 70, the city was first made the capital of the province called Maxima Caesariensis; but it is scarcely mentioned in history from this period till the year 307, when Severus and his sons, Geta and Caracalla, took possession of York, and overran the country, at that time in a state of revolt. In 212, Severus died here, and Caracalla, after the murder of his brother Geta, assumed the reins of government, and returned to Rome. In 287, during the reign of Dioclesian, Carausius, a general who had been sent with a fleet to guard the Belgic coast, passed into Britain, and got himself proclaimed emperor at York, but was slain in 293 by Allectus, who succeeded him in his usurped authority. The province was restored to its allegiance a few years after by Constantius Chlorus, who slew Allectus, and resided for some time at York, where he married Helena, a British princess, by whom he had his son Constantine the Great, said to have been born at York in 272. Constantius died here in 307, and immediately afterwards the purple was forced upon Constantine. Under the heptarchy, York became the capital of the kingdom of Northumbria, and afterwards of that of Deira; and it was long the 'Athens' of the north, the seat of what little learning existed in those dark and barbarous ages. The letters of Alcuin, the celebrated friend of Charlemagne, frequently refer to the libraries and learning of York, in the highest terms of praise. After the conquest, the cruel conduct of Copai, created earl of Northumbria by the Conqueror, excited a rebellion, in which he was slain. The approach of the king, with a powerful army, caused the insurgents to lay down their arms. Soon after, however, the citizens joined the Scots and Danes in opposition to the Conqueror, who besieged them, and, after a gallant defence of six months, obliged them to surrender. The surrender was partly brought about by famine, and partly by the favourable terms offered by the Conqueror, who, however, afterwards entirely disregarded them, put the English and Scottish garrisons to the sword, and rased the city to the ground.—The city, which was formerly so great as to be called a second Rome, from the extent of ground which it occupied, and the magnificence of its buildings, never entirely recovered this shock. In the year 1137 it had partially risen from its ashes, but was then destroyed by a fire, which burnt down the cathedral, the abbey of St Mary, and forty parish churches, besides many streets and public buildings. In the next year it was besieged by the Scots under David, who were driven away by an army raised by the exertions of the archbishop and the nobility of the county, and signally defeated in the battle of the Standard, near Northallerton. The first meeting, known by the name of a parliament, was held here in 1160 by Henry II. In the beginning of the reign of Richard I. an extensive massacre of Jews took place here, the details of which are of the most shocking character. It is supposed that not less than from 1500 to 2000 Jews fell on that occasion. These enormities were partially punished by heavy fines; but the difficulty of ascertaining with certainty the real offenders, appears to have stayed the hand of justice. In 1251, Alexander, king of Scotland, was married here to the daughter of Henry III. After the elevation of Bolingbroke to the throne, under the title of Henry IV., the citizens of York, and Scrope the archbishop, took an active part in the resistance offered to the new monarch, and raised an army of 20,000 men, who dispersed, however, without striking a blow, the archbishop having been cajoled into an apparently amicable adjustment of the matter, by the treacherous earl of Westmoreland. In the civil wars between Henry VI. and Edward IV., the city of York suffered severely from various causes. A patent, dated at York, June 10th, 1464, expresses Edward's great concern for the sufferings and hardships the city had undergone during the wars, and for the poverty they had occasioned; in consideration of which he not only relinquished his usual demands upon the city, but assigned it, for the twelve succeeding years, an annual rent of £40 to be paid out of his customs in the port of Hull. In 1603 York was visited by James I., an interesting account of which event may be found in the continuation of Stowe's Annals, by Mr Edward Howes. The plague, which the preceding year had carried off 90,578 persons in London, raged to such an alarming extent at York in 1604, that the markets within the city were prohibited, to prevent the contagion from spreading into the country; and stone crosses were erected in various places in the vicinity, where the country people met the citizens and sold them their commodities. Several of these crosses are yet remaining. The lord-president's courts adjourned to Ripon and Durham; and many of the citizens left their houses; the infected were sent to Hob-moor, and Horse-fair, where booths were erected for them of boards, and the minster and minster-yard were closely shut up. Not less than 3,512 inhabitants of York fell victims to the pestilence, though it was of but short duration. During the parliamentary war the city was held by the royalists till July, 1644, when it fell into the hands of the parliamentary army under Sir Thomas Fairfax. After the Restoration, Charles II. was proclaimed here amid great rejoicings. During the period preceding the Revolution in 1688, this city was noted for its opposition to the king; and on one occasion it severely suffered for the spirit of its inhabitants. James II. in the very year of the revolution, took away the charter from the city, and the office of mayor was declared vacant. But immediately after the revolution, the charter was restored, and the offices in the city were re-established. The city of York has given title to many noblemen, especially to sons of sovereigns. The last who held the title of duke was Prince Frederick, second son of George III., by whose death, in 1827, the title became extinct. Among the distinguished individuals who were born here, may be mentioned Henry Swinburne, a learned lawyer; Thomas Gent, a printer, topographer, and antiquarian; and John Flaxman, the celebrated sculptor. In concluding this article, it is proper to mention that we have been indebted for the greater part of the materials for articles Yorkshire and York, to the excellent history of the county of York, of Mr Thomas Allen. London, 1828. A part of the description of York minster is from the pen of a contributor to the Penny Magazine.
